So we immediately have the difficulty that even by basic botanical definition, there are four similar plants, three of which are cereals and one of which is not. When we consider the structure of those plants, the position to anyone other than a farmer or acknowledged botanist becomes even more confusing because all four plants are annuals, all four can grow to about 100 cm high and all four have culms—for the benefit of non-botanists I should explain that the culm is the overall structure of the seed of the plant which can be tufted or solitary, erect or bent and can contain three to five nodes.

I trust that my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle appreciates that a non-botanist, walking along a path which has been encroached on by something which even to a non-botanist is recognised as a member of the oat family, whether wild or cultivated, will have some difficulty knowing whether an offence has been committed and, if it has, to whom to complain. If the encroachment is by cereal oats, my hon. Friend may say that it will be obvious because the rambler might see the cereal oats stretching for some distance, but where a field has been left to pasture and it has been seeded——

Mr. Leigh: I appreciate that my hon. Friend is making a serious point and, while I cannot claim to be a botanist, I intervene because I think that I have the answer to his question. The Lords amendment would make the provision read:

"For the purposes of the application of sub-section (1) above in the case of a particular crop, the crop shall be treated as grass if, and only if . . . it is a variety commonly used for pasture, silage or haymaking, and . . . it is not a cereal crop."

In other words, the oats about which my hon. Friend is speaking must meet those two tests. But the problem he raises would be addressed not simply by that provision, for they might not meet those tests. The difficulty would be addressed by the point I made in my initial remarks, when I explained that when the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food did its reasearch, it found that although it may have been true that oats were once widely grown for silage, that practice is currently restricted to a few hundred acres in the far western islands of Scotland, and the Bill will apply only to England and Wales. So my hon. Friend's point about oats, although well made, should not be a problem in England and Wales, where the Bill will apply.

Mr. Stern: I take my hon. Friend's point, but I fear that he has not taken mine. I accept that when it comes to enforcing the legislation, as a result of the expert advice which my hon. Friend just cited, the enforcement authority may be clear that we are dealing with encroachment by a grass, the common wild oat, or by a crop—any of the other versions of avena to which I referred.

The trouble is that by the time we have reached that stage we shall be several steps down the road. We do not have, as a result of the Lords amendment, a list of the different botanical varieties of oat available to the Countryside Commission and the highways authority so that, on receipt of a complaint from, say, myself as a rambler, the highways authority will immediately be able to say that it is a particular type——

Mr. Leigh: I interrupt my hon. Friend again because I think I can help him overcome that problem. The officers of the Countryside Commission are listening to the debate. They are drawing up a code of practice which will be sent to every farmer in the country. Would it help my hon. Friend if I said that after the Bill becomes an Act we can do some work on the subject and make sure that clear guidance is given to farmers so that the problem is addressed?

Mr. Stern: My hon. Friend is going a long way towards meeting my objection, but if such guidance is to be drawn up, it should be made more widely available than just to farmers. As I told my hon. Friend on a previous occasion, difficulties have occurred not with the vast majority of farmers but with the few who are prepared to see highways, bridleways and paths misused and who in the past have not shown themselves to be particularly concerned with infringements of highways and byways. If such guidance is drawn up, it should be made available not only to every farmer but to the Ramblers Association for dissemination among its branches, to local botanical societies for dissemination among their members and to all organisations through which users of the countryside might have access to the information. By disseminating the information to farmers my hon. Friend is going some way to meeting the problem, but he should go further.

Mr. Leigh: I cannot give an undertaking on behalf of the Countryside Commission, but I undertake to convey my hon. Friend's fears to that body. I agree that if this important measure is to work, the widest possible dissemination of the points in question should be made to all interested organisations. So I give my hon. Friend the undertaking he seeks.

Mr. Stern: I am grateful to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Soames: I support the view of my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern), and I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) will honour the undertaking that he has given. But in view of the extreme lack of credibility in the Countryside Commission among those who have knowledge of, or dealings with, the countryside, may I ask my hon. Friend to agree to discuss with my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle the issue of what is the right body to produce the material for dissemination? By that means we shall ensure that its presentation is entirely honourable and factual.

Mr. Stern: I should be only too happy to accede to that request and to become involved in discussions of that nature with my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle. Given the good will that exists generally for the Bill among hon. Members in all parts of the House, I hope that such discussions could involve not just me but, for example, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish, with his well-known concern for the ramblers' organisations, and other hon. Members who have expressed interest in the subject.

At present, there is a general understanding of what the Bill means by a "cereal", at least among farmers and their organisations. However, we are dealing with one of the fastest-changing sectors of agronomy in this country and in the western world. Therefore, I hope that in making the arrangements to provide regular information to farmers and other organisations about the definition of a cereal as it now appears in the Bill, the Countryside Commission and other organisations will undertake regularly to review the nature of their advice so that all new varieties of cereal are compared with similar grasses and there is no possibility of the position being changed by legislation or litigation in four or five years' time. By that time, as I am sure farmers present will agree, there may be an entirely different major cereal crop in this country.

Mr. Soames: My hon. Friend will recall that, during his excellent speech, my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) mentioned set-aside policies. I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) is pursuing an important point because the imperative of the set-aside policy may lead to the sort of circumstances that he mentioned. That makes it even more pressing for my hon. Friend the Minister to state at length how the Government intend to frame the legislation.

Mr. Stern: I entirely accept my hon. Friend's point.

I accept the spirit of the amendment, but I remain concerned about the availability of information to enable the amendment to be enforced. I readily accept the undertaking of my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) to involve non-farming organisations as widely as possible in the drawing up of the definitions and their dissemination to make the clause enforceable.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I wish to make two or three points, and to raise a possible inconsistency, a possible difficulty and a matter brought to my attention by a group of constituents. I am a great supporter of the Bill and spoke in support of it on Second Reading. The Bill states that crops should not encroach on a highway to reduce its apparent width, which means that tall crops such as rape should be cut back by farmers should they grow over the right of way. That does not apply to grass, but, as we heard earlier, cereals are grasses and the amendment is designed to deal with that.

There is an inconsistency, because cereals will have to be cut back to provide a clear right of way, but not grass. A crop of grass such as cocksfoot has a growing habit similar to that of wheat or barley. It grows to much the same height and tends to hang over more than wheat and barley, yet the cereals will have to be cut back, but the cocksfoot will not.

I raise the second difficulty not to be nit-picking, but because it seems best to raise such points and receive an answer to them in this place. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) said, if, growing among a field of cocksfoot there are wild oats, are they defined as grass or cereal? I do not know. If the wild oats among the cocksfoot overhang the path, are they to be treated as grass or cereal?

My final point was raised with me by a group of constituents who enjoy walking in the country.

11.45 am

Mr. Leigh: We know that my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) has professional expertise in this matter, and he makes a fair point. However, the basis of the Bill is compromise. It was agreed that the Bill would not apply to grasses used for silage or hay making. If we were to try to address the problem as my hon. Friend seeks, the agreement on which the Bill is based —we all know that private Bills go through with agreement—would have fallen down. My hon. Friend was making a fair point, but I hope that he will accept that we had to make a rough compromise, which is what we have done.

Mr. Summerson: I appreciate the work that my hon.Friend has done on the Bill, and I realise that it involves a delicate compromise between various groups of interests. In the light of what he has said, I am satisfied on that point.

A group of my constituents have raised an unusual point. They told me that, when they go for walks in the country, they actually enjoy finding difficulties and obstructions on the paths. They say that when they go for walks around the constituency and in towns and cities, everything is even and easily laid out for them, so they simply walk along the pavements, which is no challenge to them. When they get into the country, they enjoy it if they have some difficulty in getting from A to B, and have to clamber over a tree trunk that has fallen over the path. They say that they carry wire cutters and if they come to a strand of barbed wire they take the greatest pleasure in snipping it so that when they get home they feel that they have accomplished something. Therefore, it seems that the Bill, although welcome——

Mr. Leigh: I refer my hon. Friend to column 1181 of Hansard, 23 February 1990 where, on Second Reading I referred to the very point he makes and mentioned the 1988 Countryside Commission survey, carried out by 1,000 volunteers. I said:

"They discovered that on a typical two-mile walk along the 140,000 mile footpath network there was a two in three chance of meeting an obstacle . . . Impenetrable vegetation or hedges or fences across a footpath can be dealt with by existing legislation. The most important problem, which occurs repeatedly in the surveys, is the ploughing up and cropping of footpaths."—[Official Report, 23 February 1990; Vol. 47, c. 1181.]

They found that, contrary to what my hon. Friend says about some people liking to wade through knee or waist-high cereals, most people do not like doing so. The problem addressed by the Bill is the single greatest disincentive to the enjoyment of the 17 million people who wish to walk in the countryside every year.

Mr. Summerson: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I have raised with him the point that my constituents asked me to, he has given me an answer that I will happily relay to them. I am sure that what he says is right and the vast majority of people would much rather not meet with obstacles. I thank him for the fair-minded way in which he has answered my point.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory): Rights of way are notoriously complex and arouse strong emotions and argument. Even the botany underlying some of the issues is far from straightforward, as we have heard this morning. It is to the credit of my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) that he has threaded his way through the complexities and produced legislation that commands almost universal assent.

More than 40 amendments were accepted in Committee. They were mostly technical amendments, clarifying the Bill's intention. Taken together, they demonstrate the almost overriding importance of ensuring that the Bill is practical, workable and immediately understandable. It was because the Highways Act 1980 was widely misunderstood, and landowners, local authorities and path users had difficulty in interpreting some of its provisions, that the need for this legislation became so apparent.

The failure to restore paths properly is probably the major cause of dispute and misunderstanding between landowners and path users. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) that a walk in the countryside should be something of an adventure, and perhaps our paths and rights of way should not always be clinical and straightforward. But I think that all hon. Members agree that blocked paths that are impossible to traverse are against everyone's interests. Not everyone is as athletic as my hon. Friend. We want the countryside to be enjoyed by all people, old or young, athletic or less so.

It is right that the Bill should not merely clarify the law but ensure that our marvellous network of footpaths—about 140,000 miles of them are kept open and, as far as possible, free of obstruction.

We have been lucky that the Bill received such detailed and expert scrutiny in another place. I pay tribute to the work of Lord Kimball, and perhaps it is also appropriate to remind the House of the important role played by the rights of way review committee, chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst).

The Bill recognises that pasture land already provides a suitable surface for walking and riding. One of the pleasures of the countryside is walking through crops of grass—it is one of the reasons why people go into the country—but walking through cereal crops is a different matter. Riders' and walkers' confidence is diminished if they are faced with a field of oats or barley across which there is no visible path. That is why the Bill requires that such a path be kept clear of crops other than grass, and provides a definition of grass.

The Bill was drawn up as widely as possible to cover grass mixtures of a type commonly grown for pasture, silage or hay-making. Certainly, to the layman's eyes, that definition excludes cereals, which are not commonly grown as silage. My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) who as always, has done his homework, mentioned the possibility of different species of barley causing problems. I draw his attention to the fact that oats are not merely botanically, but are commonly considered to be, cereals and would therefore have to be removed under the provisions of the Bill. He also mentioned wild oats, which are not botanically classified as cereals. Page 5 of the Bill makes it clear that grass will be permitted on the footpath only if it is commonly used for pasture, silage or hay-making. Wild oats, which are chiefly a weed, would not fall into that definition, and would therefore require to be removed under the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Stern: I am not sure that my hon. Friend understands the point that I was trying to make. I agree that wild oats are not classified as a cereal, and so I assume that, under the Bill, they will be treated not as a cereal but as a weed. My point was that, botanically, wild oats are so similar to oats treated as cereals that problems of description and identification could readily arise unless clear guidance were given to as many countryside users as possible.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Whether wild oats are classified as a cereal or as a weed is not important in practical terms, because under both definitions they will require removal.

My hon. Friends the Members for Bristol, North-West and for Gainsborough and Horncastle raised the question of guidance to educate the public about their rights under the Bill. I draw hon. Members' attention to the rights of way review committee's intention to draw up detailed notes for guidance, which will perhaps—it is up to the committee—go into the matters raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West. It is intended that those notes for guidance will be distributed to every farmer and local authority in England and Wales, and possibly more widely, through groups such as the Ramblers Association which are anxious to improve access to the countryside.

The explanatory and educative function of the rights of way review committee will help to remove any lingering uncertainties or scope for misinterpretations, as well as ensuring that the Bill is a success in practice as well as in theory.

The Bill represents a hard won and possibly unique consensus between users and landowners. Some disbelief was expressed in another place that the National Farmers Union had agreed to a rights of way Bill, but I confirm that it has done so, and that it has been extremely supportive throughout the passage of the legislation. Along with the

[Mr. Heathcoat-Amory]

Ramblers Association, the British Horse Society, local authority associations and many other groups, the NFU hopes that the Bill will help to remove the uncertainties and misunderstandings that have bedevilled the issue in the past.

Mr. Soames: I must mention a serious matter which relates to the amendment and to the legislation which will flow from it. Does my hon. Friend agree that it is not surprising that the NFU should wish to co-operate because no one, least of all farmers, seeks to deny the public access to land? But access must be responsible access. What worry the farming and countryside communities are the dreadful abuses heaped upon the countryside by those who use it.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I agree with my hon. Friend that rights carry obligations. I hope that the public will use the right of way network for recreation, but will understand that their rights carry duties and obligations to respect the countryside, to shut gates after them, not to throw litter down or to leave waste materials littering the countryside. I also agree with the idea behind my hon. Friend's intervention—that the rights of way network provides a marvellous means of reconciling potentially conflicting pressures. Of course there are difficulties—the public may interfere with farm practices—but the rights of way network provides a means of avoiding such conflicts.

Mr. Soames: Does my hon. Friend agree that in such cases, when farmers and other landowners are able to get together with people who wish to use the countryside for recreation, they may be able to work out extensions to the footpath network which will be of great advantage to both sides?

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My hon. Friend is clearly acquainted with the system whereby permissive rights of way can be negotiated or granted by landowners, in addition to the traditional rights of way network. That is an encouraging way forward. I urge landowners and farmers to work where possible with local authorities and access organisations so that, where appropriate, they can extend the marvellous rights-of-way network which we already enjoy. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle on piloting his Bill thus far. It is now at the last hurdle. It is called the Rights of Way Bill but I anticipate that the legislation will be known as the Leigh Act.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I shall be brief because the House wishes to attend to other important business. The Bill is as important as the Protection of Badger Setts Bill which we hope to reach later. The Opposition are as anxious as the Countryside Commission, the working party and the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) to see the Bill on the statute book. However, we regret that the Government have not come forward with comprehensive proposals of the type that were set out in the last Conservative party manifesto. It was made clear in our debate on Wednesday that although such legislation might be near it is still some way off. We need far-reaching and comprehensive legislation on the countryside which will incorporate the Bill and other measures about access.

The interests of path users are not always as well represented in the other place as they could be. The Second Reading debate showed that the Opposition were worried that the views of the land owning lobby and its nervousness about public rights of way were again about to make their influence felt. That view was expressed by the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames).

I hope that the Bill will overcome its last hurdle. The strong support for the Bill from the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association and ramblers has no doubt helped its progress. I pay tribute not only to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle but to my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) who played a large part in helping the Bill over its many hurdles. Even though the Bill has only two helpful amendments its progress thus far is a significant achievement.

The hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle fully explained why it is important for the section of the Bill that deals with crops to be as clear as possible. I hope that subsequent discussions will clarify that matter and that the regulations and code of conduct will make such clarification widely available. Neither the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle nor the Minister mentioned the importance of the role of local authorities, in enforcing the new law. The Government must make sure that authorities have the modest resources that are needed to do that. This week discussions took place with the Secretary of State for the Environment about the standard spending assessments and the poll tax. Those matters will place intolerable burdens upon local authorities and we doubt whether the resources that they need will be available.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady knows that such matters do not arise from the Lords amendments.

Ms. Walley: Careful consideration of the Lords amendments shows that local authorities will have to make sure that the excellent measures in the amendments will work. However, those authorities have had curbs placed on their finances. Many make a valiant effort to enforce the law, but their achievements will be limited.

In areas where land-owning and farming interests dominate, local authorities could find a ready excuse for doing nothing and we want to avoid that. Walkers, riders and the voluntary groups to which they belong have an important role to play in encouraging farmers to comply with the new law as a matter of course. We are confident that the Ramblers Association and other such organisations will play that role.

New section 137A of the 1980 Act is one of the sections under which a prosecution can be brought by an individual or group or local authority. That is of great importance to such bodies, not only because of its provisions about crops but because it gives them the power to enforce the provisions and that is crucial. The clarification that is made by the two amendments and the closure of a potential loophole will be as welcome and useful to path users as to local authorities and farmers. For that additional reason, we welcome the amendments and hope that the final hurdle can now be overcome.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 2

REGULATIONS

Lords amendment No. 1, in page 2, line 11, at end insert—

"(1A) Before making any regulations under this section the Secretary of State shall consult such representative organisations as he thinks fit."

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

I thank Lady Masham of Ilton for the eloquent way in which she steered the Bill through the other place. Lady Masham lost her ability to walk in a point-to-point accident 30 years ago and since then she has been confined to a wheelchair. She breeds beautiful highland ponies and runs a fine riding establishment. No one could be better equipped to understand the need for a Bill to protect the heads of young riders, too many of whom have been killed or maimed in appalling accidents. People of all ages have suffered from such accidents, but it is the young whom the Bill seeks to protect.

The three amendments introduced on my behalf by Lady Masham were accepted and do much to improve the Bill. The first amendment requires the Secretary of State for Transport to consult widely before making regulations to enforce the wearing of hard hats. Hon. Members will recall that my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) moved a similar amendment on Report on 27 April. My hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic and I assured him at that time that there was every intention to consult widely and that no such amendment was necessary. However, on reflection the Department of Transport felt that the amendment was necessary to ensure the commitment in the Bill and that the wording as printed was the most desirable.

It is more than possible that the Sikh community will want to be consulted about protective headgear for young Sikhs when riding. I do not have expert knowledge, but I accept that it is likely, indeed almost certain, that Sikh headgear is as strong as anything that we can provide. That is shown by the fact that such headgear is accepted as legitimate on building sites.

The Pony Club would naturally expect to be consulted as the organisation which represents children who ride and those who do not. I know that the Pony Club has great expertise and exercises care to ensure that children who ride are properly protected and ride in as safe a manner as can be achieved in a sport which is accepted by those of us who ride as the most dangerous in the world. It is certainly the most exhilarating and the most marvellous sport in the world. The Pony Club will have proposals to put forward, as I am sure will the British Horse Society which strongly supports the Bill. I am an elected member of the council of that society and for a long time worked with the society on the preparation of the Bill.

I was first elected to the council of the British Horse Society in 1973 on the nomination of the late Dorian Williams, who was a marvellous man, and Field Marshall Lord Gerald Templar, a great man who cleared Malaya of

[Mr. Harry Greenway]

Communists at a time of great difficulties. I sat on the council of the British Horse Society and have been regularly re-elected ever since. The last time that I was re-elected was a few days ago. [HON. MEMBERS: "hear hear".] I am grateful to my hon. Friends.

The British Standards Institution would also be an obvious body to consult. I hope that it will not too regularly introduce new standards. The British Standards Institution has achieved a good safety helmet for children in British Standard 4472 and a good riding hat 6473. I hope that those pieces of protective headgear if properly worn and done up in the correct manner will be satisfactory.

Every time that a parent, a child or anyone buys a new piece of headgear for riding, protective or otherwise, it is an expensive operation. It would not be right constantly to put individuals and parents to that expense. We always want the safest possible protective headgear for children and others but people should not be forced to buy new headgear too often.

It would be right for the Department of Transport to consult maintained schools and schools for disabled children where riding is on the curriculum. That is worth thinking about. I founded in 1964 an organisation called the London schools curriculum riding scheme, which enabled children in ordinary maintained schools and special schools for the disabled to ride. Every kind of disabled child, including autistic, delicate, physically disabled and mentally disabled children can ride into my scheme. Such children often have virtually nothing else in their lives and obtain such pleasure and joy from their riding that we should do nothing to make it more difficult for them to have that splendid games option.

My scheme applied to schools in inner London only. It was financed by the former London county council and the Inner London education authority—to their great credit in each case. The riding and any headgear had to be paid for out of public funds. Headgear had to be in accordance with British Standards Institution recommendations so that children were as protected as possible. I would expect the Department of Transport to consult maintained and independent schools, and certainly special schools.

There may be doubt in some hon. Members' minds about my scheme, under which hundreds of thousands of children in the city of London learned to ride. Many such children lived in high-rise flats where they had no other access to animals. They were not even allowed to keep mice, dogs or cats. The London borough of Lewisham, which has taken over control of education in the borough, confirmed this week that riding will continue at Sedgehill school where I was deputy headmaster for seven years and which I ran for a period. It is a large school of 2,000 pupils. The decision to allow riding to continue is most enlightened. The borough will also ensure that riding continues in special schools where it is already provided. It would be well to consult such boroughs. Westminster city council is making favourable noises about continuing my scheme, so there is every reason to consult schools which provide riding, including special schools.

There is no doubt that the widest possible consultation will be undertaken by the Department of Transport before the Bill is enacted, I hope, in the autumn. Consultation is a prerequisite to the enforcement of the Bill. I commend the amendment to the House.

12.15 pm

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): When my hon. Friend first introduced his Bill I was not happy with the form that it took. However, he has made all sorts of alterations and it is now in a far more acceptable form. I wish him well with it.

The Bill will make it an offence for an adult capable of stopping a child from doing so, causing or permitting that child to ride a horse without wearing protective headgear. I am sure that "adult", "capable" and "stopping" have all been defined, but if I, for example, saw a child without protective headgear on a horse, could it be said that I was capable of stopping that child riding?

We are dealing with children riding horses. I know that "horses" has been defined. I hope that it will not be taken as read that children will be allowed to ride foals, even with protective headgear. That would not be kind to the foal. After all, children vary in size, height and weight. It would be a shame to allow any child to ride a foal.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I can advise my hon. Friend that that important point will be covered on the second amendment. There was a long and good debate in another place on permitting a child to ride without wearing protective headgear. The adult who owns the horse or is in charge of the horse is required to use best endeavours to see that the child wears protective headgear on the road.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Perhaps I could make it clear, in case there is any misunderstanding, that, unlike in earlier debates on other Bills, we are required to take the three amendments separately. There will be separate debates.

Mr. Summerson: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I was about to say that I would not be capable of stopping a child on a horse because I am allergic to horses I can not go within half a mile of one without sneezing, so that might preclude me.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for answering that point. That was all I wanted to raise.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): The amendment is important. When the Bill was first introduced it was not intended that formal consultation should go ahead. Everyone assumed that those affected would be consulted. It was wise of my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) to accept the advice of my hon. Friend the Minister that consultation should be formalised.

I wish to make a few remarks about the nature of headgear which should be put firmly at the top of the agenda for consultation. I am the sponsor of another private Member's Bill that deals with safety—the Safety in Children's Playgrounds Bill. One of our problems is that it is not always entirely clear to local authorities which equipment is safe and which is not. They are not accustomed to the relevant British standards.

In pursuing the logic that I am seeking to set out and advance in my own Bill, I have sought to draw on my experience in buying car seats for my children. I have no knowledge of the construction of child seats and do not know what is safe and what is not. I recognise, however, that if something complies with a standard of the British Standards Institution and carries the BSI's kite mark I can have confidence in the construction of the seat.

There is some confusion about what is safe headgear and what is not. British standard 6473 of 1984 relates to protective hats for horse and pony riders. Its predecessor was British standard 3686. The hats that come within the terms of that standard can still be worn, depending on their age and condition. There is also British standard 4472 of 1969, which relates to protective skull caps for jockeys. British standard 6863 sets out specifications for cycle helmets. Some parents will be confused and will not know whether they have to buy two different sorts of hat. Those who represent their views will want to be consulted. Users will want to know whether they must buy different types of hat. I am certain that all responsible parents would want to buy the right sort of hat for a child who engages in horse riding. They will want to know that the hat that they are buying is safe. It is easy to buy something in the belief that it is safe only to learn later that it is not. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to give some assurances about safety and consultation.

Mr. Harry Greenway: My hon. Friend is making an interesting contribution to the debate. It would be desirable, if it could be achieved, to have protective headgear for children that could be used for riding horses and ponies and for cycling. I think that jockeys' helmets that come within British standard 4472 would be safe for cyclists. I am not so sure that current cyclists' helmets would be safe for horse riders. I shall listen with interest to the response of my hon. Friend the Minister.

Mr. Hughes: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his intervention. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will use the opportunity that will be provided by consultation to put some pressure upon the British Standards Institution. In a market where sales will be relatively few and in which the profit for the institution in undertaking testing will be relatively small, there may be a reluctance to help companies move towards a position where they can use the kite mark. As I have said, I believe that the kite mark is essential in giving guidance to parents who are purchasing headgear for their children. It is vital that pressure is put on the institution. I hope that we shall have easily understood markings of the kite mark sort to guide parents.

It is important that we consult religious groups that may wish to have exemptions introduced. The Government have an excellent record of helping Sikhs to be exempt from certain requirements when their religion does not allow them to take the same safety measures as others. There was an enormous row over some years about motor cycle helmets and Sikhs. In the end, the Government wisely agreed that Sikhs would not be obliged to comply with that requirement.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): Is my hon. Friend aware that the Government's decision to give way on that issue was admired and agreed with by very many people? Does my hon. Friend agree that Sikhs had a fearsome and immensely courageous reputation during the second world war? They never went into battle with any form of head gear apart from their turbans and——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is difficult to see any connection between the hon. Gentleman's intervention and the Lords amendment.

Mr. Hughes: I shall respond to only part of my hon. Friend's intervention. He has made the valid point that the campaign which the Sikhs mounted and their bravery shows that they put their religion much higher than their personal safety.

The Government have acted once again on behalf of Sikh believers in respect of regulations for the wearing of hard hats on building sites. In the past few months they have changed the regulations while being mindful of the spin-off from that decision in terms of safety and insurance. Again, the Government acted extremely courageously and wisely in helping Sikhs, many of whom work on building sites, to be exempt from the regulations. I attended an enormous meeting in a temple at Southall and it was clear that those present were extremely grateful to the Government for what they had done.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), who is my parliamentary neighbour, may be able to tell us how popular horse riding is among Sikh children. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): It is clear that the hon. Gentleman was not listening when the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) introduced the amendment. He referred to Sikh children riding horses, Sikh headgear on building sites and Sikh headgear generally for horse riding. It seems that the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) is deliberately wasting the time of the House on a day when there are many other important Bills to consider. The hon. Member for Ealing, North has more than adequately dealt with the issue which he has raised.

Mr. Hughes: I have a long record of speaking on these issues. I was one of those who led the campaign to persuade the Government to exempt Sikhs from wearing hard hats on building sites. I do not remember the hon. Gentleman ever saying anything about that subject. I do not know whether he has any Sikh believers in his constituency. I have a right to talk about these matters and to amplify the important issues about which my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North spoke.

Consultation is important and it will be regarded as especially important by Sikhs who are constituents of my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North and myself. I believe that a compromise can be arrived at that will not offend their religion or frustrate our important aim of seeking to protect children.

This is an important amendment to an important Bill. We must get things right. It is important that within the consultative framework it should be understood that we have the protection of our children in mind. That consideration must be put above all else. In doing so, we shall be doing an enormous amount within a relatively select area to improve the safety of our children. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North on the amendment.

12.30 pm

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): I rise to speak briefly in support of this eminently sensible amendment. I am concerned that the House spends so much time nannying people. The Bill is an example of nannyism gone mad. More people have accidents because of slipping in the bath than falling off horses. Do we propose to introduce a Bill at some stage to advocate that people should wear helmets when they take a bath? Slipping in a hard iron bath and cracking one's head is a very dangerous thing to do—surely the state should take a line on that. In doing so, why not consult the representatives of all the organisations involved in the bathing business or those who take baths? I can think of an endless series of people to consult—we might even set up some little quangos for consultations and to investigate the accident levels.

I feel strongly that, before bringing forward this type of legislation, we should stop and think about the basic tenets of this Conservative Government which, historically, are different from those of other Conservative or Socialist Administrations because we eschew the nonsense of the nanny state and regulation for the sake of regulation.

I frequently visit Portugal on holiday where workmen work on scaffolding without wearing helmets. To the best of my knowledge, the accident rate there for serious head injuries is not any worse than that in this country. When we get round to trying to dictate to parents what their children should wear when they go for a trot on their ponies——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope that the hon. Lady is reading the same amendment that I am reading, which refers to the need to consult representative organisations before the making of regulations. The hon. Lady is a long way from that.

Mrs. Gorman: I believe that I am getting to the point which, in my view, is that the only representatives who should be consulted on such an issue are the parents of the children who will go horse riding. It is time that we left such decisions to the family concerned when it decides whether their children should take a ride on a horse.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I hope that my hon. Friend will concede that I am as firm a defender of freedom as she is. However, we are talking about a Bill which would apply only to under-14-year-olds. I hope that my hon. Friend will acknowledge that we have changed the provisions from applying to people of all ages. If my hon. Friend had seen the many children I have seen who have been maimed for life, shattered or even killed by falling from a horse on to a road and the distress that that has caused, I am sure that she would accept that the Bill is reasonable. In any case, 80 per cent. of children under 14 already wear protective headgear.

Mrs. Gorman: I thank my hon. Friend for that information. I am pleased to learn that most parents with children who go horse riding have apparently made that decision for themselves. I am concerned that we are seeking to make an offence of something that should be the choice of the individual concerned. A basic principle is at stake——

Mr. Robert G. Hughes rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The debate is now far wider than the scope of the amendments. I hope that we can return to amendment No. 1, which refers to the need to consult representative organisations prior to the Secretary of State making regulations. I have heard little about that so far from the hon. Lady.

Mrs. Gorman: Thank you for drawing my attention to that point, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

My point is that the only people concerned with making such a decision should be the families of the children who will go out on a horse. Other organisations, including the medical profession, may have a variety of opinions, but that point is secondary to the basic issue which is that the state should leave people to make such decisions for themselves. We in the House of Commons should not be wasting all this time on such material.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Robert Atkins): I am delighted to be at the Dispatch Box for the second time this morning and, in doing so, to join my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) in recognising the importance of his Bill, and of the Lords amendments. If I may—[Interruption.] I am delighted that the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) has rejoined us. I know that he believes this issue to be as important as do my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North and others.

I should like to explain in a little more detail what the consultation will cover since I have been asked so to do. The regulations will cover any exemptions from the requirement to wear protective headgear on religious grounds or for medical reasons or in particular circumstances. I shall be consulting both religious groups, especially the Sikhs who have already been mentioned, and medical organisations. I shall also be consulting the Child Accident Prevention Trust and the Masters of Foxhounds Associations, plus various horse organisations, such as the British Horse Society which, as my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North has said, have been following the passage of the Bill with interest—[Interruption.] I should be grateful if my hon. Friends could pay a little attention.

The regulations will also contain the required standard or standards of the hat to be worn and the manner in which it should be worn. At present there are two types of suitable protective hats conforming to British standard 6473: 1984 "Protective Hats for Horse and Pony Riders", the predecessor of which, BS 3686 is still worn and will be considered depending on age and condition, and BS 4472, which relates to protective skull caps for jockeys. These hats are already compulsory for jockeys under Jockey Club rules at its race meetings and at competitions and events organised by the Pony Club.

I shall have to decide whether any other hats are as safe as these, such as the pedal cycle helmet, BS 6863. The reason I would wish to consult on whether to include cycle helmets is that they appear to provide the same amount of protection, if not more than—for the side of the head, for example—as horse rider helmets. We are trying to encourage more children to wear cycle helmets. It would be unreasonable to expect parents to buy both a riding and a cycle helmet for their child if one hat would provide sufficient protection for both.

When the amendment was introduced in the other place Lord Monson said that it implied that consultation would be only with organisations, not individuals. I assure any hon. Members with similar fears that the consultation process will be the standard one, whereby a press release is made by the Department of Transport. Any member of the public will be able to telephone the Department and obtain a copy of the consultation document. Their ideas will be given all consideration.

I shall also consult individual doctors who have experience of dealing with head injuries arising from riding accidents. Lord Monson was also concerned that a publicity campaign would be needed. He suggested that, arguably, a publicity campaign would have been better than the Bill. The publicity that will surround the consultation period will be just part of the publicity; there will be additional publicity when the regulations are made. Part of the campaign will be to encourage those over 14 to wear protective headgear, and not just on the road. Part of the campaign will be to encourage pedal cyclists to wear protective helmets.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): The initial controversy that surrounded the Bill, because it applied to adults as well as to young people, has given my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) the publicity that he sought. I, too, am a member of the British Horse Society. I shall welcome the opportunity to discuss with interested parties, particularly the armed forces and those who enjoy riding and hacking, how important it is that the legislation should apply to young people rather than to adults. My hon. Friend will be the first to appreciate that there is a royal component to the consultations. Certain notables have avoided wearing protective headgear. That might have caused some difficulty. However, because of the way that the Bill is now drafted—on the principle that the way that the twig bends the tree will grow—I join in contratulating my hon. Friend on the way that he has carried out his consultations and on the fact that the Bill is now in a form that is truly acceptable to all.

Mr. Atkins: I am delighted, as ever, that my hon. Friend is pleased by what I have said.

I said earlier that I wanted to spare parents the double expense of buying a riding hat and a cycle helmet if one would so the same job. Some hon. Members may know that the use of cycle helmets is limited and therefore might think that it is unnecessary and a waste of time to worry about whether one helmet be substituted for the other. However, I shall be launching a campaign next spring to make all parents fully aware of the benefits of cycle helmets. That matter will be raised then.

I find it extraordinary to see some cycle racing competitors riding without helmets and some wearing helmets which appear not to conform to any recognised approved safety standard. The message to young cyclists is very poor and may explain why they are often reluctant to wear helmets which they think might make them look foolish. However, as my right hon. and noble Friend, Viscount Davidson said in the debate on the Second Reading of the Bill in another place, it is paradoxical that we can bring forward a measure such as this only when there is already general acceptance of its great benefits.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): My hon. Friend suggests that at the end of the consultation period cycle helmets might be thought to be suitable and could be used to meet the objectives of the Bill. However, he also said that cycle helmets do not conform to the necessary safety standards. Does not that undermine my hon. Friend's Bill? The Minister suggests that he wants to save parents the expense of two helmets if their child is both a cycle rider and a horse rider, but, as he has just said that he is not satisfied about the safety standards of some cycle helmets, how does he reconcile those apparently different objectives?

Mr. Atkins: As ever, I enjoy my hon. Friend's interventions as he poses questions and then answers them. None the less he makes a valid point. There is some interest and concern in the quality of cycle helmets and the need to ensure that children understand the importance of wearing them. We must be absolutely certain that they do the job for which they are required. As my hon. Friends the Members for Ealing, North and for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) have said, a helmet that did both jobs would make a great difference to some parents for whom the cost of two helmets might be unnecessary and difficult.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Let me take my hon. Friend back a couple of sentences to his remarks about racing cyclists. Surely my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) is wrong because with such examples being given to children, and without the wearing of helmets being compulsory, parents will spend whatever money is necessary to make sure that children have the helmets, but children will not wear them because they are not fashionable. I used to ride horses and when I was 16 and rode a motor scooter, it was fashionable to have a helmet but not to wear it. We want the children to wear the helmets.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. Will the Minister bear in mind that we are dealing with consultation with representative organisations? I am sure that he will bring his remarks within that context.

Mr. Atkins: Of course I shall do that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but obviously I shall try to answer the points that have been raised. As one who has a daughter who rides and a son who cycles, I understand the points that my hon. Friend has made. I shall endeavour to ensure that the consultation that I undertake will deal with all those matters. In the circumstances, I have dealt with those concerns as briefly as possible. I have deleted several comments that I had hoped to make to ensure that we make progress.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): I was engaged in some discussion with the promoter of the Bill at an early stage in its proceedings. I welcome the practical way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) has approached the Bill and congratulate him on a Bill that will do a great deal of good. I also welcome the consultation to which my hon. Friend the Minister referred.

Mr. Atkins: I am grateful for the acceptance and congratulations of my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash). I now hope that we can move on to the other amendments.

Question put and agreed to.

INTERPRETATION

Lords amendment: No. 2, in page 2, line 16, leave out from "includes" to end of line 17 and insert "pony, mule, donkey or other equine animal".

Mr. Harry Greenway: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

[Mr. Harry Greenway]

I know that other people want to get in, so I shall endeavour to present these points properly yet as quickly as possible.

The amendment was proposed in a spirit of compromise by Lady Masham on my behalf to give a clear definition of horse, and to include ponies and donkeys which are often ridden by children. Mules are not ridden as often as they were 100 years ago, but they might become fashionable again. The words, "other equine animal" include all the other animals which were in the original definition: mare, gelding, foal, colt, filly, stallion, ass and hinny.

I have been asked to mention three fairly unusual equines because, people being what the are, we may find children riding such equines on the road.

Some years ago I was riding a rig and was disturbed by its extraordinary behaviour.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Perhaps it would be helpful if my hon. Friend could say what a rig is.

12.45 pm

Mr. Greenway: The Oxford dictionary defines a rig as "an animal which has been imperfectly castrated (or spayed), or whose genital organs are not properly developed; especially a male animal (ram, bull or horse) with only one testicle". A rig can be exceedingly dangerous, in that it can have its mind on a mare on heat. If there is a rider in the saddle he may be put in great danger, such as I have experienced. I have been bucked higher in the air by a rig than by any other equine. No equine can stand as vertically as a rig can, and the rider is often in danger of falling over backwards with the rig on top of him.

Mr. Soames: My hon. Friend makes a good point about rigs. They can be dangerous. A year ago, my sister-in-law bought a children's pony which, she left in a field with a rig. When the pony was taken back to Norfolk, she discovered it to be in foal. That is how dangerous rigs are.

Mr. Greenway: I am sad to hear of my hon. Friend's experience. I hope that the foal was acceptable——

Mr. Soames: It is a sweetheart.

Mr. Greenway: At least that outcome was useful, but terrible things can happen.

In another place, there was much debate about zebras. As children may find zebras attractive and they are sometimes ridden, they should be dealt with, too. There are many things that not all hon. Members know about zebras. They are definitely members of the horse family, as are asses, so they are covered by the Bill. Biologically, a zebra is closer to a horse than is an ass; although it is difficult to break in and train them for riding, it has been done. I understand that in the 19th century a member of the House of Lords was in the habit of driving a four-in-hand in which the horses were replaced by zebras. Between the wars, some intrepid white settlers in the Happy valley of Kenya occasionally rode zebras. I do not know whether they stayed on for long—zebras do not like having riders on their backs.

Mr. Soames: I can confirm that. A distant cousin of mine, Jack Soames, used to ride zebras regularly in the Happy valley.

Although this discussion about zebras is important, I urge my hon. Friend, given his important position in the horse world—he does an enormous amount in the House in that connection—to counsel people strongly against riding them: they are extremely tricky and disagreeable animals. I was told by a white hunter in Kenya that in Africa more people are killed by zebras each year than are killed by lions.

Mr. Greenway: My hon. Friend has regaled the House with some fascinating and important information. Few people stay on a zebra, but I am not surprised that his uncle did so, given the wonderful stock from which my hon. Friend comes, nothing would surprise me. I am grateful for his important contribution.

Mrs. Gorman: Will my hon. Friend clarify that the Bill will affect camels, which are ridden by children at zoos? I understand, as we have strayed into the wilds of Africa, that wildebeest are sometimes mounted by British children in Happy valley, or anywhere else.

Mr. Greenway: Camels and wildebeest are not in the horse family; the Bill deals with equines. Some perverted people ride rams or tups and other animals they should not ride, but that is outside the scope of the Bill so I hope that my hon. Friend will forgive me for not dealing with it.

Zebras can be crossed with horses and asses and the resulting hybrids are easier to break in and train than zebras. That possibility is covered. Huxley, writing in 1862, said:

"It is a very rare thing to see a Hinny in this country"

However, I have occasionally seen one. Given how things have changed in the past 128 years, the conclusion must be that there are many more zebras in Britain than hinnies, so if such improbable and unlikely mounts as foals and hinnies are to be covered by the Bill, it is right that zebras should be.

It would be wicked if anyone rode a foal because it would damage the young equine and could have serious repercussions for the rider. The amendment will cover that possibility. The new definition is simpler but more comprehensive than the former one, and I commend it to the House.

Mr. Michael Brown: I am unhappy about the inclusion of the word "donkey" in the Lords amendment.

I have the honour and privilege to represent the seaside resort of Cleethorpes. For most hon. Members, the word "Cleethorpes" conjures up visions of seaside, donkey rides and the promenade. One of the greatest pleasures for young people of visiting Cleethorpes is the opportunity to enjoy the benefits of normal seaside pleasures. Donkey rides have been a traditional seaside pleasure at Cleethorpes and at other seaside resorts in the north, such as Skegness and Blackpool for a long time.

Mr. Harry Greenway: A donkey is not referred to as an equine, although it is within the equine family. Most often, donkeys are ridden on beaches, so there would be no danger in children riding them. I caution that donkeys are incredibly dangerous to ride and I have seen them unseat the best jockeys without difficulty.

Mr. Brown: I know quite a lot about the donkeys at Cleethorpes. Two years ago, the mayor of Cleethorpes, Mrs. Gladys Nuttall——

Mr. Atkins: The mare?

Mr. Brown: No, the mayor. Mrs. Nuttall had a distinguished career. She and her family ran the donkey rides at Cleethorpes for many years. She and I are worried that because the donkeys set off from the promenade they may be within the scope of the Bill. Horses that are owned by riding stables, ridden by children under 14 and which go on to a public highway, as well as donkeys that go on to promenades before they get to the beach, would fall within the scope of the Bill. It would therefore be necessary for Councillor Mrs. Nuttall and her family to provide children under 14 with hard hats.

Mr. Soames: My hon. Friend raises an important point about his constituency. I am familiar with the donkeys there. They are a fine breed.

My hon. Friend should not ignore the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway). Donkeys are absolute brutes. Some two years ago, I suffered a terrible fall from a donkey when riding in a donkey derby at a village fete. The donkey was completely unscathed but I was quite badly injured.

Mr. Brown: I am distressed to hear that, but my hon. Friend is overreacting slightly. I take the point that donkeys can be bad tempered. I know the donkeys at Cleethorpes better than anyone else, and have always found them more agreeable than the average donkey. The issue is the danger that donkeys pose to children under 14 and whether they should therefore come within the scope of the Bill.

Between February and June 1988—covering half the summer period—out of a sample of 500 horse-related accidents, five resulted from fall from a donkey, three of them involving children under 14 and one involving a three-year-old, who cut his head. We should set the danger posed by my hon. Friends the Members for Crawley (Mr. Soames) and for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) into perspective. If the Lords amendment is accepted, donkeys will be within the scope of the Bill, yet only three out of 500 horse-related accidents involved children under 14.

Seaside resorts, especially the traditional type, are going through a difficult time. Providers of donkey rides in constituencies such as mine do not have an easy time. They have to work hard over long hours, especially during the summer season, to make ends meet. If they have to provide hard hats for potential customers, charges may increase. In Cleethorpes, by necessity, a great deal of the seaside leisure activity, including donkey rides, must take place as much on the promenade as on the beach. There is pressure on seaside resorts not to allow animals to go on to the beach —some people complain that dogs and other animals put dirt on it. If pressure continues to remove animals from the sand, the promenade will be used more for donkey rides at seaside resorts. That will inevitably bring providers of donkey rides within the scope of the Bill. Let us remember that donkey rides are an inexpensive form of entertainment and leisure for the children of not-so-well-off families. I fear that charges for donkey rides would be bound to increase.

Mrs. Gorman: My hon. Friend is referring to the possibility that people hiring out donkeys will have to provide at the same time helmets for riders because of the small chance, less than 1 per cent., of an accident occurring. Has my hon. Friend considered the question of cross-infection as a result of helmets being passed from one wearer to another? There has been a great increase in the incidence of head lice infection in society, particularly in schools. Unless the helmets about which my hon. Friend is speaking can be sterilised between use, cross-infection could present a great danger.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind hon. Members that we are dealing with the definition of a horse.

Mr. Brown: I see the relevance of my hon. Friend's intervention, but I must abide by your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker. She is suggesting that if a donkey is defined as a horse, the donkeys of Cleethorpes will come within the scope of the Bill and the providers of donkey rides there, Councillor Mrs. Nuttall and her family, will have to go to the expense of providing a dozen or 20 helmets, which during the day will be passed from one child to another.

I will not detain the House longer. While I do not oppose the Lords amendment, I urge the Minister to appreciate the concern that has been expressed by the providers of donkey rides at seaside resorts such as Cleethorpes.

Mr. Atkins: We have had an important discussion—including a humorous discussion, as I would have expected from the interventions of my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames)—about the definition of a horse. Hon. Members have dealt with the issue in some detail and have been specific in their remarks.

The matter was referred to by Lord Stoddart in Committee in another place on 20 June, having also been mentioned by parliamentary counsel when the Bill was being redrafted in the spring. Hon. Members who attended the Committee on 4 April or who read the Official Report of those proceedings will recall that the definition was already in some difficulty at that stage.

The hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) moved an amendment to include rig in the definition. My hon. Friends the Members for Crawley and for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) defined a rig, but I have a further definition from the "Encyclopaedia of Flat Racing" by Howard Wright:

"a rig is a horse who has one testicle which has not descended into the scrotum: more rare is the example in which neither testicle has descended. The condition may be inherited and is likely to cause aggressive behaviour unless treated by castration."

That sums up the situation. Such an animal is an equine animal, and whether or not it was clear that it was covered in the former definition, it is certainly covered in the present one.

Of the 17 unsuccessful amendments that were tabled in another place, five were concerned with the definition of a horse or size of horse to be covered by the Bill. In Committee on 20 June, there were amendments to limit the scope of the Bill to horses over nine hands—in other words, to exclude Shetland ponies, foals, asses, mule and hinny. Lord Stoddart argued that a fall from a small animal would not be as dangerous as a fall from a large one. He also suggested that to ride a foal would damage the animal in a critical stage of its life.

Lord Monson moved an amendment on report to restrict the Bill to riding foals over five months. One reason for changing the definition was to remove the word "foal" from the face of the Bill without removing protection to children riding them.

[Mr. Atkins]

The definition of a foal is a loose one. The "Oxford English Dictionary" states that it is:

"the young of the equine genus of quadrupeds; properly one of the male sex, a colt; but also used where the sex is not specified, a colt or a filly."

Under the definition of "colt" it states:

"while the young of the horse is still with the dam it is usually called a foal."

No one wants to suggest that a child or anyone should be encouraged to ride such an animal. That is why it no longer appears on the face of the Bill. However, if a child were to ride such an animal it should be protected from injury and by the use of the words "or other equine animal" such protection is guaranteed. The phrase, "ass, mule or hinny" is now coverd by "mule" and "donkey".

My hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) referred to the problems of the Cleethorpes sands. Exemptions can probably be made for donkey rides and I shall endeavour to see during the consultation period whether that is necessary. That is an important point which I expected him to raise on behalf of his constituents.

Another reason for choosing that definition of horse was that it covered every member of the horse family, whether or not it had been thought of. Lady Nicol asked whether "jennet" was covered. It is a small Spanish horse and so is covered. She used the term as an alternative to "hinny", sometimes called a "jenny". All are covered. I am astonished that there are so many names for horses, not being a horse rider myself——

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): It is a Geordie expression.

Mr. Atkins: The hon. Gentleman tells me it is a Geordie expression. It is a delightful one.

The fifth amendment, in another place, to deal with the definition, had the most effect on changing the legislation, apart from the concern over foals. Lord Monson wanted to include zebras in the list. He admitted that it was difficult to break in and train zebras for riding, but he referred to a 19th century member of the other place who was in the habit of driving a four-in-hand in which zebras were substituted for horses. He also mentioned settlers in Happy valley in Kenya who occasionally rode zebras. I do not know which of the three species of zebra they were —Burchell's zebra or bonte quagga, Grevy's zebra or the Mountain zebra—but all three will now be covered in the unlikely event that they are ridden.

Lord Monson also mentioned that zebras can be crossed with horses and asses. I do not know what such crossbreeds are called, and I await the answer of my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley. It is a pity that he is not here. I do not know what sort of animals could be crossed thanks to the wonders of modern genetic engineering. However, if they are members of the family Equidae they will be covered by the Bill under the new amendment, and children under the age of 14 will not be allowed to ride them without the appropriate protective headgear correctly worn.

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): I am unhappy about the clause, but not the Bill, on which I congratulate the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) for getting it this far. I am certain that it will be passed, and it will have my vote.

The amendment is too narrow and relates to a world that has gone. I take up the Minister's point about genetic engineering. It would be a stronger amendment if "equine" was not included, and it simply read:

"leave out from 'includes' to end of line 17 and insert 'pony, mule, donkey or other animal'."

As the Minister said, new amimals are not being created. The range of members of the equine family referred to today, and the various crosses which can occur, are undoubtedly covered by the clause. However, during the past 10 years we have seen, at Cambridge university, the creation of a new animal, the geep—a cross between a sheep and goat. There has been the insertion of a rat gene into a mouse to create a supermouse of enormous size. My worry is that before the end of the Act's lifetime—I assume that it will be on the statute book for decades to come —we shall be living in a world where completely new forms of animal have been created. It would be much better if the amendment did not contain the word "equine" but allowed for developments that will take place arising from future genetic engineering so that any animal created in a laboratory that becomes part of circus or holiday entertainment would automatically be covered.

We are dealing with size. The problem arises when anybody falls from a great height.

One reason why we have evolved to an average height of about 5ft 10 in for a man and a couple of inches smaller for a woman, but have not evolved beyond that, is that if large numbers of people were 7 or 8 ft tall, falling over would carry a high risk of injury or death. Putting people of any age on the back of an animal immediately creates a similar problem.

I vote for the amendment with reluctance because it is flawed by being so restrictive. I hope that the Government will continue to consider the problem in case there is a tremendous increase in genetically engineered animals. Given the billions of pounds being invested in genetic engineering by multinational corporations, before the century is out we are likely to have peculiar new animals created specifically for profit. Clearly young children are likely to be drawn along to see interesting, exotic beasts.

Mrs. Gorman: Given the hon. Gentleman's knowledge of genetic engineering, does he know of any experiments to cross newts with frogs? We might get nogs or fewts.

Mr. Livingstone: I detect an element of humour in that intervention, but there is a giant salamander which is 6 ft long and if people were to ride it there would be a serious risk of injury if they fell off. The animal is very rare and is found only in the colder parts of China, Manchuria and Japan, and fortunately it would be far too expensive to ue it for rides. However, the gene which controls size in the giant salamander could be inserted into another animal —that is the world that we now live in.

The Government should keep the issue under the most vigorous scrutiny so that the intention of the Bill is not flouted by genetic engineers and crafty people who would no doubt earn vast sums of money if they got young children to ride on exotic new animals. It is not merely a case of existing species of cross-breed; genetic engineering would give us the opportunity to recreate extinct animals if their bones are preserved. For example, the quagga, a member of the equine family, could be recreated by inserting its genetic material into the ovum of a horse or zebra, and I am certain that something of the sort will happen in the next 10 years. The quagga would be covered by the Bill, but a completely new form of animal, which was not in the equine family, would not. I hope that the Government will keep the issue under consideration in the years to come.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendment: No. 3, in page 2, leave out lines 19 to 27 and insert—

""road" does not include a footpath or bridleway but, subject to that, has—

(a) in England and Wales the meaning given by section 192(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1988; and

(b) in Scotland the meaning given by section 151(1) of the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984.

(2) For the purposes of the definition of "road" in subsection (1) above—

(a) "footpath" means a way—

(i) over which the public have a right of way or, in Scotland, of passage on foot only; and

(ii) which is not associated with a carriageway; and

(b) "bridleway" means a way over which the public have the following, but no other, rights of way: a right of way on foot and a right of way on horseback or leading a horse, with or without a right to drive animals of any description along the way."

Mr. Harry Greenway: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

The amendment restricts the scope of the Bill to the road, excluding bridleways and footpaths. On Report on 27 April, my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) moved amendments which were intended to restrict the scope of the Bill in such a way. I agree that the worst injuries to a hatless child falling off a horse would occur on the road. Therefore it was important to make it crystal clear where the wearing of a hat was most important. I agreed to the amendments which were duly passed by the House then.

Unfortunately, my advisers in the Department of Transport realised that the wording was not ideal to achieve what the House had agreed upon. This amendment was drafted by Parliamentary Counsel to meet our desire and was duly passed in another place. It is intended to restrict the scope of the Bill to roads where there is a risk of collision between vehicles and horse riders. That is why bridleways and footpaths are excluded. However, it will be illegal for children to ride horses on the footpath alongside a road without protective headgear. I commend the Lords amendment to the House.

Mr. Atkins: I have been endeavouring to react to the will of the House by speaking briefly. This is a neat compromise, and who am I to argue with Parliamentary Counsel? I am delighted that the amendment has found acceptance in another place and I hope that it will find it here.

Question put and agreed to.

Sexual Offences Bill

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Question [11 May],—That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Question again proposed.

1.15 pm

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): The period since we last discussed the Bill has allowed some debate in the media, not all of which was useful or well informed. It has also allowed a considerable amount of correspondence which I and, I am sure, other hon. Members have received. I should like to tell the House about some of the objections and letters of support that I have received and draw attention to some press coverage.

I am sure that many hon. Members who wished initially to support the legislation might change their minds in the light of the information that has come to me. In the earlier debate, as we worked our way through the amendments, the Minister of State, Home Office, who I am glad to see in his place, made several offers in an attempt to win support for the legislation. Time and again he asked hon. Members for examples of where the existing legislation, which the Bill seeks to amend, has resulted in mistaken convictions.

As a result of the publicity arising from my intervention in the earlier debate, three men contacted me—one by phone and two by letter. They said that even under the existing legislation, which restricts the use of the word "persistent", they had been wrongly convicted. Some hon. Members may say that those men are clearly guilty and just protesting their innocence, and that we should not pay too much attention to them.

The people who wrote to me did so in interesting circumstances. The press coverage that followed our previous debate on the subject made it seem that the Bill was dead for ever and a day. Therefore, the people who wrote to me did so in the expectation that the Bill would not come back for further debate and that the matter was effectively closed. For that reason they were able to be particularly honest in writing letters of support or objecting to the action that I had taken. They assumed that what they said would not influence what would happen in future.

We should pay some attention to the proposals of the three men who contacted me. The existing legislation leads to wrongful convictions, which are extremely damaging to the reputations of the people concerned. As the Bill seeks to remove the word "persistent", which will lead to an increase in convictions—if we are to believe the speeches of the hon. Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton), who has put that forward as the reason for proceeding with the Bill—it follows that there will be an increase in the number of wrongful convictions.

I shall not give the names of the people concerned because if I did so reporters from The Sun and the Daily Express would be on their doorstep before the hour was out. However, I would be quite happy to give the letters to the hon. Member for Streatham or to pass them to the Home Office. I may do that in any case to find out whether these people have been wrongly convicted and whether the stain with which they live can be removed.

I do not want to detain the House for longer than necessary, and for that reason I shall deal with only one of the three people who contacted me. I have selected a letter at random. It states:

[Mr. Ken Livingstone]

"Dear Mr. Livingstone, Your speech during the debate on the report stage of the Sexual Offences Bill earned my full support and gratitude, in that I was recently the subject of a wholly unwarranted police prosecution for the offence of kerb-crawling. Without being cautioned, let alone arrested, I received a summons to appear in court to be bound over to keep the peace. My solicitor"—

I shall not give the name—

"then furnished evidence to the police, with the altogether legitimate reason for my being in that place at that time. The hearing has now been postponed till October. In my opinion, it should never have been instigated in the first place. The fact that it is possible to be stopped and arbitrarily summonsed without any kind of preamble seems like a flagrant violation of the individual's rights and to have really frightening implications. I much appreciated the stand you took against the Sexual Offences Bill. I intend to fight this already oppressive regime where it affects me directly, but if there is any way in which I can assist you in your parliamentary battle, I will be very pleased to make my contribution."

If that has already happened, the House should have cause for concern. Here we have a case where someone received a summons out of the blue. He was not stopped by the police or cautioned. He could not say there and then what he was doing in the area. I find that extremely disturbing.

We are all aware that it would be impossible to extend the Bill to Scotland. It would be completely out of line with Scottish law and legal precedent. That is true of almost every other western European nation which has a Bill of Rights or written constitution.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's desire to find a proper balance between the liberties of the innocent citizen and the need to protect women against harassment. But if he feels that the Bill is at fault on that count and criticises it, he should suggest what might be done to put the Bill right.

Mr. Livingstone: I am perfectly prepared to do that. I shall rearrange my notes and come to that point immediately, if it helps the hon. Member.

The House knows that I am not a lawyer. Often the law and the language of the law mean different things to lay persons and lawyers. Perhaps my argument will carry more weight if I draw the attention of the House to page 659 of the New Law Journal issued on Friday 11 May this year. It devoted an article to the legal consequences of the Bill. Interestingly, rather than saying what is wrong with the legislation, it takes up the point that the hon. Gentleman made. It points to where we could tackle the problem under the existing powers, if the Government have the political will to do so and if they make the resources available.

The article shows what lawyers think of the legislation and makes positive proposals for an immediate assault on the problem in the areas affected. It is headed "Guilty until proven innocent" and it says:

"Kerb-crawling legislation extends to men some of the biases the prostitution laws inflict on women. In the same way as police evidence alone is enough to convict women of loitering and soliciting, it is enough to convict men of kerb-crawling. The need for corroboration is purposely left out of the law on the grounds that witnesses would be reluctant to give evidence. Giving evidence is always hard, but it is crucial to establish the truth and protect the rights of defendants. The red-light residents in whose name loitering, soliciting and kerb-crawling legislation were introduced have never had to substantiate their allegations.

The prostitution laws create the much vilified red-light areas by making it almost impossible for prostitute women and clients to contact each other without breaking the law. Abolition of these laws would allow women to work from premises and advertise in contact magazines without being charged with brothel-keeping, thus undermining the need for red light areas."

That was the first positive proposal.

All the letters that I have received on the matter are from people who live in red-light areas. It is also noticeable that all the hon. Members who have been active in the debate and who have supported the hon. Member for Streatham represent areas or constituencies adjacent to areas where a red-light district makes life intolerable for residents.

The proposal in the New Law Journal is relevant and something which the Government could push through the legislative process with the overwhelming support of both sides of both Houses of Parliament. It would remove the prostitution laws. It would decriminalise prostitution so that women could work from home. There would be greater safety for the women and entire areas would not be blighted. The law would withdraw from an area which involves, as I suspect many police officers would say in private, victimless crime. When police resources are directed to victimless crime they are removed, of course, from crimes where there are victims.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): Would the hon. Gentleman be prepared to have a legalised brothel in his constituency? How would he propose to compensate house owners who happen to live next door to a woman who is operating as a professional prostitute?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): The Question before the House is whether the Bill should be given a Third Reading, and a Third Reading debate must relate to the contents of the Bill.

Mr. Livingstone: I am caught, Mr. Deputy Speaker, by the narrow remit of the debate. At the same time, Conservative Members want me to set out the options.

I have represented areas in which there have been red-light districts. Those areas would be affected and would come within the terms of the Bill. From 1977 to 1981 I was a member of the Greater London council. I represented Hackney, North and Stoke Newington, which had a red-light area round Finsbury park. It is the sort of area at which the Bill is aimed directly. I spent a considerable amount of time negotiating with local residents. At that time the idea of legislation to stop kerb crawling was seven or eight years away. It had not been thought of and consequently it was not being promoted. I had to respond to tremendous pressure from residents whose lives were intolerable. The most appallingly offensive comments were being made by kerb crawlers as they drove round the red light area of Finsbury park. Working under what was then a Conservative administration—I was an opposition member of the GLC under Sir Horace Cutler—we devised a road scheme which meant that someone required an honours degree from Oxford to be able to drive through the areas and find his way out. That provided some limited relief.

In proposing that the Bill should be enacted, the hon. Member for Streatham said that schemes of the sort to which I have just referred have not worked. He argued that they merely move the problem to another area. The hon. Gentleman is seeking a blanket power that could be used throughout the country and would enable the kerb crawler to be targeted. As I said, the people of Hackney, North and Stoke Newington have been subjected to incredibly offensive experiences by kerb crawlers. They feel that the House should find a way to end the problem.

It is argued in the New Law Journal—there is specific reference to the Bill—that we shall create a power so wide and so sweeping that far too many genuinely innocent people will be caught by the Bill if it is enacted. Innocent people will be destroyed by it. They will be unable to recover and to live a normal life. The article states:

"The Government has done the opposite"— that is to decriminalise prostitution—

"It is backing Sir William Shelton's Sexual Offences Bill now going through Parliament which seeks to tighten kerb-crawling legislation by further increasing police powers. The Bill proposes to remove from the 1985 Act the only legal constraint against false arrest: that kerb-crawling should be 'persistent or likely to cause annoyance or nuisance'."

That is the heart of the Bill.

The article continues:

"The case of the Guildford Four and of Hassan Khan (a black man whose conviction was quashed following the disbanding of the West Midlands Serious Crimes Squad) have shown the dangers of convictions that are based solely on the word of the police. They are also an indication that the police are more likely to use any new powers against black, Irish, immigrant and other working-class men they may want to charge for quite unconnected purposes.

In 1984, we initiated the Campaign Against Kerb Crawling Legislation—a coalition of anti-rape, black and civil rights organisations, AIDS prevention groups, lawyers, probation officers and Labour Party activists. We predicted that the Bill would become a new 'sus' law. In response, the House of Lords introduced the requirement of persistence which Shelton's Bill wants dropped. Its removal would mean that any street exchange between a woman and a man could be criminalised, especially, but not only, if the woman is a prostitute.

CAKCL argued that kerb-crawling legislation would add to prostitute and other women's vulnerability to violence by: forcing working women further underground; curtailing the time available for prostitute women to 'sus out' clients nervous about arrest before going with them; committing more police time and resources to prostitution rather than rape and other violent crimes."

That is a telling argument against the Bill from the legal community. Although the Bill is narrow and removes only one word from the existing 1985 legislation, its ramifications are wide.

The New Law Journal continues:

"Women in Bristol, Leicester, Manchester, Swindon, Walsall and the London red-light areas of Balham, Bayswater and King's Cross, have confirmed an increase in violence which the police have done little or nothing about. A typical example is that of a black woman who was almost strangled: when the police arrived they ignored the man sitting across the road and arrested her instead. In King's Cross, special police squads have arrested hundreds of women and men in a combined effort to 'clean up' the area, while failing to act to solve murders and rapes.

Women are also being forced to entrap clients. One woman who couldn't refuse outright to be used as bait for fear of arrest, spent all night waving clients on. Other women have been offered immunity if they 'gave the police two kerb-crawlers'."

That happens under the existing legislation. Removing the "persistence" requirement makes it all the more likely that such abuses, mistakes and genuine errors will worsen.

The New Law Journal continues:

"If the Government were really interested in women's safety, would it have opposed MP Harry Cohen's Bill . . . to make rape in marriage a crime? The 1986 Public Order Act gives the police wide powers to arrest anyone for 'threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour.'"

The hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) asked what I would do instead. I am talking about legislation that the Government can use immediately. Instead of passing this Bill, which would create further problems, it would be better if the Government intervened to ensure that the existing legislation—the Public Order Act 1986—was used to crack down on kerb crawling. I repeat the exact words,

"threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour."

Those provisions cover the points with which the hon. Member for Streatham is trying to deal. Any kerb crawler who approaches a woman on the street and makes offensive, disgraceful and disgusting suggestions is covered by the existing legislation.

I am prepared to give way to the Minister of State if he will intervene to say that, rather than wait for the outcome of this legislation, he will undertake today to send a letter to every chief constable in Britain, drawing their attention to the existing legislation, which gives them the power under the Public Order Act 1986 to arrest any man who approaches women and makes such suggestions, and to gain convictions in such a way that would mean that the evidence could be tested in court, that there would be a proper chance for defence, and that there would be much less risk of innocent people being entrapped.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): I sympathise with the hon. Gentleman and the promoter of the Bill. I take his point that people are arrested wrongfully. Before betting shops were legalised, that trade was plied on the streets and gave offence to passers-by. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the solution would be to legalise prostitution among adults so that it could take place indoors, away from the public gaze? Moreover, those who seek the services of prostitutes would not be at risk from prosecution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) must not widen the debate to that extent. I repeat that we are dealing with the Third Reading of the Bill. His remarks must be directed to its contents.

Mr. Livingstone: I completely agree with the hon. Lady. The House should pay attention to her. Before she became a Member of Parliament her career, like mine, was in local government. She lived close to an area where prostitution is persistent; therefore, she speaks with considerable authority. Since she became a Member of Parliament I have been surprised by the number of times that we have found ourselves in the same Lobby.

The Bill is unnecessary. I regret that the Minister has left the Chamber. I offered to give way to him so that he could say why the Government do not use the existing legislation. The onus is on those who want the Bill to say why the existing legislation does not work. Those who support the Bill complain about the kerb-crawling legislation that was introduced in 1985. They were warned at the time, in this House and in another place, that it would not solve the problem and would lead to wrongful arrests. That legislation has failed. Instead of tinkering with it and making it worse, surely it would be better if the Government used existing legislation that does not attract the same kind of opprobrium, withdrew their support for the Bill and used their powers under the Public Order Act 1986 to give directions to chief constables.

I should like the Home Secretary to issue today a memorandum to chief constables and the Commission of Police of the Metropolis drawing their attention to that legislation and asking them to provide protection for women on our streets who are harassed not just by kerb crawlers but by lewd and offensive suggestions from workers on building sites. Before we vote to change the law, the Government must tell us why they neglect to use legislation that they pushed through the House against considerable opposition, giving to the police the power to deal with the problem. Why is the House being asked to pass new legislation when much more effective legislation is already on the statute book? It provides checks, balances and safeguards that would prevent wrongful arrests and charges from being made.

I have not referred to many other sections of the article in New Law Journal, but it concludes:

"If kerb-crawling legislation is allowed to set a standard of equality between women and men, possession of condoms may be used as evidence of kerb-crawling, further discouraging clients already reluctant to use condoms. Fines against prostitute women may increase to £1,000 to match Shelton's proposal for kerb-crawlers, thereby forcing more women to see more clients to pay higher fines. And any woman or man may be criminalised for carrying condoms —The Sunday Telegraph reported that a woman solicitor who was coming back from abroad was arrested for having condoms in her bag."

Mr. Colvin: That is most extraordinary. I thought that the Government's campaign against AIDS—to persuade the public to protect themselves against AIDS—would encourage people to carry condoms and be prepared at all times. I recall a recent television programme by Mr. Dave Allen in which he pointed out—I do not say that he is always right—that when most gentlemen remove their wallets from their pockets, there is always a telltale outline which shows that most gentlemen go round the world fully prepared for the unscheduled event.

Mr. Livingstone: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. I shall watch in future as hon. Members take out their wallets in the Tea Room.

The legislation would worsen the chances of reducing the spread of AIDS by the use of condoms. Those who work with prostitute women and have studied the Bill warn that the pressure on a prostitute to get a client quickly, before that client is arrested for kerb crawling, means that it will be difficult for the prostitute to chat for a while to try to sus out whether the client is a psychopath, to discuss the terms of the arrangement and to make it clear that she is not prepared to get in the car unless the man is prepared to use a condom. The man will be under tremendous fear of being arrested, so he will not want to loiter and talk or discuss the terms. The danger is that there will be less use of condoms as the women will get into cars before they have obtained the assurance that a condom will be used. Therefore, the legislation may increase the spread of AIDS.

In the case to which the New Law Journal drew attention, the woman concerned used that defence in court. I cannot remember the outcome of the case, but it was stressed that the Government are urging everyone to use condoms more frequently, yet the possession of condoms in a handbag in a red-light district is all the evidence that a police officer needs to gain a conviction against a prostitute woman. It is absolute nonsense and the legislation will worsen the bias against the use of condoms that exists in the laws relating to prostitution.

We also have to bear in mind the risks to prostitute women. A prostitute has very little time in which to determine whether someone is a genuine punter or a psychopath. There are a vast number of unsolved murders and brutal attacks on prostitute women. The case of the Yorkshire Ripper illustrated that it is extremely difficult for police to catch random psychopathic killers.

The New Law Journal concludes:

"When the rights of prostitute women are trampled on, the rights of others, women and men (the poorest first, of course), are not far behind. The road to equality downwards—between prostitute women and clients, between women and men—is a bottomless pit."

The Sexual Offences Bill does not seek to tackle the causes of the problem but simply to increase penalties for kerb crawlers and to make them as punitive as the penalties faced by prostitute women. I have not the slightest doubt, if the legislation becomes law, that the next stage will be legislation to increase the fines on prostitute women to the level of those laid down in the Sexual Offences Bill.

I know that some Conservative Members will not be particularly persuaded by this, but on Tuesday The Guardian carried a most informative article by Jo Grant about the implications of the Bill. After a long introduction which covers the issues that I have already mentioned, Jo Grant comes to the nub of the argument:

"However, the bill faces vociferous opposition from an unlikely but well-organised pressure group—the English Collective of Prostitutes. The Collective was formed in 1975 to promote the interests of black and white women working in the sex industry. Its members campaign vigorously from a base at King's Cross Women's Centre in north London. Their aims include the abolition of the prostitution laws, legal and civil rights for prostitutes and economic improvements for women so that no one is forced into prostitution through poverty. Nina Lopez-Jones is the Collective's articulate spokeswoman and leading light. She has written many of the books and pamphlets on the Collective's extensive publications list. She also gives talks to community and women's groups about the Collective and its campaigns.

Chief among those at the moment is their opposition to the new Sexual Offences bill. Before the second reading in February, they lobbied key MPs to make their objections known. A particular concern is that the new bill removes the old requirements that a man has to kerb crawl 'persistently' before he can be arrested.

Under Sir William Shelton's bill, any man who talks to a woman once could be convicted solely on the evidence of one policeman. The woman would not be required to attend court, so there would be no proof that she was a prostitute. Although it would be unlikely that the police officer had actually heard what was said, his evidence alone could secure a conviction that could ruin a man's life."

In virtually any other modern western democracy, such legislation would be unconstitutional. It could not be applied in Scotland, where legal protections and rights are much stronger than in England. In this, as in many other respects, Scotland is well in advance of the rest of the United Kingdom.

The article continues:

"The collective are concerned at the power this puts into the hands of the police and fear the bill could be used in an arbitrary and random fashion by unscrupulous officers. It is so open-ended, they feel, that it could soon become a replacement for the notorious 'sus' laws."

I remind the House that the campaign against the sus laws continued for a long time and built up massive support. They were a complete anachronism. When they were wiped from the statute book, everyone —both in the legal profession and outside breathed a sigh of relief. I know that the hon. Member for Streatham is an honourable man, and seeks to solve an appalling problem that affects his constituents. It is not his intention to provide a trojan horse through which a new sus law can be brought slowly to bear.

Sir William Shelton (Streatham): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his recognition of the problem that kerb crawling causes to my constituents, and to many other people throughout the country. Is he aware that on Report and Third Reading recently we had a debate lasting for four hours, and that he spoke for more than one hour? Does he recollect that he has objected to the Bill five times on Fridays? Is he proposing to talk it out? If so, he may become the friend of the kerb crawlers and prostitutes and the enemy of the badgers, as he will deny an appearance on the Floor of the House to those friendly animals.

Mr. Livingstone: I oppose the Bill because it is bad law. That is the right of an hon. Member. I recognise that the Daily Express and the Daily Mail do not agree with me. As, is often the case, those two virulent little journals have lied and distorted the truth about this debate. They are a disgrace to their profession: they have lower professional standards than the prostitute women and kerb crawlers to whom they have referred. One must ignore that, however, and do what is right. The Bill would lead to the conviction of innocent people, and I will do everything possible to stop it reaching the statute book.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I wish to correct something that was said by the hon. Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton). I have it on good authority that, were the Bill to complete its remaining stages before 2.30 pm, the Protection of Badger Setts Bill —sadly—would still not be reached. The spokespeople of the British Field Sports Society in the House who tried to impede it in Committee—on which I sat—intend to talk out the Radioactive Material (Road Transport) Bill. I have an amendment to that Government-sponsored Bill. Irrespective of the length of the speech of the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone)—or any other contributions—we shall not reach the Protection of Badger Setts Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After those interventions, let us return to the Bill that we are discussing.

Mr. Livingstone: I shall do everything possible to ensure that the Protection of Badger Setts is passed. That is not the problem. There cannot be a deal which says, "Let us pass this Bill although it might lead to the conviction of innocent people, except that we do not need it because we already have the Public Order Act, which gives the police full powers to tackle the problem, and carry on to reach the Protection of Badger Setts Bill." As the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) said, other hon. Members determined to talk that out.

Mr. Colvin: As a member of the Standing Committee that considered the Protection of Badger Setts Bill, I must point out that some hon. Members have been wrongly associated with a movement to stop it. As the hon. Gentleman knows, given the delicate nature of private Members' legislation, it is essential that there is a meeting of minds which often takes place outside the Chamber. I succeeded in getting a private Members' Bill on to the statute book this Session. Without a great deal of compromise, which was reached in discussion outside the Chamber, that would not have been possible. That is the way forward for the Protection of Badget Setts Bill, and I hope that the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) appreciates that. If he were to follow that approach, there is a good chance that the Bill will get on to the statute book, which is what we all want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must not anticipate later debates.

Mr. Livingstone: Whatever we do, badgers will not be put at risk by the sexual offences legislation.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. David Mellor): The hon. Gentleman is being inappropriately skittish. He thinks that it is great fun to be the only hon. Member who is seeking to block the Bill. The only consequences of his doing so is that men who are making a nuisance of themselves and causing genuine problems to women in urban areas will get away wih it, and boys who are committing acts of rape will get away with it because an absurd legal technicality that deems that they are not capable of such acts. If he is determined to talk out the Bill, let him not be skittish. Most hon. Members would look for better things to put on their escutcheon than blocking a Bill such as this. He is getting no help from Labour Front-Bench spokesmen, so if he is determined to do this, let him at least do it with a bit of dignity and in the recognition that 649 hon. Members do not agree with him.

Mr. Livingstone: I am interested by the Minister's intervention. When we last debated this, there were not 649 hon. Members present—indeed, there were not 50 hon. Members present. He cannot invoke the idea that the whole House is happily in favour of the Bill. Leading members of his party have approached me privately to commend my stand because they consider the legislation to be flawed and dangerous.

Mr. Mellor: I suspect that that is a terminological inexactitude. It is easy for hon. Members to devise conversations without fully disclosing them; the hon. Gentleman is a past master at that. He cannot hide behind that evasion. He knows full well that on a Friday many hon. Members are absent with good reason. He also knows full well that no other hon. Member is prepared to block the Bill. He is alone in doing that. I cannot think that he serves any interest very well, not least those of women in his constituency. If he is to block the Bill, let us not have any trivial remarks about badgers not being put at risk. Groups of people who most of us take just as seriously as badgers—women—will be put at risk as a result of what he is doing.

Mr. Livingstone: It is a pleasure to hear the Minister getting so upset. If this legislation is so important, why, after 11 years in office, have not the Government introduced it? If, as he told the House—terminological inexactitude is an understatement—people are committing rape and getting away with it but the Bill will stop them, why have not the Government, after 11 years in office, considered it important enough to introduce legislation? If he is genuinely concerned about women, let him tell the House why the Government are blocking the legislation that will make rape in marriage a crime. I believe that the hon. and learned Gentleman comes close to stretching the credibility of those who must listen to him.

[Mr. Livingstone]

The Minister gave all sorts of commitments at an earlier stage in the debate. What is the basis on which a Government have to give commitments on how legislation will operate to ensure that it is not inaccurately followed? The Government have the ability, in Government time, to produce legislation that does not have those problems.

Mr. Mellor: I am playing the hon. Gentleman's game, but even he is coming to the end of it. We might as well at least hear something on the other side of the case. It is a recognised fact that private Members bring forward legislation with Government support and effect major changes in the criminal law, as was done to increase the sentences for drug trafficking to life imprisonment. That is a well-recognised way to meet the inclinations of not only private Members, because of particular constituency problems, but of the Government and, to be fair, the Opposition. The hon. Gentleman has made a bad and spurious point.

This practice requires people who are prepared to stand within the camp rather then being, like the hon. Gentleman, out of sympathy with the normal way in which business is transacted. The hon. Gentleman knows full well that the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) raised points which I was able to meet to his satisfaction. That is the way things are done. There is nothing unusual about suggesting that the legislation will be monitored and giving the commitments which mean that it could be revoked if the hon. Gentleman's fanciful motions that the Bill will be used oppressively proved true. Some of those who opposed the sus law did not just emote against it but sat on the Committee considering the legislation—as I did—and abolished it.

Even at the 11th hour, the hon. Gentleman has an opportunity to ensure that the predicted consequences of the Bill the last time objection was made to it, five years ago, are erased. It is unfortunate that the hon. Gentleman will not even accept the guidance of his Front Bench but stands apart from every other Member who has participated in the debate, whatever ghostly comments he may have heard in the Corridor.

Mr. Livingstone: It is interesting to hear the hon. and learned Gentleman speculate about what other people might believe or do. If the support for this legislation about which he tells the House exists, it is in his power to move a closure motion and see whether he can find enough Members to vote. If this legislation is that important, why have not the Government gone through the normal nods and winks process and got their supporters here to pass it?

I still want to hear an answer to the question I put to the Minister. Is he telling the House that for 11 years the Government have allowed people to get away with rape and that this legislation will stop that? That was the implication of his comments, but he knows that it is not true. The Government have recognised that the law needs to be tidied up on a technical point. It is clearly nonsense to say that boys under 14 are incapable of sexual intercourse. At the earliest stages, I made it clear that the House agrees that this anomaly should end, not just because someone is getting away with it. All the young boys under 14 who commit rape and are captured by the police are detained under the existing legislation in exactly the same institutions and for exactly the same period as they would have been detained if the law relating to rape applied to young boys.

The Minister came close to misleading the House, and I notice that he does not step up to offer an apology or to give the evidence showing that boys under 14 who have got away with rape would have been caught by this legislation.

Mr. Mellor: I notice that the hon. Gentleman—who has no legal qualifications and had no long-term interest in this matter, until his interest was whipped up by the English Collective of Prostitutes and others—speaks with great authority on matters that do not lie within his ken. I do not propose to carry on making the hon. Gentleman's task of filibustering any easier. The fact that I do not rise to my feet does not mean that I accept any of his points. It is utterly wrong that someone who commits rape should get away with it on a technicality. The idea that such a person can be charged with other offences—as he can—does not go to the point. One could say that any rape involves violence, so why bother to have the offence? I shall not be drawn into that argument. If the hon. Gentleman is so determined to do his dirty business, let him do so without invoking my assistance. I want to put on record the fact that what he is doing this afternoon is thoroughly and utterly discreditable and reprehensible. It is discreditable not only to people, including many of his hon. Friends, with legitimate constituency concerns, but in the eyes of the occupants of his Front Bench, as was made clear on the previous occasion, when they dissociated themselves from what he is trying to do.

Mr. Livingstone: Still the Minister does not provide examples. Is he really saying that for 11 years people have been getting away with rape on a legal technicality, yet the Government have not been prepared to introduce legislation to stop it? What nonsense. If he will not provide examples of cases, it comes close to an attempt to deceive the House and play to the gallery, which is what happened last time. On that occasion I was approached by Conservative Members and told, in effect, "If you block the Bill, we will have a campaign against you and say that you are the loony Left."

I do not give in to such threats. I am blocking the Bill because it would be bad law and would lead to people being convicted for crimes of which they were innocent. I will not be browbeaten by the Minister or be put off by him. My hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) is perhaps more of a gentleman than I am. He believed the assurances that the Minister gave. I do not believe them. I have listened to the hon. and learned Gentleman inside and outside the House, for 10 years and I would not give tuppence for his assurances. Even if he intended to carry them out, I do not believe that he has the necessary control over the judiciary or the police.

The Minister could stop the problem of kerb crawling by using the existing law, under which the police have power to arrest people who offend women in that way. Will the Minister circulate to chief constables and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis an instruction drawing their attention to the existing legislation and the problem? Will he get to his feet and say what he proposes to do about that?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman thinks that he is at some management committee meeting of the Labour party, browbeating in the old way. I will not respond to that, but I must tell him that despite the veneer that he puts on, for our benefit, of bonhomie and sophistication, it does not take much to bring out the sneering and snarling individual to whom we have been listening. He has no reason to accuse me of bad faith. I have been in the House a good deal longer than he has, and I have been a Minister for nine years, regularly giving assurances. Not once has anyone said that my assurances were inaccurate or not well-intentioned. Such a charge has never been levelled against me by the occupants of the Opposition Front Bench because on legislation—for example, in dealing recently with the Broadcasting Bill—I have always been able to work effectively with them.

The ridiculousness of the hon. Gentleman's position is fully exposed, and to defend himself he must make imputations of bad faith which, frankly, say more about him than about anything that has come from his Front Bench.

Mr. Livingstone: Again, the Minister has not answered my question. He is not prepared to give the House the details of alleged cases of boys under 14 getting away with rape. Nor is he prepared to say that he will use the existing legislation and the resources of the police to tackle the problem now. What has the Minister been doing since we last debated this issue? He has heard from hon. Members whose constituents suffer the harassment of kerb crawlers and he knows that under existing legislation he has power to take action now. Why is he not doing that?

The answer is that the Government are playing politics with the issue. They have had all the time in the world to tackle the problems of violence against, and harassment of, women inside and outside marriage, but they are not prepared to deal with that. They have used the procedures that I am using to block a Bill that would have made rape in marriage illegal. Will the Minister now accept that that was a mistake? Are the Government prepared to say that rape in marriage should be a crime and that they will allow that measure to proceed?

One cannot give credence to a Government who, after 11 years in office, have neglected the rights of women and who now pose as the champions of women by hiding behind this measure in the name of the hon. Member for Streatham. They control the state machine, the police and the judiciary. After over a decade in Government those issues are not being tackled, and they must answer for that. I repeat my offer to the Minister to explain why he will not use the Public Order Act 1986 and other legislation to ensure that the issue is dealt with now. We should not wait for the Bill to be passed and crawl its way through the Lords. If the Minister is genuinely concerned about women who are harassed on our streets, he should tell the House why he will not use existing legislation and circulate to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the chief constables a memorandum drawing their attention to this problem and demanding that they put police resources into tackling it.

The Minister will not do so because this is about politics and vote-buying. That is why his party collaborates in the sort of smears that we saw in the gutter press. I will not be browbeaten by the gutter press, and certainly not by the Minister. He has it in his power to tackle the problem, but he is not prepared to do it, any more than the Government have been prepared to do much at all for women in any area during the past decade. The Government are in no sense the friends of women. All that they want out of this is to creep back with a new form of sus law that will allow an individual man to be arrested and convicted solely on the word of a police officer. No self-respecting western democracy has such power and no good police officer wants it. If laws have to rely on such power, they will be more at home in the regimes that we are seeing collapse in eastern Europe and other parts of the world where democracy has no long-term standing or is no more than a sham.

In this country all individuals should be able to rely on the law to defend them. Women are harassed and men who might be innocently driving through an area could be stopped by a police officer who says, "I saw you stop and talk to a woman." No evidence would have to be produced, and the woman involved would not have to be produced, but a conviction could be gained solely on the basis of the police officer's word. No law in this country should give rise to such circumstances. Under this Government there has been far too much of a drift away from the old principles of justice where people are convicted on the basis of evidence, particularly forensic evidence. More and more, convictions are based solely on a police officer's word and the extraction of confessions in the cells.

Our legal system is probably the worst in western Europe in terms of its checks and balances. I do not have the slightest intention of pandering to the Minister. I repeat that I would not believe his assurances on any basis and I am not prepared to accept them now. If I do so and step down, I will not have to put up with the filth that will appear in The Sun, the Daily Mail and the Daily Express tomorrow, but innocent people will be harassed and the sus law will return. I am not prepared to see that, so I am exercising my right to stand here and oppose a Bill that I think is wrong.

After all this time, there has been no answer to the questions that I put to the Government. Every time the Minister gets to his feet he puts forward another smear or plays to the gallery. No doubt the gutter press are getting their headlines ready for tomorrow. I am not interested in that.

Sir William Shelton: Has the hon. Gentleman ever approached me or considered approaching me to see whether we could reach some agreement on the Bill?

Mr. Livingstone: There is no agreement; there is a basic, fundamental disagreement. The Bill has two simple points. The first, which is completely uncontroversial for hon. Members, is to remove the problem of the law's inability to state that boys under 14 can commit sexual intercourse. In the previous debate on this Bill, I said that if the other part of the Bill were dropped, we would agree to the remaining section and it would be unanimously carried in the House and in the House of Lords. There is no dissent about that.

The problem relates to the other part of the Bill which means that one police officer's word will be able to convict a man, without any corroborating evidence or witness. That is the point of contention and there is no way that that can be compromised away because it is a genuine point of disagreement. I recognise the sincerity of the hon. Member for Streatham, but not that of the Minister.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): My hon. Friend has answered the question asked by the hon. Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton). At least my hon.

[Mr. Tony Banks]

Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is visible when he is talking out the Bill. Everyone knows that if my hon. Friend is still talking at 2.30, the Bill will not proceed. Everyone in the country will know that my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East did it, whereas my Bill —the Protection of Badger Setts Bill—was killed off by one Member, who did not consult me either, but who tried to claim the cloak of anonymity. At least my hon. Friend is not trying to kill the Bill anonymously.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): The hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is killing the badger Bill.

Mr. Livingstone: After the various diversions that originated from the Minister, I shall return to the place in my speech where I was interrupted by him about 20 minutes ago.

Once again, I must draw the House's attention to the analysis of the Bill that appeared in The Guardian. I know that some Conservative Members regard The Guardian as an adjunct to the Labour party, but that is not how it appears to us. It analyses the objections that the English Collective of Prostitutes has put up:

"the Collective are concerned at the power this puts into the hands of the police and fear that the bill could be used in an arbitrary and random fashion by unscrupulous officers. It is so open-ended, they feel, that it could soon become a replacement for the notorious 'sus' laws."

Ninety-nine per cent. of police officers are excellent and honourable people. They come into the profession because they want to serve the public and they do so to the best of their ability, often with inadequate resources provided by central and local government. Often they have the task of implementing legislation which has been particularly badly drafted by the House; they can often be the meat in the sandwich between a resistant public and a reactionary Government, but they do the best that they can. Even if we accept that 99 per cent. are honest and honourable——

Whereupon MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER declared that the Question was not decided in the affirmative, because it was not supported by the majority prescribed by Standing Order No. 36 (Majority for Closure).

Mr. Livingstone: In one sense, I am rather glad that the hon. Member for Streatham called the Division. The result of it puts into perspective the remarks of the Minister of State, Home Office. If the hon. and learned Gentleman bothers to return to the Chamber, he may care to explain why proposed legislation that he says is vital does not attract the support of enough Conservative Members even to force a closure. That puts the reality into perspective.

Sir William Shelton: Will the hon. Gentleman understand that I did not contact any of my colleagues, who would have come to the House gladly? I was unaware until late last night that the Consumer Guarantees Bill would not be on the Order Paper. Will the hon. Gentleman understand also my strength of feeling at his action in killing the Bill, which is desperately needed by many people? If he attracts the label of the friend of the prostitute and the kerb crawler, and the hon. Member who helped to talk out the Protection of Badger Setts Bill, it will be what he deserves.

Mr. Livingstone: I thank the hon. Gentleman for revealing the motives behind the Government's protestations.

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): What are the hon. Gentleman's motives?

Mr. Livingstone: Had the Father of the House been in his place earlier, he would have heard me explain that we could immediately tackle the problem of kerb crawling. The Government have the powers that they need under the Public Order Act 1986. Any man approaching a woman and making an offensive or indecent suggestion can be arrested under that legislation. I am sure that the Father of the House will want to know about my proposal and add his weight to it. I said to the Minister of State, Home Office, "Why do you not immediately issue a circular to every chief constable and to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis reminding them of the 1986 legislation and urging them to get their officers out on the streets to tackle the problem immediately?" The Government have the necessary powers, but they do not have the political will to act. They do not have the commitment to defend women.

What we have seen is a sham and a play for votes. The contribution of the hon. Member for Streatham suggests that more is going on to produce headlines than to tackle the problem of women being harassed. That is exactly what I would expect from a Government whose supporters are blocking the Bill to make rape in marriage illegal.

I am sure that the Father of the House supports that Bill. Let him join me in urging those hon. Members who have been jumping up and down protesting their support for the Sexual Offences Bill to campaign to get the Public Order Act 1986 used immediately, as it can be. The Government could issue an instruction tonight to police forces throughout the country. They could ensure that time was found to consider the proposed legislation that would make rape in marriage illegal. We require action from the Executive, not a whole load of hot air, with hon. Members playing to the gallery and trying to stir up the Daily Mail, Daily Express, The Sun and the other elements of the gutter press that have done nothing in the past decade to put pressure on the Government genuinely to defend the rights of women or genuinely to protect women on our streets and in our homes. Everything that the Government have done has undermined the position of women. The Government are playing politics with this issue.

We should not pass legislation which is, in effect, a new sus law, and which allows the police powers that would not be acceptable in any other modern western democracy with a written constitution or a Bill of Rights. If the Government wish to pursue that line, let them have the courage to find the time in their legislative programme for next Session, and do something about it——

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate to be resumed what day? No day named.

Private Members' Bills

RADIOACTIVE MATERIAL (ROAD TRANSPORT) BILL

Order read for consideration (as amended in the Standing Committee).

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Debate to be resumed what day?

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): On behalf of the hon. Member in charge of the Bill, Monday next.

Consideration deferred till Monday 9 July.

PROTECTION OF BADGER SETTS BILL

Order read for consideration (as amended in the Standing Committee).

Hon. Members: Object.

Consideration deferred till Friday 13 July.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. When my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) moved that his Bill be now read a Second Time, I honestly did not hear any hon. Member say "Object"—[HON. MEMBERS: "We did."] If you heard an objection, Mr. Deputy Speaker, could you tell us from whom it came?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We have been round that course on many previous Fridays. As this is the last effective Friday for private Members' Bills, perhaps it would be as well if I were to remind the House that this is a well-established procedure. I clearly heard "Object", which means that the Bill——

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West) rose——

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point) rose——

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have not finished. I also remind the House that the Select Committee on Procedure has considered this procedure fairly recently and has advised against any change to it. The Committee, of course, gave its reasons for so doing.

It might also be as well if I remind the House that the procedure of objection is not available only at 2.30 pm on a Friday; it is used frequently on main sitting days at 2.30 pm to stop private Bills. It can equally be used to stop Government motions at various times. If an hon. Member shouts "Object" to any of those categories of Bill, that does not necessarily mean that he objects to the Bill as such. He may merely be objecting to the Bill proceeding without debate or scrutiny. I hope that that helps to clarify the position for the House.

Sir Bernard Braine: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am sure that the House is grateful to you for the explanation that you have just given of the present position. You did not call me when I sought to rise a little earlier—I should have shouted that I wanted to make a point of order. Great indignation was felt by my hon. Friends about the way in which the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) sabotaged a Bill—and subsequently glorified in that fact—which is of great social importance and of great importance in terms of law and order in many parts of the country. Happily, that is not the case in my constituency, but there is a major problem in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton) which he was seeking to alleviate, with the support of all of us.

I do not know whether the Select Committee on Procedure can be persuaded to reconsider that matter, but there is something badly wrong with our procedures when a Bill that is desired by many people, by the forces of law and order, and especially by women is sabotaged. The hon. Member for Brent, East gave us a lecture, but he was not even well informed. I shall not go into the details now because this is a point of order, but there must be a strong case for the Select Committee on Procedure being asked to reconsider that matter. Parliament is a living and continuing thing. It may take a view one day, but if abuse continues to occur, I believe that the Select Committee should be asked to reconsider.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I fully understand what the Father of the House, the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), said, but what occurred today was in order. If, however, the right hon. Gentleman feels that the matter should be referred to the Procedure Committee, who better to do that than he?

Mr. Tony Banks: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I say through you, Sir, to the Father of the House, for whom I have infinite respect, that I believe, as a member of the Procedure Committee, that he has made a good point? However, I must point out to him that there was a difference between the way that my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) dealt with the Sexual Offences Bill and the method used by those who objected to my Protection of Badger Setts Bill. My hon. Friend objected openly to the Sexual Offences Bill. He will have to take whatever public criticism comes his way and he will, no doubt, endure it in his customary fashion.

Unlike my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), I clearly heard the objections to my Protection of Badger Setts Bill from the hon. Members for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) and for Devizes (Sir C. Morrison). The difference between them and my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East is that they want to wear the cloak of anonymity. Every hon. Member must in the end be accountable for his or her actions. I respect the views of any hon. Members who wish to use the procedures of the House to kill off a Bill if they believe that that is in the best interests of their constituents, or of whatever other interests they serve. However, they ought not then to be able to claim anonymity.

I was not here at 9.30 when a number of points of order were raised because last week I named the hon. Member for Devizes who objected to my Bill. I understand that he has received a number of threats. I utterly deplore them. Anyone who issues threats ought to realise that, far from the hon. Member for Devizes being criticised by the public, as he ought to be, he could gain their sympathy. I hope that anyone who is considering such foolhardy actions will bear that in mind. The Bill will return to this place, when the hon. Members for Romsey and Waterside and for Devizes will undoubtedly endure public criticism for having killed off the Protection of Badger Setts Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The matter has been well ventilated on both sides of the House. We must now get on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): With the agreement of the Member in charge of the Bill, Friday next, Sir. That was a disgraceful objection.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 13 July.

Mr. Amess: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My Bill—the Raoul Wallenberg (Memorial) Bill—was not moved. I am pleased to say that the Government have agreed to assist in securing a piece of land in a prominent part of London on which to place a fitting tribute to Raoul Wallenberg, and I shall therefore not be taking the Bill any further. Let me take this opportunity to thank all the hon. Members on both sides of the House who have helped to bring about this unique event.

Sir Bernard Braine: I was a member of the Standing Committee that dealt with the Bill. I was greatly disturbed—for reasons that I have already mentioned—by the way in which objection to the Bill was handled; however, there has been a happy ending to the story. Let me simply say that the Bill was intended to secure a memorial to one of the great heroes of the 20th century, whom the United States made an honorary American citizen. Surely the least that we can do is mark his sacrifice, and his dedication and devotion in saving at least 100,000 lives through personal endeavour by ensuring that the piece of land so generously offered by the Government is sited prominently in our capital city.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As a particularly observant occupant of the Chair, you will have noticed that, during the slaughter of the innocents that traditionally takes place on this day every July, many hon. Members objecting to ten-minute Bills—most of them Opposition Members—have stood to record their objections. Should not the names of such hon. Members be recorded? At least hon. Members who attempt to say publicly why they oppose certain Bills would then be able to do so.

The Elimination of Poverty in Retirement Bill has been presented seven times in the two most recent Parliaments, and has always been objected to, usually by a member of the Trappist tendency on the Conservative Benches. That has caused grave disquiet to many pensioners who would like to see some light at the end of the poverty tunnel.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is not allowed to discuss the Bill. What is his point of order?

Mr. Corbyn: The point of order is this, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As you know, I am here nearly every Friday at this time to discuss these issues. You must be aware of the disquiet in the House about the anonymity, of objectors: it is tantamount to a secret vote. In an elected Parliament, everything should be open and above board. If the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) wishes to oppose the abolition of deer hunting—or the excellent Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) to protect badger setts—let him stand up and say so.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If I deal with the point of order from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), I may short-circuit later points of order.

This matter was dealt with at length by Mr. Speaker at the beginning of our proceedings today. I have repeated what he said, and made one or two additional points in the light of points of order. There is nothing that I can add.

Mr. Simon Hughes: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and on a separate matter, relating to the business that has just gone through.

I realise that silent objections are not a matter for the Chair; you and Mr. Speaker have made that clear. One of this week's issues, however, has been behaviour that discredits Parliament. People outside complain regularly about Bills that are killed rather than being allowed to be voted out. If their future is determined by a vote, people understand; if it is determined by an unnamed objector, they do not, and they do not regard that as a democratic process.

Will you clarify another point, Mr. Deputy Speaker? I understand from the Vote Office that many of the Bills in the long list that has just been read out have not been printed. If that is so, am I right in thinking that, in effect, hon. Members will have no opportunity to move the motion for Second Reading? Would it be possible in future for the Order Paper to show whether a Bill has been printed, and, if it has not, for it not to appear on the Order Paper? There was a long list of Bills that had been printed, but it was made longer by the Bills that had not been printed. The general view is that Bills that are serious attempts at legislation should be printed. They should be seen as serious legislation, whereas that status should not be accorded to Bills of hon. Members who, as it were, fly a kite but never draft or print the Bills.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I deal with this, because it is probably a separate point? The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) makes a valuable point, because sometimes the procedure is somewhat confusing. If there were no objection to a Bill that had not been printed, we would not allow its Second Reading to be moved. The hon. Gentleman may wish to put his other point to the Select Committee on Procedure.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): Further to the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that the hon. Gentleman has a point. I have no hesitation in objecting, and being identified as somebody who had objected, to the Protection of Badger Setts Bill and the Abolition of Deer Hunting Bill. I do object—I made this point earlier today—to the promoter of the Bill abusing points of order by making a speech about an objection to which, without a further abuse of the points of order procedure, the hon. Member who has objected has no opportunity to reply. The actions and words of the promoter of a Bill can be misconstrued by people outside who have an interest in it. I hope very much, as a result of the many points of order raised this morning and the clarification given from the Chair by you, Sir, and Mr. Speaker, that the public outside will begin to appreciate that objections to Bills are often merely an attempt further to discuss measures such as the Protection of Badger Setts Bill, which I want to see on the statute book in an amended form.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Further to the points of order made by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Mr. Deputy Speaker. He is right that people should be clear about the procedures of the House. The points that he made were valuable. People are confused not only by the procedure that we have just gone through but about some of the Bills that are brought before the House.

In a point of order, the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) suggested that he did not know who had objected to his Elimination of Poverty in Retirement Bill. Anyone who did not know that I had volubly objected to it would have to be lacking in all sensory perception. The real abuse is that the Bill had no chance of succeeding. It would never have been in the programme of any party and the hon. Gentleman is misleading people, for his own political advantage, into believing that it had any chance of succeeding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: These are all valid points to put to the Select Committee on Procedure, if the hon. Gentleman so wishes.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Tony Banks rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Both hon. Members who are now standing have had a go. I will call them again, but I am extremely anxious to hear what the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) wishes to say in his Adjournment debate. I should like to get on to that pretty quickly.

Mr. Banks: Further to the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman was most disingenuous: he said that his only reason for objecting to the Protection of Badger Setts Bill was that he wanted further debate. He knows that there will be no further opportunity to debate it on the Floor of the House unless the Government allocate time for that. He was a member of the Standing Committee that considered the Bill and we had three full sittings, at which he made all the points that he wanted. If he had allowed the Bill to proceed today, it could have gone to the other place, where the further debate could have been held. The hon. Gentleman should not try to pull the wool over the House's eyes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We cannot debate these matters now.

Mr. Martyn Jones (Clwyd, South-West): On a point of order. Mr. Deputy Speaker. Earlier, spurious points of order were made about my Consumer Guarantees Bill. Mr. Speaker ruled that the procedure that I used to change the date from today to 20 July was perfectly in order, but will you confirm that?

I forced a voted on the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Bill, which resulted in it being dropped and moved to Monday. I believe that this is a genuine point of order. Will you confirm, Sir, that the Government can allow time for a debate on that day and could allow time for my Consumer Guarantees Bill to be considered in Government time? That would show that the Government are concerned about consumers, not about manufacturers who produce shoddy goods.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should not want to deal with that point off the cuff. I am not exactly sure about that, and I should want to give the hon. Gentleman wholly accurate advice. I suggest that he seek advice afterwards from the Clerks, who I am sure will be able to tell him exactly what happens.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member wish to speak on the Adjournment?

Mr. Corbyn: No, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should like to raise a point of order. I should like to put on record my gratitude to the hon. Members for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) and for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) for bringing a little glasnost into the Chamber. They have at last said that they are opposed to the debating—not to the passage—of the two Bills with which I am associated.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: That is untrue. Do not tell lies in the House.

Mr. Corbyn: I heard the hon. Member for Harrow, West say something that I believe to be fully out of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The comments by the hon. Members for Harrow, West and for Romsey and Waterside re-emphasise the point that the House needs to debate procedure once again. If a Member who has the support of thousands, if not millions, of people wishes to bring to the attention of the nation the problem of the impoverishment of elderly people, that does not mean that the relevant legislation will be carried by the House. I am pretty sure that Conservative Members would vote against it. I am sure that you agree, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is the function of the House to debate measures brought forward by individual Members through the proper procedure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We cannot debate these matters now. I have let the House have a good run.

HIGHLANDS AND ISLANDS SHIPPING SERVICES

Ordered,

That the provisions of paragraph (2) of Standing Order No. 84 (Constitution of standing committees), paragraph (1) of Standing Order No. 86 (Nomination of standing committees) and Standing Order No. 101 (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.) shall apply to the draft Undertaking by the Secretary of State for Scotland with the consent of Her Majesty's Treasury and of Orkney Line Ltd, and Shetland Line (1984) Ltd. and to the draft Undertaking by the Secretary of State for Scotland with the consent of Her Majesty's Treasury and of Shetland Line (1984) Ltd. as if they were draft statutory instruments; and that the said draft Undertakings be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.—[Mr. Wood.]

Islington Health Authority

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wood.]

2.56 pm

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I should like to refer to the problems of Islington health authority, which obviously covers my constituency as well as the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) and part of the borough of Haringey, which is covered by the Hornsey and Wood Green constituency.

I am sponsored as a Member by the National Union of Public Employees. I receive no personal income from that organisation, but I have a considerable interest in the health service through that sponsorship and because I represent an inner-city area. My hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury cannot be here, because he is away in Brussels on Front-Bench duties. He wishes to be associated with the general thrust of my remarks because he is worried about these matters.

The Islington health authority covers a predominantly impoverished inner-city area. In many senses, the health problems in the area are related either to the poverty of elderly people—there is an aging population—or to housing and social stress, such as alcoholism and various forms of psychiatric illness which largely emanate from social conditions.

It is to the credit of many people and organisations in Islington—the health authority, the council, the community health council, Islington Health Watch and many more—that Healthy Islington 2000 has been launched. It is trying to put into practice what the World Health Organisation has been preaching for a long time. I refer to a paper which was included in the report by Dr. Leila Lessof, the borough's public health officer. Monika Schwartz produced a paper on behalf of Healthy Islington 2000, in which she said:

> "We can recognise that not only do we need to promote healthier life-styles, we also need to create a healthier environment for people who work and live in Islington."

The main points were as follows: to develop relevant health targets and indicators; to address directly inequalities in health, taking account of the health needs of the black and ethnic communities who live in Islington; to co-ordinate health promotion activities between the borough, the district health authority and other agencies; and to encourage an interdisciplinary approach to improving health and collaborative projects.

The Government's funding policies in respect of the needs of Islington health authority do not make many of those achievements possible.

The borough has been poll tax-capped, as have neighbouring boroughs, so there are problems involved in trying to implement the community care policies that have been put forward. There are also problems associated with the lack of ring fencing of community care expenditure, an issue which was extensively debated in the House recently. In addition, there is a great thirst for a better health service in Islington. The social history of the borough reveals—for example, the establishment of the Manor Gardens centre in 1912—the desire of working-class people living in the poor area of Upper Holloway to achieve a degree of communally provided and funded community health care.

There are several health funding issues affecting Islington that I particularly draw to the attention of the House. One is the closure of Friern hospital, a large Victorian institution in the borough of Barnet which is jointly funded by Islington and several other areas. It is due for closure in 1993 and has been the subject of much controversy, particularly since there is no ring fencing of the community care provision of money that will be passed to borough councils.

I do not doubt the intentions of the London borough of Islington to carry out a decent community care policy. It is simply that the pressures on the borough's budget are intolerable. In addition, the borough has been poll tax-capped, as has the neighbouring borough of Haringey. An example of the difficulties facing mentally ill patients came in this story in The Haringey Independent of 28 June:

"Forty-nine-year-old Miss Patricia Burbidge of Wood Green was taken to North Middlesex Hospital where she died of multiple injuries."

She was a mentally ill woman who was killed when she was in collision with a train at Bounds Green station.

"Police are not treating Miss Burbidge's death as suspicious and an inquest will be held later this month. They believe Miss Burbidge was an in-patient at Friern Barnet, a mental hospital being run down as part of the Government's care in the community programme. The Voluntary Co-ordinator of the Enfield and Haringey Branch of the Schizophrenia Fellowship, Pamela Maher, criticised the pace of the rundown of long stay psychiatric hospitals in the wake of the tragedy. She said: With the rundown of Friern Barnet Hospital, it's increasingly difficult for staff to cope.'"

That emphasises many of the problems affecting the morale of the staff and the safety of patients, due to the rundown and accompanying loss of staff.

That newspaper carried a further story about the closure of Friern hospital and reported that Dr. Doris Hollander, consultative community psychiatrist at Friern hospital, was deeply worried about the shift of patients from the hospital. They would end up homeless, in prison or committing suicide, she said.

It is important for us to air loudly problems such as that. There are 590 patients at Friern, 200 of whom come from Islington. I am sorry to say that patients from many mental health institutions do not get adequate community care. Instead, they slip through the net, and a tour of people in London who nightly have to sleep near the central heating grilles of offices, alongside the Savoy hotel or in parks in north London reveals the tragic situation of many former in-patients of long-stay institutions. I am in favour of community care, but if it is not properly funded, we shall continue to have the disastrous situation that now exists.

With the possible advance of the closure of Friern hospital, a degree of panic is setting in. Insufficient alternative accommodation will be available if the closure is brought forward two years, the latest proposal to come from the regional health authority. May we be assured that such a speedy closure of Friern will not go ahead without the provision of adequate, full-time, permanent accommodation for those who will be discharged when the hospital finally closes? My second substantive point is the problem of the funding of Islington health authority. The annual report of Islington community health council stated:

"In October last year the health authority agreed cuts in services of 65 beds, and 16 per cent. reductions in operating theatre out-patient sessions."

In November, the health authority announced delays in funding a number of big capital schemes, including Whittington's diagnostic block. The report continued:

"Waiting times for admissions and out-patients' appointments grew. Many patients had appointments postponed, and sometimes postponed again," as a result of those decisions. The quality of care received by patients has deteriorated and there are worries that patients are being pushed out of hospitals far too quickly.

As part of the proposals to save money, the authority's search for solutions includes centralising services on the Whittington site, removing all remaining acute beds from the royal northern hospital, a historic hospital just down the road, the accident and emergency department of which was closed some time ago despite the hospital being the borough's war memorial. The more efficient use of out-patient departments has meant that pressure on the hospital has become worse. Last October the number of beds was reduced by a further 60 on top of the considerable cuts that had already taken place.

Doreen Scott, a fine woman who suffers from severe disability and is wheelchair bound, is the chair of Islington community health council. She has done enormous work throughout the borough for many years and, as a patient of the Whittington hospital, she conducted a survey on the effect of those cuts. It stated:

"the food was poor—often not hot enough and often not what I ordered . . . maintenance of the ward was poor—light bulbs were not replaced and the payphone not emptied."

When she was in hospital she witnessed the problems of transferring patients between wards because of the lack of staff. One patient had to go for a test in the diagnostic block across Highgate hill wearing his pyjamas because there was no ambulance available to fetch him. She witnessed a number of elderly patients being discharged who appeared to be still in need of hospital care. She is experienced in such matters.

The long-term problems are that over the decade the health authority has been told to make cuts of about 15 per cent. in real terms and 11 per cent. real terms expenditure has been cut from the Islington health authority since 1983. Dr. John Yudkin, a respected doctor dealing with diabetes at the Whittington hospital, who is well known to many people, presented a fact sheet, which was never denied, to members of the authority and the public last November. It stated that, despite the money granted to Friern hospital and the underfunding of the pay awards, during the past six years there has been a continuous cut in funding. Efficiency savings meant that the increase in expenditure had to be met by a reduction of expenditure in the district. On top of that, the district has had to contribute to the pool expenditure of the Lawson cuts and the regional growth pool. He also explained the problems that he and many others suffer as a result of the severe cuts in the expenditure of Islington health authority. There has been a 34 per cent. bed loss in the past six years. The Whittington hospital is now down to a mere 600 beds. At its height it was a large hospital of 1,500 beds.

At its meeting in October, the district health authority received a list showing the closure of one ward at the royal northern hospital, the closure of further wards at the Whittington hospital, restriction to five-day usage, agency and recruitment costs and the reduction in operating theatre lists. That last item saved £160,000, and the total list added up to savings of £1 million. That saving has resulted in a considerable deterioration of the health care available to the people of my constituency and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury.

The health authority's more recent meeting on 6 March 1990 listed proposals for service reductions totalling £980,000 and analysed how the problems had come about. It stated:

"The major problem for Health Authorities with this allocation is that the provision for inflation has only been included at 5 per cent. This is unlikely to be sufficient to meet either pay or price inflation. Pay awards for public sector employees are likely to be settled with a 7·5 per cent. increase being the minimum expectation with price inflation are also running at 7 per cent."

Ludicrous demands are placed on area and regional health authorities, which mean that they cannot meet the targets and needs of patients within the community that they are there to serve.

By contrast, Hornsey central hospital, which is also in the district, demanded £1 million for refurbishment for one part, which was at first refused, and has now been phased over two years with £250,000 being paid in the current year, and £750,000 next year. In the same year that refurbishment of Hornsey central hospital was refused by the regional health authority, about £1 million was spent on the refurbishment of the regional health authority offices: these are serious matters indeed.

A merger has been proposed for Bloomsbury health authority, with part to go to Parkside, but the majority to Islington. There has been strong opposition to the merger for a number of reasons. First, it prevents Camden from having a coterminus health authority and makes coterminosity with Islington much worse—it is already not coterminus and will become even less so. In addition, Bloomsbury health authority is notoriously underfunded. A public consultation document on the merger received 60 responses, which is a large number for such a process. It is arcane to ask somebody to comment on the boundary changes of a health authority; nevertheless there were 60 responses, and only three supported the idea. Two responses were qualified and 55 had serious reservations.

I did not send in an objection or a view on the document because I associated myself with the response put forward by Islington Health Watch, as I chaired the meetings that drew up the response.

In the objections it was claimed that:

"The consultation period is unreasonably short . . . while it is claimed that the plans will improve liaison between Westminster Council and the Health Authority, the same argument has been totally ignored for Islington and Camden . . . Creation of a Camden Health Authority (by merging Bloomsbury and Hampstead Authorities) needs looking into . . .The merger of Islington and Bloomsbury Health Authorities will probably be followed by merging Hampstead Health Authority with them. Thus causing a second upheaval"— on top of goodness knows how many upheavals in health service reorganisation in the past 15 to 20 years.

I hope that those objections will be taken seriously by the Minister.

My union—the National Union of Public Employees—and the Confederation of Health Service Employees and other unions have shown their objection to the proposal. They are concerned about the problems that will result in the development of community services, mental health services, education and management arrangements. It is interesting that the City of Westminster also sent in an objection which says:

"The issue of coterminostity between health and social services authorities remains important, particularly in view of the legislative proposals in the NHS and Community Care Bill currently before Parliament, for this was the primary justification for the proposed transfer of north-east Westminster to Parkside."

I have had discussions with many people associated with health work in Islington and Camden in preparation for this short debate. They are all concerned about funding, about the closure of Friern, and about the need to develop facilities which will meet the needs of the people of our borough. They are in a difficult position. The Bloomsbury merger has been mooted for some time and there has been some consultation on it. A large number of objections have been sent in.

Will the Minister tell us that the Bloomsbury merger is not going ahead? He and his colleagues have had letters from my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, with which I wish to be associated, asking that it should not.

Will the Minister instead announce that it is his intention to retain the objective of coterminosity between health authorities and local authorities. It will be difficult to achieve a good standard of co-operation, as has developed between Islington health authority and the London borough of Islington, if one has to deal with two or even three boroughs, which is what will happen.

Also, the Government and Ministers should study the allocation of resources regionally within the health authority. Islington comes within the area of North-East Thames regional health authority, and that area extends from very poor areas of inner London, which need the resource allocation working party formula because they have continuously lost resources over the past decade, all the way to Southend. They are diferent areas with different problems. The authority provides an expensive service. If there is to be health service reorganisation, it would be better to set up a London health planning agency which could direct resources as they are required to health authorities within London. At least that authority would be based on London boundaries rather than on the curious boundaries of the four Thames regional health authorities.

I had discussions this morning with the chairman of Islington health authority, Mr. Moonman, who emphasised the good relationship that had developed with Islington health authority and the need for the Minister to say clearly that the merger will not go ahead and that a new authority will be appointed. I am worried about the lack of democracy in running the health service. There should be rapidly appointed a health authority which reflects the needs and aspirations of Islington's people. We do not need one whose members are drawn solely from the business community, and that seems to be the formula that is developing. We need an authority that represents the borough council, local community and trade union interests and local business people who have a contribution to make. That would genuinely reflect the needs of the borough as a whole. Anything other than that is a receipe for long-term disaster.

Islington requires a recognition of its health needs and support for the good health initiatives that have been taken. Above all, it needs resources. We cannot go on year after year with one ward closure and one bed closure after another in order to meet some ridiculous target set by the Minister for the regional health authority. We need the resources to meet the health needs of the people that I represent.

3.16 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Stephen Dorrell): The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) has raised a wide range of issues and I have little time in which to respond. I do not think that I can reply to all the questions that he posed, but I shall cover as many as possible.

The hon. Gentleman quoted a call by public health officials for fixing, among other things, targets for the provision of health facilities for ethnic minorities and asked for an improved inter-disciplinary approach to health management. He mentioned a number of other desirable objectives, and I do not disagree with any of them. In terms of those objectives, the hon. Gentleman should be rather more open-minded than some of his hon. Friends to our reforms in the management of the health service. The fixing of health targets, especially for ethnic minorities, is one of the positive results that I expect to flow from the introduction of the purchaser-provider split which is at the core of those reforms. The hon. Gentleman does not have to accept my word for that positive result of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. He can consult Mr. Chris Ham, who writes for a magazine which I suspect the hon. Gentleman reads more frequently than I do, Marxism Today.

Mr. Corbyn: I do not read it at all.

Mr. Dorrell: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman should read it; he could learn how the management of the health service could be improved using the principles contained in our Act. Mr. Ham, who is certainly not a Government supporter, argues that for people who share the hon. Gentleman's political point of view the ideas in the Act present an opportunity—precisely the opportunity that they are intended to present—for health service managers to think specifically about the health needs of people resident in their areas, and then to set out to ensure that those health needs are met.

The Government not only embrace the objective set by the hon. Gentleman but have provided the management framework to turn that objective into reality. Part of the purpose of the health service reforms is that the new health authorities, as prudent purchasers on behalf of their resident populations, should be thinking in a way that has not been necessary in the context of traditonal health service structures. They should think in an ordered manner about the precise health needs of their resident populations and use the budget provided by the national health service to ensure that those priorities are met. The health authority is charged with producing a properly prioritised budget to purchase health care that meets the specific needs of its resident population.

I embrace most of the first part of the hon. Gentleman's speech. The Government seek to do exactly what he urged. That is why we are reforming the structure of health service management to ensure that objectives are more accurately met than was possible in the past.

The hon. Gentleman went on to mention three specific matters that have arisen in his constituency. I shall deal with each of them briefly. The first is Friern hospital. He said that it was part of the Government's programme to run down large mental hospitals as part of their community care programme. As the hon. Gentleman may know, I am the Minister with responsibility for mental illness issues. It is not our policy to run down large mental hospitals. Our policy is to provide mental care that is more accurately targeted to meet the clinical needs of each patient.

Most people in the mental illness world, although not all, recognise that in the past too many patients were put in unsuitable, large-scale hospitals where their clinical needs were not met. It is not our policy to close all mental hospitals. It is our policy to ensure that patients who can most benefit from treatment in the community should have the opportunity to receive it and that those who need more structured support should have that support. The facilities should be available to ensure that the clinical needs of each patient are met.

The context of Friern hospital is interesting. The hon. Gentleman expressed anxiety about patients being discharged without proper support and without a proper treatment programme. That anxiety is precisely the reason why my Department is helping to fund the TAPS—team for the assessment of psychiatric services—programme of research into what happens to patients who are discharged from Friern. We want to be sure that our widely accepted objective of providing more accurately targeted clinical care to individual mental patients is met.

We have set up a research organisation that will act as an informal policeman to ensure that precisely the fears expressed by the hon. Gentleman about patients being discharged from Friern hospital will be examined. We shall find out whether the hon. Gentleman's fears are soundly based. I hope that they are not. We shall do what we can to ensure that they are not. I can give him some comfort by pointing out that the personal social services research unit conducted a research programme into those fears in 28 local schemes. It found that no patient in any of the 28 schemes ended up as the hon. Gentleman described, either on the streets or in prison.

The Government's policy is to ensure that mental patients are treated properly according to their clinical needs. That policy will continue and it will not be changed.

The hon. Gentleman spoke next about what he described as the underfunding of Islington health authority. He alleged that there had been substantial real terms cuts in Islington's health spending. I am glad to assure the House that that is not the case. Between 1982 and 1988-89 real-term spending by Islington health authority rose by 9·5 per cent. The initial cash allocation for this year is up by 9 per cent. on last year.

I prefer to judge the effectiveness of health care in a district by the effect on patients rather than the amount of money spent. The hon. Gentleman may be interested to know that the number of in-patients treated in Islington health authority has risen at an average rate of 1·5 per cent. a year since 1982 and the average number of day cases has risen at an average rate of 6 per cent.

I do not accept that there have been real cuts in the level of health care provided by Islington health authority. I accept, however, that there have been changes in the way in which that health care has been provided. I do not apologise for that, because it is important for any manager in the health service not to insist on managing a service that is set in aspic. All services should be responsive to the latest opportunities to improve the effectiveness with which health care is delivered.

Thirdly, the hon. Gentleman talked about the proposals on which we have gone out to consultation to change health authority boundaries in the area of London which he represents in part. No decision has yet been taken. We are still considering carefully the 60 responses to the consultative document. My officials have had the advantage, which perhaps the hon. Gentleman has not, of reading all the responses. I am glad to assure him that his presentation of the balance between support, neutrality and opposition is not that which is perceived by my officials who have read the representations.

The hon. Gentleman laid some stress on the coterminosity argument. I understand the concept of bureaucratic neatness, which has some appeal, but those who consider management structure issues within the health service have to approach them more seriously than merely examining lines drawn on a map and then saying "Wouldn't it be nice and neat if all the lines could be drawn down the same streets or the same rivers." There are important issues to be considered and I do not regard coterminosity as an especially important one in terms of the planning of health care in any locality, including that which the hon. Gentleman represents.

The hon. Gentleman laid some stress also on the principle that there should be local representation on district health authorities. That misunderstands the nature of a DHA and its purpose. I would——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at twenty-six minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 25 June 1990

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Archbishop of Canterbury

76. Mr. Gow: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what finance has been made available by the Commissioners for the administration of the office of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the current financial year.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners have paid the stipend of the archbishop and met the costs of his supporting staff and their equipment.

Ordination of Women

77. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, how many priests he expects to be paid redundancy and severance payments in the event of women being ordained in the Church of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: No authoritative projections exist of the numbers of priests likely to leave the Church of England in the event of women being ordained to the priesthood.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Neill Joseph Patterson

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has anything to add to his answer of 19 December 1988, Official Report, column 92, to the hon. Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook), on the result of the trial of Neill Joseph Patterson.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The three extraterritorial offences for which Patterson was prosecuted were not tried before a jury. The offences were charged as alternatives to offences allegedly committed in Northern Ireland. As Patterson was convicted of the offences allegedly committed in Northern Ireland the judge did not return a verdict on the extraterritorial offences and ordered them to lie on the file. The result of the trial should therefore read —"No verdict returned; left on file." I regret the inadvertent mistake in the answer.

Criminal Law Jurisdiction

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has anything to add to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 280, to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) concerning offences allegedly committed in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: Yes. At the time of my reply the Irish authorities had indicated that the offences alleged against John Brendan Brady were committed in Northern Ireland. However, they have subsequently reported that the offences were committed in the Republic of Ireland, albeit with the intention that offences should be committed in Northern Ireland. I understand that the confusion arose because the offences were charged contrary to provisions of Irish legislation, as amended by the Irish Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act, 1976 (CLJA). Whilst the offences could not have been prosecuted but for the amendments to Irish law effected by the CLJA, the prosecution was not an extraterritoral prosecution under that Act.

Mrs. Hanif Bibi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when the appeal of Mrs. Hanif Bibi, TH/9473/88, is to be heard by the immigration tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The appeal of Mrs. Hanif Bibi is to be heard on 26 June 1990.

Mr. Zabur Khan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when the immigration tribunal is to issue its determination in the case of Mr. Zabur Khan, TH/13322/88; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The determination was issued to Mr. Zabur Khan's representatives in the United Kingdom on 21 June 1990.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poland

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount of bilateral and EC aid received by Poland from the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: Poland received no bilateral aid nor EC attributed aid from the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mekong River Project

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Nations commission for the Mekong river project or any of its subsidiary bodies last met; what plans are currently in hand for the furtherance of the programme; and what contribution Her Majesty's Government expect to make to the solving of any problems that are preventing its progress.

Mrs. Chalker: The last meeting of a Mekong commission body was held by the interim Mekong committee from 24 to 27 April 1990. An extensive work programme has been drawn up by the secretariat including some 70 projects planned for implementation in the period 1990-92. These are divided into three main areas: basin planning, data collection and information systems, and resources development.

The British Government already contribute to the cost of various research studies and we have indicated our willingness to consider support to other activities. This could include assistance, with other donors, for a further phase of the water balance study once all members of the committee have agreed the way forward.

Ethiopia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much food aid has been provided to Ethiopia by the EC and member states since July 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: Detailed information is readily available only for the period since 1 November 1989. This indicates that at least 370,000 tonnes of food aid, worth some £70 million, has been provided or pledged by the Community and its member states in this period for the benefit of the people of northern Ethiopia.

Guyana

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given to Guyana, and to what projects, in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: Financial aid to Guyana in project form was suspended in 1983 because of defaults on the repayment of development loans. Financial aid was resumed in 1989 in support of Guyana's economic recovery programme, but in the form of balance of payments support, a grant of £13·7 million being signed for this purpose in June 1989. The technical co-operation programme has continued throughout.

In addition, a bridging loan was agreed, also in June 1989, for the purpose of helping Guyana to clear its arrears to international financial institutions which had led to suggestion of assistance from the institutions concerned. The loan—US$ 10·5 million—was activated on 19 June this year and with bridging finance from other donors and the Bank for International Settlements, has resulted in the clearance of the arrears in question. The World bank and the IMF will shortly be meeting to consider finance for the programme of economic adjustment on which Guyana has embarked.

Expenditure figures for 1980-89 are as follows:

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the European Community Council of Development Ministers discussed aid to Namibia at the meeting on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 18 June at column 392.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the European Community has to grant a beef quota to Namibia under the Lomé agreement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not yet received the Commission's proposals for Lomé accession arrangements for Namibia. The United Kingdom will support generous terms of accession for Namibia to the Lomé convention. We will give sympathetic consideration to any proposal for a Namibian beef quota.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Reserved Matters

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce measures to ensure that applications for approval of reserved matters are published for consideration by interested parties.

Mr. Needham: I have no plans to change the measures which already exist. Applications for reserved matters are advertised if the proposals have created particular interest at outline stage or where objectors have so requested.

Wages Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to produce for Northern Ireland the information contained in tables in the answers to the hon. Member for Stretford of 24 April, Official Report, columns 177-82 and 185-86, and to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) of 14 March, Official Report, columns 251-56, on wages councils.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is given in the tables. There were no prosecutions in Northern Ireland in 1989 under the Wages (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those areas which have been declared sites of special scientific interest; and for which other areas he has proposals to become sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following sites have been declared as areas of special scientific interest:

Carrickbrawn, County Fermanagh
Gortnagory, County Antrim
Moneygal Bog, County Tyrone
Garry Bog, County Antrim
Teal Lough and Slaghtfreeden Bogs, Counties Tyrone and Londonderry
Black Bog, County Tyrone
Glenariff, County Antrim
Cleggan Valley, County Antrim
Monawilkin, County Fermanagh
Lough Beg, Counties Londonderry and Antrim
Beagh Big, County Fermanagh
Garvroa, County Fermanagh
Monaendogue, County Fermanagh
Lergan, County Fermanagh
Drumlisaleen, County Fermanagh
Inner Belfast Lough, Counties Antrim and Down
Glen Burn, County Antrim
Strangford Lough (Part 1), County Down
Ballymacormick Point, County Down
Strangford Lough (Part 2), County Down
Kiltubbrid Loughs, County Armagh
North Woodburn Glen, County Antrim
Dunloy Bog, County Antrim
Strangford Lough (Part 3), County Down
Moninea Bog, County Fermanagh

Proposals for a further five areas are currently under consideration and declarations are likely to be made later this year. Other areas will be designated in the future as a result of continuing survey work, but it is not possible at this stage to predict which sites will be designated.

Rivers (Sewage)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to separate control of rivers and foul sewage disposal.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The control of river pollution and foul sewage disposal are already separated in the sense that the functions are carried out by separate directorates within the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. We have not proposed at present to alter that system.

Gargoyles, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 387, why some gargoyles at the Old Cross, Newtownards were replaced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Gargoyles decayed beyond recognition were removed and replaced with new ones based on those remaining. The two original gargoyles, which were better preserved, were retained in order to perpetuate the market cross.

Schools (Selection)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the selection procedure transfer system from primary to secondary level schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received representations about children who have not been admitted to the school of their parents' choice because the school is oversubscribed. It has always been made clear that parental choice is limited by the physical capacity of a school and that an independent appeals tribunal in each education and library board area will consider appeals from parents about the way schools have operated their admissions criteria.

Shopping (Republic of Ireland Residents)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will raise at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Ministerial Conference the decision of the European Court to reject the restriction by the Government of the Republic of Ireland on its residents shopping in Northern Ireland; if he will oppose the alternative proposal of a 36-hour restriction on such shoppers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: We have already conveyed to the Irish through a number of channels our anxiety that the European Court judgment should be given early effect and intend to discuss the matter at the next intergovernmental conference. I have yet to consider the "36-hour rule" proposal with those of my right hon. Friends who have an interest in it.

Cuan Sea Fisheries

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the length of the case of Cuan Sea Fisheries against the Department of the Environment (NI) in the High Court in Northern Ireland; what was the outcome; what payment is being made to Cuan Sea Fisheries; what are the estimated legal costs to the Department; and what legal costs of the claimant will be paid by him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The case of Cuan Sea Fisheries Ltd. against the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and others lasted for 85 court days. The plaintiff ultimately agreed to withdraw its claim against the defendants in consideration of an ex gratia payment of £1 million to include costs and outlays. The Department of the Environment maintained its denial of liability. The estimated legal costs to the Department are some £320,000.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the length of time between commission and detection of a juvenile offence and prosecution in court; and what has been the trend for such periods over the past five years.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that the information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate costs.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary has discretion under the juvenile liaison scheme, through which all such cases are dealt with, to issue a caution as an alternative to prosecution. It does so wherever possible so that not every case reaches court. In cases that are taken to court it is estimated that the average length of time between initiation of proceedings and the final court hearing is three months. I understand that hearings are often adjourned to allow reports on accused juveniles to be obtained from probation officers. An important feature of the juvenile liaison scheme is that juvenile liaison officers visit the parents of the accused juvenile offender before court action is commenced. Sometimes this is not readily possible and, where difficulties arise, alternative arrangements have to be made. Delays of up to a few weeks between detection of a juvenile offence and initiation of court proceedings can therefore occur in certain cases.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether consideration has been given to extending the police juvenile liaison system by establishing a juvenile branch to deal with all prosecutions against juveniles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Under the juvenile scheme individual sub-divisional commanders have discretion to decide how an offence committed by a juvenile should be dealt with. This is in line with police policy elsewhere in the United Kingdom. Detection of offences by juveniles are therefore often not followed by a prosecution. Cautions are issued whenever possible. The Chief Constable tells me that he has no information to suggest that the use of discretion by sub-divisional commanders is a major factor in delays in the prosecution of juvenile offenders. I understand that he recently examined the desirability of creating a central juveniles branch within the Royal Ulster Constabulary and that he concluded that the case for doing so had not been made out.

Social Fund

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce the 1990-91 social fund budget allocations to social security offices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on publishing the United Kingdom's proposals relating to economic and monetary union before they are submitted to the EEC; and what notification she has had of the date of the intergovernmental conference at which these proposals are to be considered.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer placed a copy of the Government's most recent proposals on economic and monetary union in the Library of the House on 21 June and reported this to the House in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). The precise date of the intergovernmental conference has yet to be set but we expect that it will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of the European Council on 25 and 26 June, which I shall attend, and the results of which I shall of course report to the House in the usual way.

Visits, 10 Downing Street

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make arrangements for hon. Members to arrange visits to 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: No.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations underlay the decision to transfer financial responsibility for the mission to the International Atomic Energy Agency to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; and to which Department Her Majesty's permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency board of governors in Vienna is responsible.

The Prime Minister: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office traditionally has responsibility for the costs associated with missions to international organisations including those in Vienna. Until recently the Department of Energy paid for 50 per cent. of the costs, including overheads, of Her Majesty's permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency and his personal assistant. These costs were transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in order to bring together responsibility for and control of resources and in the interests of greater efficiency. Her Majesty's permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency is concurrenty permanent representative to other United Nations organisations in Vienna. Although on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office establishment, he also reports, therefore, to a variety of Departments in London.

Economic Advice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what provision she makes within her office for the assessment of economic advice from unofficial sources and what estimate has been made of what the cost has been in the last year.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 18 June at column 403.

Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy with respect to the elapse of time before a letter sent by an hon. Member to the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities should receive a reply; and what action will be taken to staff Department of the Environment Ministers' offices adequately to permit prompt replies to hon. Members' letters.

The Prime Minister: It is the aim of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that his Department should reply to letters within three to four weeks of receipt. However, the volume of correspondence about the new local government finance system has been very large and I regret that it has taken substantially longer to reply in many cases. A special unit, now comprising 20 staff, has been established to deal with this correspondence and as a result the Department has replied to 58,000 of the 65,000 letters on this subject received from hon. Members and members of the public so far this year. In general, letters from hon. Members on local government finance are being answered at present within about seven weeks and many are being dealt with more quickly than that; with current staffing the aim is to reduce the period significantly as soon as possible.

Global Warming (Diatoms)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will raise the importance of work on diatoms and related studies at the forthcoming conference on global warming.

The Prime Minister: The work on diatoms is certainly an important component of scientific research into global warming and part of the research work to which I have referred and will continue to refer in speeches and conferences on global warming.

Donna Maguire

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise with the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic the implications of the failure of the extradition attempt by West Germany of Donna Maguire; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. This is a matter between the authorities of the Republic of Ireland and West Germany.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answers of 6 June, Official Report, column 615, and 30 April, Official Report, column 385, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

The Prime Minister: My answers on 6 June and 30 April relate to holdings of 417,784 and 586,843 sq ft respectively.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of the Cabinet Office in the latest available year.

The Prime Minister: Energy efficiency in the Cabinet Office has concentrated on encouraging staff to abide by commonsense measures to reduce energy wastage. Details of expenditure on other measures, such as the planned maintenance of boilers and the use of modern energy-saving lighting systems in refurbishment programmes, are not available.

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if she discussed the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg during her recent visit to the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: No. But our concerns have been raised with the Soviet authorities on many occasions. The Soviet Union continues to maintain that Raoul Wallenberg died in prison in 1947, but we do not have information about the precise circumstances.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

New Books

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will take steps to direct local education authorities to ensure the recommendations of standards on new book purchase set out in the Bourdillon report;

(2) if he will list those education authorities which (a) meet and (b) fail to meet the Bourdillon report standards, and what is the number of new books per thousand population purchased for each of the last five years by each.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Bourdillon report deals with the public library service. Neither local education authorities nor my right hon. Friend have any responsibility for this service. Responsibility lies with the Office of Arts and Libraries and local authorities.

Disabled Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers with disabilities are currently employed in each local education authority in England; and what steps his Department is taking to increase the number of teachers with disabilities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held by the Department. Responsibility for the employment and deployment of teachers, including disabled teachers, rests with local education authorities. The Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 covers all employers with more than 20 employees, including local education authorities.

Overseas Students

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what tuition fees overseas students were charged in each year since 1978-79; and what is the percentage change in real terms in the level of fees currently charged to overseas students compared with that in 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: Fees are set by institutions and details of the fees actually charged are not held centrally. However, the then Secretaries of State for Education and Science recommended fee levels for all overseas students in 1978-79 and 1979-80 and, in respect of non-EC overseas students who embarked on their courses before 1980-81, between 1980-81 and 1984-85. Since 1980, EC students have been charged fees at the home student rate. In respect of non-EC overseas students embarking on their course in 1980-81 and subsequent years institutions are expected to charge fees sufficient to cover the full cost of the provisions made. The Council of Local Education Authorities and, until 1988-89, the University Grants Committee recommended fee levels to institutions in their respective sectors. Between 1981-82 and 1983-84 the then Secretaries of State also issued similar recommendations to institutions grant-aided by the Department. All the relevant recommendations for the years up to and including 1988-89 were promulgated by the Department. Details are in the Library. Because no information is held centrally on the fees actually charged, it is not possible to answer the second part of the hon. Member's question.

Music

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for increasing opportunities for children at school to be taught music.

Mrs. Rumbold: Music is a foundation subject in the national curriculum. This means that it will form part of the curriculum for every pupil aged five to 16 in a maintained school in England and Wales. We hope to make an announcement soon on the machinery to be set up to advise on the national curriculum requirements for music.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of all Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on individual primary schools in England published during the last four years, indicating for each the number of pupils attending.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am today placing in the Library a list of all Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on individual primary schools published between 1 June 1986 and 31 May 1990 showing for each the number of pupils on roll at the time of the inspection.

In a small number of cases that information is not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member with it in the near future.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mrs. Rumbold: A sum of £10,000 was spent on power factor correction equipment at our Darlington headquarters building in the 1989-90 financial year. This builds on the sum of £28,000 spent by the PSA on electrical lighting control sensors at the same site in the previous financial year.

Capital expenditure on energy saving equipment for the Department's London headquarters site is not justified, as there is insufficient time left to recover the financial outlay that would be necessary before our impending move to new premises.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 217 and 30 April, Official Report, column 392 about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mrs. Rumbold: The area of office space to which these figures relate is 540,023 sq ft.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the ministerial visit to Coventry schools of the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) on 22 June.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I was glad to have the opportunity to visit schools in Coventry on 22 June. I was impressed by the professionalism and commitment of the teachers I met. It was helpful, following my meeting with representatives of Coventry LEA in February, to be able to see at first hand some of the problems of the physical conditions at these schools. The Department will do everything it can, consistent with the need to be fair to all authorities, to assist Coventry LEA in its task of improving conditions in its schools.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Drug Trafficking (Gibraltar)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of the use of Gibraltar for drug trafficking.

Mr. Maude: There is no evidence of drug trafficking on a significant scale. But the Gibraltar authorities are always ready to co-operate actively with their Spanish counterparts to investigate all leads which might relate to drug trafficking in, or organised from, Gibraltar.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are taken to prevent the use of Gibraltar for the trafficking of drugs into the European Community.

Mr. Maude: Gibraltar's laws against the import, possession, supply and dealing in drugs are as comprehensive as those in the United Kingdom. The laws are rigorously enforced, in co-operation with the Spanish and other EC countries' law enforcement agencies where appropriate.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from the Spanish authorities concerning the use of Gibraltar by traffickers in drugs.

Mr. Maude: The Spanish authorities have raised the problem with us on several occasions. We have repeatedly assured them of the British and Gibraltar authorities' full co-operation in acting against drug trafficking and urged them to supply us with any evidence they have of such activity in Gibraltar.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings of the Council of Ministers there have been since the start of 1979; and if he will list the Ministers who attended each of these meetings.

Mr. Maude: Meetings of the Council of Ministers, with details of the Ministers who attended each meeting, are listed in annex A of the six-monthly White Papers on "Developments in the European Community".

Cyprus

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the United Kingdom's present relationship with northern Cyprus has had on extradition and the effective pursuit of crime.

Mr. Maude: Our policy of non-recognition of the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" does not preclude operational contacts between British police forces and the Turkish Cypriot police. These are working effectively. The question of extradition has not arisen.

EC (United Kingdom Representation)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of people seconded to the United Kingdom's permanent representation to the European Community in Brussels in each of the years since the United Kingdom entered the European Community; and if he will break these figures down by Department of origin.

Mr. Maude: The exact figures requested are not easily available and their collection would involve a disproportionate cost. Since 1973 more than 150 non-FCO officials have been seconded to the United Kingdom's permanent representation in Brussels. At any one time roughly half the accredited diplomatic staff at the representation are seconded from the home civil service. The largest number are from the Department of Trade and Industry and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The Departments of Employment, Energy, Environment, Health, Social Security and Transport, Her Majesty's Treasury, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices and the Bank of England have also been represented.

Igor Rodionov

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Government in an effort to secure the release of Igor Rodionov.

Mr. Waldegrave: The case of Igor Rodionov has recently been added to those which we raise in our contacts with the Soviet authorities. We shall continue to press the Soviet authorities until all such cases have been satisfactorily resolved.

Middle East

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the implications of the further settlement of Jews in east Jerusalem and the occupied territories on the prospects for a middle east peace settlement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in the House on 13 June, east Jerusalem is, in our view, occupied territory. We have urged the Israelis to cease their settlement programme in the occupied territories. Such settlements are illegal, provocative and an obstacle to peace.

Bulgaria

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received a copy of the Council of Europe's observer team's report on the general election in Bulgaria; and if he will congratulate that country on returning to an acceptable form of democracy; and if he will explore ways of encouraging Bulgaria to play a useful role in the European context.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are looking forward to receiving the Council of Europe observers' report. But it is already clear from the reports we have received from other observers that Bulgaria has made a considerable step towards democracy. This should help Bulgaria to play its full part in European affairs.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 30 April, Official Report, columns 404-05, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Sainsbury: The energy consumption figures in my reply of 30 April relate to office space of 137,376 sq m. The figure for the ODA is 21,280 sq m.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the year 1989-90 a total of £55,360 was invested in improving energy efficiency in FCO buildings. The old public offices are also being refurbished. It is expected that improvements to the fabric and the introduction of building energy management systems will bring further savings in energy costs.

European Commission

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently employed by the European Commission; and if he will classify them by grade.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1990, c. 33]: The details of United Kingdom staff in the other principal Community institutions are as follows:

	Number

Guyana

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ministerial or other official visits have been made to Guyana, for what duration and for what purpose in each of the last 10 years; what information he has as to the proper conduct of elections scheduled for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested by the hon. Member in the first part of his question is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The most recent ministerial visit to Guyana was when my right hon. Friend (Mr. Patten), the then Minister for Overseas Development, visited Georgetown from 9-10 July 1989 when he signed a new aid agreement with the Government of Guyana. I reminded the visiting Foreign Minister of Guyana on 21 May of the importance which this Government attach to the principle of free and fair elections and of the need for elections to be seen to be fair.

TRANSPORT

Railway Crossings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet with the chairman of British Rail to discuss the safety of unmanned, no-barrier crossings on provincial lines.

Mr. Freeman: The installation and operation of all unmanned level crossings on public roads must meet stringent safety criteria laid down by the railway inspectorate. The inspectorate liaises closely with British Rail and the appropriate local authorities in all matters of crossing safety. There is the opportunity for discussion of any safety issue with the chairman of British Rail either at our regular meetings or at specific meetings, where necessary.

Channel Tunnel

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any public funds have been made available towards the cost of a freight terminal linking Scottish industry and commerce with the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: No subsidy is being made available to British Rail under its current plans for the channel freight terminals.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to make an assessment of the demand for regional freight terminals to link with the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 483, what information he has on the terms of reference given to Professor Halliday of Durham university and other consultants by British Rail for considering alternative routes for the high-speed rail link to the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail is still considering these matters and I will ask it to write to my hon. Friend when it is in a position to provide this information.

Public Transport (Rural Areas)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to take any new measures to improve public transport in rural areas.

Mr. Atkins: Public transport in rural areas is mainly a matter for the transport operators. Since deregulation bus mileage outside London and the metropolitan areas has increased by some 21 per cent., with 83 per cent. being run commercially. Local authorities have powers to subsidise additional socially necessary services. In addition, the rural transport development fund receives up to £1 million a year from my Department to support the introduction of innovative services in rural areas.

Cardiff-Wales Airport

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve security at Cardiff-Wales airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom aviation security programme is drawn up and administered by the Department of Transport. Its purpose is to protect commercial aviation against terrorist attacks. It is not intended to cover private aviation which is not generally at risk from such activities. The incidents at Cardiff airport which have recently been reported in the local press relate to areas of the airport where private flying takes place, and they have no implications for the security of commercial aviation operations there. In common with other airports, the aviation security arrangements at Cardiff have been tightened considerably in recent months. Further improvements—which will also apply to other airports—are in the pipeline.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all trunk road schemes for which public inquiries have been completed but no ministerial decision has yet been made on the inquiry inspector's recommendation, giving the date on which the inquiry was closed; and, where the report has been submitted by the inspector, the date on which the report was presented to the Secretary of State for decision.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 22 June 1990]: The following schemes in the national programme for England are awaiting a decision following a public inquiry:

		Public inquiry finished	Inspector's report received

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the main financial constituents of trade protocols one, two and three with Iraq.

Mr. Redwood: The main constituents of the first three financial protocols were as follows:

Year	Amount £ million	To Finance
1983	250	Capital goods/projects
	25	Pharmaceuticals line of credit
1984	250	Capital goods/projects
	50	Pharmaceuticals line of credit
1986	50	Pharmaceuticals line of credit

Under the financial protocols with Iraq, the Export Credits Guarantee Department undertakes to guarantee the repayment of an agreed amount of finance to be used in support of United Kingdom exports to Iraq. This lending is available for particular contracts or projects, or through lines of credit.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to ensure that transputers ordered by Jordan are not used as a missile guidance system by Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Her Majesty's Government's policy on missile proliferation is well known and all appropriate steps are taken to prevent the proliferation of equipment and technology. A licence is required to export transputers to any destination under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989, as amended. Applications for a licence to export transputers for a missile guidance system are considered on a case-by-case basis in accordance with stringent criteria. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual licensing matters.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether all contracts in the United Kingdom for providing sensitive military components for Iraq have now been identified; and what further action his Department intends to take.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Exporters are responsible for applying for, and obtaining, export licences for goods which are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order. My officials stand ready to advise whether an export licence is required.

Takeovers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he plans to alter the scope and emphasis of the work of the takeover panel to take account of the effect of Europewide takeover policies in the run-up to 1992;

(2) if he intends to prepare Europewide takeover regulations as a replacement for the takeover panel.

Mr. Redwood: The draft directive on the regulation of takeovers provides for each member state to designate an authority or authorities to discharge the functions specified in the directive. These matters are regulated in the United Kingdom by the Panel on Takeovers and Mergers through the takeover code. The Commission is currently revising its proposals. When discussions resume, the Government will be seeking to ensure that supervisory authorities in member states can operate with a combination of flexibility and certainty. The takeover panel's experience has shown this to be necessary for effective takeover regulation.

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, before granting qualifying body status to an accountancy body, he will (a) require it to appoint an independent ombudsman to hear the students' complaints against the body itself and (b) seek the comments of its present-day students.

Mr. Redwood: No. However, the Secretary of State will take into account comments received from the public, including accountancy students, when determining applications for recognition of professional qualifications under the Companies Act 1989.

Auditing Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will create a body, independent of the auditing industry, to formulate auditing standards.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will legislate to ban auditing firms from writing up the board minutes of companies and then auditing the same.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason to do so. Under existing legislation, a person who is an officer of a company—or a partner or employee of an officer—is prohibited from being appointed as auditor of the company. Moreover, under the Companies Act 1989 the Secretary of State will be able to recognise a supervisory body for auditors only if the body appears to him to have adequate rules and practices designed to ensure that company audit work is conducted properly and with integrity, and that persons are not appointed as company auditors in circumstances in which they have any interest likely to conflict with the proper conduct of the audit.

Departmental Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his practice to inform the Chairman of the Trade and Industry Select Committee of the number of his Department's inspectors linked to the accountancy firms criticised by disciplinary committees of the accountancy bodies.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Institute of Chartered Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in his consideration of qualifying body status for the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales under the Companies Act 1989, he will require that its students will be made aware of his Department's inspectors' criticisms of auditing firms.

Mr. Redwood: No. The Company Auditors (Examinations) Regulations 1990, which came into force on 20 June, set out the subjects which a qualifying body must test by examination if its qualification is to be recognised under the Companies Act 1989. Although inspectors' reports are not specified as such, the Secretary of State will wish to satisfy himself that the examinations are a proper test of the subject matter, and reflect current best practice, as indicated in inspectors' reports or otherwise.

Riot Control Vehicles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what circumstances licences would be granted under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 for the export of riot control vehicles which have been specially designed or modified to be electrified to repel boarders (PL1500(F)).

Mr. Redwood: Licences are required for the export to all destinations of riot control vehicles which are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 —SI 1989 No. 2376—as amended. Licence applications are considered on a case-by-case basis, in accordance with stringent criteria, which include an assessment of the human rights record of the country concerned.

It is not the practice to grant a licence for the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

English Estates

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the overall disposal strategy and mechanism of sale receipts in relation to the sale of assets of English Estates; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what policy will be adopted by English Estates in the disposal of individual terrace units in relation to the sale of its assets; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the policy in relation to existing tenants of English Estates who wish to acquire those premises where they are at present tenants; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the policy of his Department with regard to asset sales of English Estates; and what policy will be adopted in relation to the sale of assets of English Estates, the manner in which such assets are to be sold and their specific timing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The policy with regard to the sale of English Estates' property portfolio was set out in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to a question on 26 April. English Estates is currently in the process of drawing up proposals for the conduct of the disposal programme which will best meet the broad objectives that have been laid down.

Home Income Plans

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to discuss the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation report on home income plans with LAUTRO or the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: Home income plans involving investment business are a matter for the SIB and other appropriate regulatory bodies which, I understand, are currently considering them.

North Sea Oil Markets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place his Department's joint submission to the New York courts with the Commodity Futures Trading Commission on regulatory jurisdiction over North sea oil markets in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 24 May 1990.

Investor Compensation Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investor and depositor compensation schemes his Department monitors in the financial services industries, together with the compensation ceilings, the date from which they operate, and the criteria for claims.

Mr. Redwood: The Policyholders Protection Act 1975 provides compensation for private policyholders if an authorised insurance company becomes insolvent. A total of 90 per cent. of any admissible claim will be paid. There is no limit on the size of claims. Responsibility for the investors' compensation scheme lies with the Securities and Investments Board.

British and Commonwealth Group

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from creditors of the British and Commonwealth Group.

Mr. Redwood: I am not aware of any representations from creditors. However, some correspondence has been received from and on behalf of shareholders.

Car Imports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what differences the agreement negotiated in the European Economic Community on 19 June on Japanese car imports makes for the import into the continent of cars produced in the United Kingdom by Japanese-owned or other factories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: An informal discussion of the future treatment by the Community of cars produced by Japanese-owned companies took place between Ministers on 19 June. Commission officials will shortly participate in further talks with the Japanese authorities. Although formal agreement has still to be reached among member states and with Japan, I remain confident that cars produced in Britain, including by Japanese-owned companies, will continue to enjoy unlimited free circulation throughout the Community after 1992.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each inner-city task force those voluntary organisations which have received grants in the current and previous financial years, and make a statement on his policy towards the voluntary sector projects so funded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 22 June 1990]: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, since my Department's records do not specify the nature, voluntary or otherwise, of grant-funded bodies.

The task forces work with many different groups, including voluntary organisations, which can help fulfil their enterprise and employment objectives. Moreover, since task forces have a limited life, they devote some of their energy to strengthening local organisations which can step into their role when they leave. Voluntary organisations have an important part to play here, provided that they represent the most cost-effective approach in each case.

Independent Television Franchises

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to monitor share dealings in companies which hold current independent television franchises.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 June 1990]: None. It is for the Independent Broadcasting Authority to enforce the ownership provisions in section 20 of the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement outlining the steps which are currently being taken by his Department to ensure that exports by the apparel, knitting and textile industries do not face unfair barriers erected by other countries.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The question of unfair barriers to exports of all categories of goods is one of the subjects for decision in the current Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations. The Government supply information on barriers which we would like to see removed to the Commission, which conducts negotiations on behalf of member states. The Community's aim is to achieve a reduction by all parties in their tariff and non-tariff barriers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the level and value of exports of textile and clothing products from the United Kingdom in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what percentage these figures are of those for the same months in the previous year.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The available figures are as follows:

United Kingdom exports of textiles and clothing by value

April	259·3
May	251·0
June	276·8

Milford Haven Docks Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received his inspectors' report on the affairs of the Milford Haven Docks Company; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The inspectors' report has not yet been submitted. A decision on publication will be taken when it has been received and its contents considered.

Dunsdale Securities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what dates and for what periods his Department authorised Dunsdale Securities to conduct business.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1990]: Dunsdale Securities Ltd. was first granted an annual licence to deal in securities on 7 November 1977. Further licences were granted each year until the Financial Services Act came into force on 29 April 1988.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what monitoring was carried out on the firm Dunsdale Securities during the period it was authorised for business by his Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1990]: Dunsdale Securities Ltd. provided duly completed monitoring returns to the Department from September 1983 until it ceased to be licensed by the Department, as required by the Licensed Dealers (Conduct of Business) Rules 1983. Prior to 1 June 1983, there was no requirement for companies to provide returns.

Criminal charges have been brought by the Serious Fraud Office against Mr. Miller, the director of Dunsdale Securities Ltd.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consult the Financial Reporting Council and other interested parties on the need for a statutory definition of true and fair in company accounts.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1990]: It is generally considered that the concept of "a true and fair view" is not readily susceptible of definition in a manner suitable for inclusion in a statute. However, I will draw the hon. Member's question to the attention of the Financial Reporting Council.

Chinese Imports

208. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take action (a) unilaterally and (b) through the EEC to deal with Chinese imports that infringe the basis of their duty free status.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

As explained in an earlier reply to a similar question, HM Customs and Excise undertakes verification inquiries on imports for which preferential treatment is claimed. Where infringements of the EEC origin rules are detected, appropriate action is taken which includes the charging of full duty.

There is regular exchange of information between the Customs authorities of all EEC member states about infringements of the preferential trade arrangements. That information is used in the control of preferential imports to the EEC.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the level of manufacturing investment in the north-east for each year since 1979 giving 1979 as 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available for investment expressed at constant prices because there are no regional price indices. The table provides the required indices for data at current prices:

Manufacturing investment in the north-east[1] at current prices and expressed as a percentage of the 1979 level

Year	Percentage
1980	76
1981	53
1982	55
1983	58
1984	69
1985	91
1986	82
1988	131

[1] The north-east is not a standard region of the United Kingdom but can be defined as the north less Cumbria. It comprises Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland and Tyne and Wear.

Sports Clubs (Television Rights)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will amend the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 to give protection to the governing bodies of sports clubs and associations regarding exclusive television agreements.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to amend the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 to give legal protection to governing bodies involved in sports events or to change the provisions relating to the copyright protection of television broadcasts.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mechanically Recovered Meat

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that all meat products containing mechanically recovered meat are labelled as such.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Labelling Regulations 1984 already require that where a food or an ingredient has undergone a specific treatment, reference to such treatment shall be included on the label if its omission could mislead the intending purchaser. It is for the decision of the courts whether mechanically recovered meat included in a meat product is subject to this rule.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animal test certificates are still in operation under the Medicines Act for BST, how many (a) farms and (b) cows the certificates cover; for how long the certificates are valid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently three animal test certificates. Each one is valid for two years and is renewable. They allow a maximum of 1,287 cows to be treated on 23 sites, although in practice many fewer cows are receiving BST at any one time.

White Tigers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the diagnosis of white tigers at Bristol zoo as suffering from spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Spongiform encephalopathy and other lesions were discribed in the brains of four out of six white tigers which died or were killed in Bristol zoo between 1970 and 1977. All six cases had a similar illness of between one and five months' duration with behavioural changes. The changes described by the authors did not resemble those seen in transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. Subsequently, mice and chimpanzees were inoculated with brain material from the tigers but none developed clinical signs suggestive of a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 458, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Maclean: The information previously supplied related to all departmental accommodation, not just office space. It related to an area of just under 600,000 sq m—about 6·5 million sq ft.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Ministry in the latest available year.

Mr. Maclean: A total of £40,000 was spent in the 1989-90 financial year specifically on energy-saving measures. Other maintenance and structural works also contributed to energy saving to a greater or lesser degree without this aspect being a separately identifiable element in the costs.

EC Surplus Food

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a method of distributing European Community surplus food that ensures all people who are entitled to receive this surplus food do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 19 March, Official Report, column 444. An announcement will shortly be made to the House of the names of the organisations that will be designated to distribute this food.

NATIONAL FINANCE

China (Imports)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to investigate infringement of the EEC's generalised system of preferences, country of origin rules in respect of imports from China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise checks the entitlement of imports from China to the beneficial rates of duty under the European Community generalised system of preferences. Some imports are selected for verification, and in the event of any infringement of the European Community origin rules appropriate action is taken, which includes the charging of full duty.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answers of 14 May, Official Report, column 274 and 30 April, Official Report, column 443, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Ryder: The square footage is as follows:

	sq ft
Government Offices Great George Street SW1	331,536
Chessington Computer Centre, Surrey	86,625
Alencon Link, Basingstoke, Hampshire	16,164
Grosvenor House, Basingstoke, Hampshire	11,851
Riverwalk House, London, SW1	66,851

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 30 April, Official Report, column 444, and 14 May, Official Report, column 274, if he will break down the figures for solid-liquid fuel into solid fuel and liquid fuel.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 22 June 1990]: The figures shown in both answers refer to liquid fuel.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy in the Library of the Treasury guidelines within which the process of receiving bids and the disposal of assets relating to the sale of the Skills Training Agency were carried out.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The general principles covering the disposal of assets are set out in "Government Accounting", a copy of which is in the Library. To ensure that the process of receiving and considering bids reflects best commercial practice, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte were employed as sale advisers. No general guidance was issued for the bidding process, but Treasury officials were consulted throughout.

Public Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the public sector surplus or borrowing for 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest forecast for the public sector debt repayment in 1990-91 is the Budget forecast of £6·9 billion.

Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the Government's borrowing requirement in May.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The public sector borrowing requirement in May is estimated to have been £1·7 billion.

Efficiency Unit

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in the Official Report a breakdown of the £1,300 million savings by Departments resulting from the work of the efficiency unit referred to in his speech to the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants on 9 May.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The figure of £1,300 million is a cumulative total of savings agreed by Departments as a result of over 350 scrutinies and multi-departmental reviews carried out since 1979 under the guidance of the Prime Minister's efficiency unit.

Scrutinies and the savings resulting from them are the responsibility of the departmental Minister concerned. However, I am informed by the efficiency unit that, in the period 1983-90, a period for which disaggregated information is readily available, the largest departmental contributors in absolute terms were the Employment Group, the Departments of Health and Social Security, the Ministry of Defence and the Inland Revenue.

Letters (Cornwall)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 27 March on behalf of Mrs. S. L. Penna, of Laurel Cottage, Greenwith Hill, Perranwell Station, Truro, Cornwall.

Mr. Lilley: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 25 June.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Police (Training)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been trained in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years from (i) Portugal and (ii) Greece; and in how many of these cases the cost of training was met from British public funds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1989, two Portuguese police officers attended training courses in the United Kingdom under central arrangements. The costs were met from public funds. No officers from Greece have made centrally arranged training visits in the last five years.

Animal Experiments

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number and names of research establishments where (a) cosmetic and (b) drug experiments on animals are conducted, the nature of the licence involved and the type of animals used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The safety testing of cosmetics on animals is authorised at six designated establishments. It is not possible to identify separately establishments at which work on pharmaceuticals is carried out, although research work on medical, dental and veterinary products or appliances involving the use of animals is authorised at about 170 designated establishments.

Details of the number of procedures for the safety testing of cosmetics and for research on medical, dental and veterinary products or appliances are published each year in table 3 and tables 1, 4, 7, 11, 12, and 13 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain" (1988 Cm. 743), a copy of which is in the Library.

It is not our practice to identify individual establishments by name.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many research establishments using live animals in experiments for cosmetic or drug purposes have had their licences rescinded in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None, other than at the request of the certificate holder.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest date available what was the certified normal accommodation and the actual population for each female prison in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information on certified normal accommodation and prison population at each of the prison establishments for females in England and Wales is as follows:

	CNA[1]	Population[2]
Askham Grange	134	111
Bullwood Hall	126	113
Cookham Wood	120	118
Drake Hall	288	226
Durham	40	35
East Sutton Park	84	81
Holloway	517	481
Low Newton	36	38
New Hall	122	96
Pucklechurch	56	45
Risley	92	98
Styal	208	188
Exeter	5	0

[1] Certified Normal Accommodation as at 11 March 1990.
[2] Population as at 22 June 1990.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners in England and Wales are classified as mentally ill or mentally disordered.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September 1989, the latest date for which information is available, 19 female prisoners in England and Wales were considered by medical officers to meet the criteria for detention in hospital as set out in the Mental Health Act 1983. Of these, 12 were considered to be mentally ill within the meaning of the Act.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities exist in female prisons in England and Wales to assist with visits from dependent children.

Mr. Mellor: All female prisons have facilities for inmates to receive visits from their dependent children, including in some establishments play areas with games and toys and baby changing and feeding facilities. As circumstances and resources permit, the opportunity is being taken to improve visits accommodation in prisons. We are also seeking to encourage the provision of visitors' reception centres. The assisted prison visits scheme can in certain circumstances provide financial assistance with the cost of visits by children to their mothers.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the basis of what energy consumption figures he will be monitoring progress towards the target of 15 per cent. reduction over five years.

Mr. Waddington: The basis for monitoring progress towards the target of 15 per cent. reduction over five years has been set by the Energy Efficiency Office at the Department of Energy. The actual consumption for 1989-90 will be the starting point and the consumption of all fuels will be converted to a common unit of kilowatt hours to enable direct overall comparisons to be made.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the consumption by prisons for each year from 1978-79 of (a) kWh of electricity, (b) therms of gas, (c) litres of liquid fuel and (d) tonnes of solid fuel;

(2) what was the spending by prisons for each year from 1978-79 on (a) electricity, (b) gas, (c) liquid fuels, (d) solid fuels and (e) all energy, expressing the spending in (i) money terms and (ii) real (1990) terms.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 5 June, at column 423.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Waddington: A total of £1·23 million was invested in the financial year 1989-90 in improving the energy efficiency of the prison service estate. I am not able to provide the information on the remainder of the Home Office estate, as the responsibility for most of it rests with the Property Services Agency at the Department of the Environment.

Immigration Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of letters unopened in the (a) postroom and (b) registry at Lunar house, Croydon and the nationality department at Liverpool on the first day of each month for (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is set out in the table:

Letters unopened in IND

	1988	1989	1990
January	47,469	976	4,726
February	56,067	779	7,663
March	53,091	2,192	6,996
April	33,347	2,982	3,471
May	7,053	940	5,244
June	545	2,371	4,437
July	226	1,630	—
August	491	855	—
September	253	1,932	—
October	2,889	4,498	—
November	3,281	8,732	—
December	173	4,772	—

On average, letters are being acknowledged within three days of receipt in the Department. There are no unopened letters in the Liverpool nationality office, since correspondence is opened immediately on arrival and passed direct to caseworkers.

Naturalisation Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cheques and postal orders were cashed on each day at his Department in May for applications for naturalisation; and what was the value of the cheques.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Naturalisation fees and registration fees are recorded together. The amounts brought to account on each day in May 1990 and the numbers of applications were as follows:

May	Applications (Number)	Total amount (£)	Value of Cheques	Postal orders	Cash
1	105	10,645	9,360	645	640
2	93	7,675	7,065	260	350
3	104	10,000	8,940	360	700

22	125	13,180	11,880	730	570
23	115	11,940	10,385	815	740
24	93	10,122	9,432	400	290
29	96	9,473	9,123	350	—
30	82	8,110	7,470	640	—
31	103	10,400	8,320	690	1,390
Totals	2,108	217,119	194,034	11,360	11,725

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time for dealing with the cases of (a) naturalisation, (b) variation of leave for visitors, (c) political asylum and (d) variation of leave for visitors who subsequently apply for indefinite leave.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table:

Estimated average length of time between the receipt of an application and the decision, for cases[1] decided in the first quarter of 1990

	Months
Applications for naturalisation	27
Application for variation of leave as a visitor	2
Application for refugee status	9½

[1] Includes, where relevant, cases decided in the Public Enquiry Office as well as in caseworking groups.

Nationality (Registration)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the new target date for the completion of all registration cases made under the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) on 21 March 1990, at column 634. At that time, we held some 18,000 transitional registration cases where a response from the applicant was awaited. That number has now reduced to 10,000. We cannot set a date for completing these applications as this will depend on how soon applicants respond. For the continuing classes of registration case, our aim is to reduce waiting times below 12 months as soon as practicable.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answers of 18 June, Official Report, columns 430-31, 10 May, Official Report, columns 197-98, and 30 April, Official Report, column 400, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Waddington: The square footage of the buildings is 3,445,664, but this is not all office space, as the buildings listed include offices, stores, laboratories and residential training facilities.

Trafalgar Square (Incidents)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by age, sex, offence, last known address, and prison, or place of confinement, those people remanded in custody following the incidents in Trafalgar square on 31 March, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the charges preferred against those arrested in connection with the disturbances in central London on 31 March and the readily available information about the age, sex and place of residence of the arrested and charged are set out in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 13 June at column 192. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the other information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Passports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports were held at the Home Office for each day of each month of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to amend the passport regulations to allow widows and widowers holding joint passports to continue to use them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The proviso that passports which include particulars of the holder's spouse are not available for use when the spouse (including a widowed spouse) is travelling alone accords with general international practice, and there are no plans to change it.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from hon. Members on individual immigration cases for each month of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For each month of 1990, written representations or queries from hon. Members on individual immigration cases have been received as follows:

	Number
January	532
February	508
March	510
April	430
May	512

Information on the number of representations made orally is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding applications for (a) naturalisation, (b) registration, (c) variation of leave and (d) asylum applications there were in each month of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to casework in B1 and B4 divisions in the immigration and nationality department and is as follows:

	Nationality		Variation of Leave[1]		Asylum and related casework[1,2]
	Naturalisation	Registration	General immigration casework	Eastern European casework
January	64,402	47,622	28,023	1,251	14,475
February	65,355	42,791	26,602	1,376	15,031
March	65,050	38,832	26,359	1,609	16,272
April	63,902	35,780	24,581	1,616	17,270
May	64,273	33,755	21,914	1,530	18,150

[1] The casework figures include referred entry clearance applications.
[2] These figures are a total of all work outstanding in the Refugee Unit.

Kurdish Refugees

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Central of 5 December 1989, ref. 28762/89, on Kurdish refugees.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the response has been delayed, and I shall reply to the hon. Member in the near future.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of entry clearance have been referred to him for each month of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available centrally.

Variation of Leave

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce fees for applications for variation of leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am considering how and when the provision for charging for indefinite leave to remain under section 9(1) of the Immigration Act 1988 might be implemented. An announcement will be made at the appropriate time. There are no present plans to introduce fees for applications for other variations of leave.

Distress Warrants

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of distress warrants issued by magistrates courts in 1989.

Mr. John Patten: This information will not be available until around the end of July.

Refugees from China (Permits)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees from the People's Republic of China have been granted (a) entry permits and (b) residence permits since 4 June 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table.

Grants[1] of refugee status or exceptional leave since 4 June 1989 to Chinese nationals who have applied for refugee status

	Number
Granted refugee status	37
Granted exceptional leave	11

[1] Provisional figures which may be underestimates.

These figures do not include Chinese nationals who apply to remain here on an exceptional basis, and are being allowed to stay under the terms of the announcement to the House on 20 December 1989 at column 274.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each local authority those voluntary organisations in receipt of section 11 funding, money from crime prevention schemes or any other projects administered by his Department.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 22 June 1990]: Under present arrangements, section 11 funding may be paid only to local authorities. Although posts funded in this way may be based in voluntary organisations no collected information is kept of such posts.

Grants under the safer cities programme are currently made in 16 local authority areas and I will write to the hon. Member with a list of the voluntary organisations that have received funding to date.

Most Home Office grants to voluntary organisations and projects are not allocated by reference to local authority area. The latest available information about Home Office grants was given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 11 May at column 254.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

85. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was last in communication with Nirex regarding possible sites for a nuclear waste repository.

86. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was last in communication with Nirex regarding possible sites for a nuclear waste repository.

87. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was last in communication with Nirex regarding possible sites for a nuclear waste repository.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not yet been in communication with United Kingdom Nirex. His predecessor last met senior representatives of Nirex on 15 March 1989. Officials are frequently in contact with Nirex on various matters.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money his Department is spending on research into the storage, treatment, handling and transport of nuclear waste.

Mr. Trippier: My Department plans to spend about £9 million in the current financial year on radioactive waste management research, including the storage, treatment and handling of nuclear waste. The transport of radioactive materials is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Second Homes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of second homes for each local authority in Britain, on the basis of information collected for the community charge.

Mr. Portillo: I am at present collecting estimates of the number of properties giving rise to a standard community charge.

Suffolk and Norfolk Broads

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the working of the Suffolk and Norfolk Broads Act 1987, and particularly the planning aspect.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Broads Authority submits its five-yearly management plan, annual comprehensive work programmes and quarterly grant-in-aid information to the Department.

Waste Management Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution was made by his Department to the 92nd annual waste management conference held on 12 to 15 June.

Mr. Trippier: I was pleased to address the 92nd conference of the Institute of Waste Management on 12 June. Officials from the Department were present for the rest of the conference.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals Her Majesty's Government are putting to the second meeting of parties to the Montreal protocol on ozone-depleting substances in London on 20 to 29 June.

Mr. Trippier: The European Community negotiating position, based on that of the United Kingdom, is as follows:

CFCs: 50 per cent. cut on 1986 levels by 1991-92; 85 per cent. by 1995-96; phase out by 1997 or at least before 2000. Halons: 50 per cent. cut by 1995; phase out by 2000 except for a limited number of essential uses. Methyl chloroform: 25 per cent. cut by 1994; 50 per cent. by 2000; consideration in 1994 of further and faster cuts. Carbon tetrachloride: 50 per cent. cut by 1991-92; phase out by 2000.

UN Environment Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he intends to put forward at the United Nations Environment Programme governing council meeting in Nairobi on 1 to 3 August.

Mr. Trippier: I shall be attending the special session of the United Nations Environment Programme governing council from 1 to 3 August which will consider priority evolving environmental issues. I will be calling for international support for action on major issues such as climate change, the ozone layer and biodiversity. I will also seek to ensure that the governing council sends a strong message to the preparatory committee for the 1992 United Nations conference on environment and development about the major issues facing the world today.

Letters (Cornwall)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a response to the letter forwarded to his Department on 5 March on behalf of Mrs. Barbara Toyne, of 24 Penmere crescent, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Mr. Chope: I replied to my hon. Friend on 16 May.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a response to the letter forwarded to his Department on 18 April on behalf of Mrs. G. M. Prowse, of 1 Woodview, Woodland avenue, Penryn, Cornwall.

Mr. Chope: I replied to my hon. Friend on 15 June.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a response to the letter forwarded to his Department on 23 April on behalf of Mr. A. R. Jago, of 5 Lister street, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Mr. Chope: I replied to my hon. Friend on 15 June.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Liverpool of the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities.

Mr. Portillo: I visited Liverpool on 14 May and 21 June. On the first visit, I met the dean of the Anglican cathedral, to see the development being carried out on the precinct site, below the cathedral, and to hear the dean's ideas for future initiatives in the area. I was encouraged by what I saw and heard. I then visited the Granby-Toxteth task force, and had a quick tour of the area with its leader, before touring the Liverpool part of the Merseyside development corporation's area.

During my visit on 21 June, I met the leaders of the Princes Park and Granby community council. The group recognised the value of programmes being carried by central and local government, but expressed the view that the Toxteth area was not benefiting and that there could be better co-ordination of the programmes of the statutory agencies active in the area, and improvements in consultation with the local community. I found it a helpful and positive meeting. I then met the board of the Merseyside development corporation, to discuss its recently published strategy and its future policies and programmes. I was impressed by the achievements of the corporation so far, and I encouraged it to continue to take a vigorous and dynamic role in its much-expanded area.

I look forward to visiting Merseyside frequently in future, in my roles as Minister with special responsibility for the Liverpool city action team and the Granby-Toxteth task force.

Incinerators

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to bring forward in response to his Department's study of municipal incinerators, carried out by Warren Spring laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am considering an investigation to determine which incinerators can or will be modified to meet the new European regulations on emissions.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider the fire certificate threshold of six letting bedspaces as a starting point for the imposition of uniform business rate;

(2) if he will seek powers to change the limit of 100 days of opening below which accommodation operators will not be subject to uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope: We have received a number of representations which argue that the threshold at which bed-and-breakfast accommodation provided in an individual's own home comes into non-domestic rating is inappropriate. We are at present considering these representations, and whether there is any case for altering existing provisions.

Water Charges

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet the Director General of Water Services to discuss the workings of the water and sewerage infrastructure charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the Director General of Water Services. The detailed application of infrastructure charges is a matter for individual water and sewerage companies, within the terms of their instruments of appointment. It is the responsibility of the director general to ensure that individual companies are complying with their terms and conditions of appointment.

Water Quality

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all independent research bodies that are carrying out public interest work on water quality and supply, funded by his Department.

Mr. Trippier: During the 1990-91 financial year, the following independent research bodies will be carrying out research on water quality and supply for the Department:

Water Research Centre (1989) plc
Hydraulics Research Ltd.
Altwell Chemistry Ltd.
Public Health Laboratory Service
North West Water Ltd.
Natural Environment Research Council
—Plymouth Marine Laboratory
—Institute of Freshwater Ecology —Institute of Hydrology
Brunel University
University of Dundee
Atomic Energy Authority Technology

Management Information System

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to place a copy of MINIS 11 in the Library; and if he will make a statement on its conclusions.

Mr. Chris Patten: I expect to place a copy of MINIS 11 in the Library by the summer recess.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, columns 189-90 and 30 April, Official Report, columns 382-83, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Chris Patten: The amount of office space to which the figures in my earlier answers relate is 1,209,645 sq ft. This area excludes specialised sites such as the royal parks and palaces which were included in the consumption and expenditure figures but to which the concept area is not appropriate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the consumption by the Property Services Agency for the civil estate of (a) kWh of electricity, (b) therms of gas, (c) litres of liquid fuel and (e) tonnes of solid fuel for each year from 1978-79 to 1989-90, breaking the figures down by Government Department;

(2) what was the spending by the Property Services Agency for the civil estate on (a) electricity, (b) gas, (c) liquid fuels, (d) solid fuels and (e) all energy, expressed in (i) money terms and (ii) real 1989-90 terms for each year from 1978-79 to 1989-90, broken down by Government Department as far as possible.

Mr. Chope: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Expenditure on energy efficiency measures within my Department for 1989-90 is estimated to have totalled £120,000.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will extend the categories of persons receiving transitional relief for community charge to include the registered disabled.

Mr. Chope: Registered disabled people are not excluded from transitional relief and some may be eligible for extra help. All charge payers, including disabled people, may be eligible for relief where the assumed community charge for the area exceeds the assumed rates bill for 1989-90 by more than £156 a year. In addition, for disabled people who did not previously pay rates or who were not the partner of someone paying rates, extra relief may be available on any amount of assumed community charge that exceeds £156 a year.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to monitor capital and revenue spending on sport, recreation and leisure services in local authorities following the introduction of the new capital control system for local authorities.

Mr. Chope: Information on local authority spending on sport, recreation and leisure is collected as part of regular statistical returns by authorities. Relevant budget information on revenue spending has now been submitted by most authorities. We plan to collect information on capital expenditure which separately identifies 1990-91 spending on sport and recreation when local authorities report their outturn expenditure after the end of the financial year.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the estimated cost of allowing transitional relief for community charge to all persons who are registered disabled.

Mr. Chope: Disabled people who were formerly ratepayers qualify for transitional relief on the same basis as other charge payers. Extra help is available for disabled, and elderly, people who were not formerly ratepayers, nor the spouse of a former ratepayer. No estimate is available for the cost of extending the extra help to all persons who are registered disabled.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place on the proposed changes to the community charge in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government have not brought forward any proposals for changes to the community charge.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase Government assistance to local authorities to reduce the community charge bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on 17 May, Official Report, column 508.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many suggested alternatives he has received for amending the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I continue to receive suggestions on all aspects of local government finance.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the local authority organisations to discuss possible changes to the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the main local authority associations on 21 May, when these matters were discussed. Since then there have been a number of informal meetings with association chairmen.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement about proposed changes in the poll tax legislation.

Mr. Chope: The Government have already announced that they intend to bring forward legislation to amend the law on the standard community charge as it relates to caravans.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend universal community charge-capping powers over all local authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the capital value rates bill payable on a property in Ealing worth (a) £50,000, (b) £80,000 and (c) £100,000 in the current year assuming a rate to raise the same amount of money as with the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Figures placed in the Library on 4 April show illustrative levels of capital value based rates in 1990-91 were such a system to be used to raise the same amount nationally as the community charge. The implied bills in Ealing for properties worth (a) £50,000, (b) £80,000 and (c) £100,000 are £567, £907 and £1,134 respectively.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of local authorities which received standard spending grant and other grants from central funds which were 50 per cent. or more greater per capita than that secured by Rotherham.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Twenty-four authorities are expected to receive revenue support grants and other revenue grants from central funds in 1990-91 which were 50 per cent. or more greater per capita than that secured by Rotherham. The authorities are as follows:

Newcastle-Upon-Tyne
Bradford
Knowsley
Birmingham
Liverpool
Manchester
City of London
Lewisham
Greenwich
Hammersmith and Fulham
Wandsworth
Southwark
Camden
Lambeth
Westminster
Kensington and Chelsea
Islington
Hackney
Tower Hamlets
Waltham Forest
Ealing
Haringey
Brent
Newham

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the community charge levied, the standard spending grant given and the total of other grants from central funds for all local authorities which have fixed personal community charges of below £280.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The information for 1990-91 is as follows:

	Average Charge £	Revenue Support Grant £ million	Safety Net £ million	Special Grants[1] £ million	Specific Grants £ million
Bradford	276	157·8	9·8	8·1	64·6

[2] Budget returns are not yet available for south Herefordshire and York.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many ratepayers were summoned for non-payment of rates in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and to March 1990.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 June 1990]: Figures published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting on the number of summonses issued by local authorities in England for non-payment of rates are as follows. These figures do not contain returns from every authority and I have therefore indicated the response rate in each year.

Year	Number of summonses	Response rate (per cent.)
1984-85	1,107,000	96
1985-86	1,147,000	95
1986-87	1,189,349	93
1987-88	1,112,970	85
1988-89	1,102,148	84

Figures for 1989-90 are not yet available.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases have been brought by local authorities to date through the magistrates courts against their charge payers under the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 June 1990]: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authorities are employing (a) their own bailiffs, (b) certificated bailiffs and (c) non-certificated bailiffs to enforce the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it mandatory for local authorities to use only certificated bailiffs to enforce community charge debt through magistrates courts under the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 June 1990]: The rules governing enforcement are clearly set out in the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989. The number and type of bailiffs employed by a local authority is entirely a matter for the authority. My Department's detailed practice note for local authorities on enforcement advised that an authority considering using private sector bailiffs should take up references and ensure that the firm and its employees are reputable and qualified.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what periods of time a merchant seaman must be resident in each of the local authorities in England and Wales before being made eligible for community charge; what guidelines are issued to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 June 1990]: It is initially the responsibility of the individual community charges registration officer to decide whether a person is solely or mainly resident in his area and therefore subject to a community charge. My Department issued guidelines suggesting that merchant seamen be treated in a way consistent with their royal naval counterparts. These informal, non-statutory, guidelines suggest that a home-owning seaman might be deregistered if he is away on board ship for a period in excess of six continuous months, while a single seaman with no permanent address will not be registered for the charge unless he spends periods on shore in excess of 61 days. If a person feels aggrieved by a decision on their sole or main residence then they can appeal to his or her local valuation and community charge tribunal.

Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail in percentage terms water pollution in the Bristol channel for the different sorts of pollution and polluter.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is not possible to quantify water pollution in the Bristol channel in percentage terms. Details of discharges to controlled waters, as defined under the Water Act, are held on the public registers maintained by the National Rivers Authority. Details of licences issued for waste disposal at sea are held on the public register of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Further information on water quality including the quality of fish and shellfish is available in the reports compiled by MAFF in the "Aquatic Environment Monitoring" series. These are available in the Library of the House.

Environment White Paper

Mr Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all those organisations which have made submissions in advance of the Government White Paper on the environment; and if he will deposit in the Library copies of submissions not expressly marked confidential.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have welcomed written and oral contributions from a wide range of individuals and organisations, including the following:

Mineral Extraction

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against licences for mineral extraction he has considered each year for which records are available.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department records appeals made under sections 36 and 37 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 involving mineral extraction. The number of such appeals decided in each year for which records are available, is as follows:

Year	Appeals decided
[1]1985	18
1986-87	37
1987-88	36
1988-89	43
1989-90	41

[1] After 1985, records are available only for financial years.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the decision was taken to include in table 3.2b of the United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory uncommitted low-level waste arisings.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 March 1990, Official Report, column 12.

Rural Disadvantage

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts of social policy expenditure have been allocated by his Department and its agencies to combat rural disadvantages.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Rural Development Commission, which is the Government's principal agency in England for carrying forward our policies on the rural economy, is developing and implementing a wide range of initiatives which deal with economic and social problems in the countryside. The Commission's expenditure on its social programmes in 1989-90 was £4·7 million.

District Councils (Searches for Solicitors)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the length of time taken by district councils (a) nationally and (b) in Staffordshire to conduct searches for solicitors.

Mr. Chope: Ministers at the Department of the Environment receive occasional representations about the length of time taken by district councils to conduct searches. No recent representation has referred specifically to a council in Staffordshire.

Local Government Salaries

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he estimates would be added to the local government wage bill if all local government employees were paid at least two thirds of the national average wage in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1990]: My hon. Friend may want an estimate of the cost of paying two thirds of the national average wage to those local authority employees earning less than this figure, or he may also want account to be taken of the consequences for those earning more than this figure, who will want to maintain differentials. However, on either basis, I regret the information is not available centrally.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the London borough of Greenwich has applied for permission to run a portable discount scheme for local authority tenants in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The London borough of Greenwich's bid for resources under the 1990-91 homelessness initiative originally included proposals for a portable discount scheme. This element of the bid was subsequently withdrawn by the council. There is, however, no reason why the council should not consider running a portable discount scheme without such special funding, using its own resources.

Denitrification

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research which he has commissioned into denitrification technology; what reports he has received; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The Department has been involved with research into denitrification processes as follows:

(1) 1972-74, research by the Metropolitan Water Board, Middle Lee Main Drainage Department and the Water Pollution Research Laboratory into the denitrification of sewage effluent by the modified activated sludge process (part funding);

(2) 1973-75, research by the Water Research Centre into denitrification by ion-exchange and biological processes;

(3) 1977-79, field studies by the Anglian Water Authority of ion-exchange denitrification using fixed bed and experimental continuous loop plants (part funding);

(4) 1980-82, field trials by the Anglian Water Authority of fluidised bed biological denitrification plant (part funding);

(5) 1987, review by Consultants in Environmental Science Limited of the effects of nitrate removal on water quality in distribution; and collection of information on the operation of denitrification plants in Europe and the United States of America;

(6) 1988-89, studies by the Cranfield Institute of Science and Technology of the combined use of ion-exchange and biological denitrification processes (part funding);

(7) 1988-89, project by the Cranfield Institute of Science and Technology to develop a computer model of the ion-exchange process for optimum operation;

(8) 1990, studies by the Water Research Centre to improve the biological denitrification process.

Reports in various forms on all the projects were received, but not all are readily available.

I am arranging for copies of reports on projects (5) and (7) to be placed in the Library of the House.

New Homes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase the number of homes built in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The Government do not attempt to forecast output of private housebuilders, who build some 85 per cent. of new houses. Output of subsidised dwellings by housing associations financed by the Housing Corporation in England is expected to rise substantially between 1989-90 and 1990-91, more than offsetting an expected decline in new housebuilding by local authorities.

Toxic Waste

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the ports that received toxic waste in each year since 1987, the quantity of such waste imported, the composition of the waste, and the country of origin and ultimate destination of the waste.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The information is available in the detail required only since the introduction of Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. Provisional figures for imports of hazardous wastes through English ports in the year to 31 March 1990 by country of origin and destination, and by waste disposal authority, are as follows. Figures for types of waste imported are summarised, as information for individual ports is not available in a concise form.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Legislation

81. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the revised arrangements for considering EEC legislation will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In the light of the House's forthcoming debate on the Procedure Committee's report on the scrutiny of European legislation and the Government's response to it, the Government will table motions to make the necessary detailed amendments to Standing Orders. The Government hope that the new arrangements will operate from the start of the next Session.

Natural History Museum

84. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make space available in the Palace of Westminster for an exhibition of the palaeontological, palaeo-botany and diatom work of the natural history museum.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Upper Waiting Hall is available for Members wishing to arrange for an exhibition to be held there. The procedures agreed by the Services Committee are set out in the leaflet "Exhibitions in the Upper Waiting Hall" and I am arranging for a copy to be sent the hon. Member.

Oral Questions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward a motion to approve the recommendations of the Select Committee on Procedure's first report of Session 1989-90 on oral questions.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I hope to do so shortly so that, if the House agrees, the recommendations can take effect from the start of the next Session.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to the answers of 30 April, Official Report, column 406 and 10 May, Official Report, column 199, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Privy Council Office covers 15,372 sq ft. This area includes office and storage space, and courtroom of the Judicial Committee.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of the Privy Council Office in the latest available year.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No specific part of the Privy Council Office vote is dedicated to improving energy efficiency, but staff are encouraged to be economical in their use of energy resources.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West, 24 May, Official Report, column 297, if he will make it his policy to ensure that (a) the staff unions and (b) the staff creche committee are consulted about the design and operation of the feasibility study of the provision of child care facilities in the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Extensive consultations over the past few years in relation to the provision of child care facilities have clearly identified the nature of provision desired by both groups to which the hon. Member refers. They will, however, be given the opportunity to update their observations once the feasibility study has been completed.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Duties

75. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many official visits he has made as Chancellor of the Duchy since last replying to questions in the House.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: One.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Marginal Tax Rates

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the marginal tax rate incurred by a combination of income tax, national insurance, housing benefit rent withdrawal taper, and the community charge benefit withdrawal taper in 1990; and what is the contribution of each of these to the total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The marginal tax-benefit withdrawal rate on additional gross income for someone paying standard rate income tax, and national insurance contributions, and receiving both a rent rebate and community charge benefit is 86·8 per cent., from April 1990, where the earner is not contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme; and 86·4 per cent. where the earner is contracted out. These overall withdrawal rates break down as follows:

Percentage of additional gross income

	Per cent.
Contracted In
Income tax	25
National insurance	9
Reduced entitlement to income related benefits
Rent rebate taper	42·9
Community charge benefit taper	9·9
Contracted Out
Income tax	25
National insurance	7
Reduced entitlement to income related benefits
Rent rebate taper	44·2
Community charge benefit taper	10·2

Note: Rent rebate and community charge benefit entitlement is calculated on the basis of net income, after deduction of tax and national insurance contributions. The withdrawal tapers applied to additional net income are 65 per cent. for rent rebate and 15 per cent. for community charge benefit.

War Widows

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will supplement the pensions of war widows whose husbands, while holding United Kingdom citizenship, were killed in the service of a Commonwealth country, whose pensions they now receive, to bring them up to the level of war widows whose husbands were killed while serving in the United Kingdom armed forces;

(2) if he will supplement the pensions of war widows whose husbands, while holding United Kingdom citizenship, were killed in the service of a Commonwealth country during either of the world wars and whose pensions they now receive, to bring them up to the level of war widows whose husbands were killed while serving in the United Kingdom armed forces.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The pensions paid to war widows by other countries are matters for those countries. There is no provision under the war pensions scheme to pay pensions to widows of men who died as a result of service in the armed forces of another country.

Deaf People

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has carried out into the additional costs that deaf people face.

Mr. Scott: The Government commissioned the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to carry out major surveys of disability in Great Britain between 1985 and 1988. The reports include information about the additional costs incurred by people with a range of disabilities, including hearing. The six OPCS reports of the surveys' findings are in the Library. A follow-up study to the family expenditure survey has been carried out to compare the actual spending of disabled and non-disabled people, and the results of that study will be published shortly.

Residential Homes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 36, on residential homes, if he will make available such information as is available to him on this subject.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The average total number of income support recipients in residential care homes and nursing homes whose recorded fees were below the appropriate income support limit for the period November 1988 to August 1989 was 22,000 rounded to the nearest thousand. This represents just over one eighth of the average total claimants in such homes in that period.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for income support were received during the last financial year from residents of care homes which had been transferred from local authority to independent management or ownership;

(2) what guidance has been issued by his Department as to the eligibility for income support of residents in care homes managed by charitable trusts set up by local authorities.

Mr. Scott: Eligibility for income support is defined by regulations, which provide that benefit is available in respect of fees, up to certain limits, to residents of registered residential care homes and certain other types of homes. Independent adjudication officers are provided with guidance on the interpretation of the regulations by the chief adjudication officer in the adjudication officers' guide, but no specific guidance has been given on this point. Information on numbers of people living in transferred homes who have claimed income support is not available centrally.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many doctors are employed by his Department for the purpose of assessing attendance allowance and mobility allowance claims in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; on what basis they are employed; what salaries or fees they receive; and whether such payments are related to the number of claimants they examine.

Mr. Scott: The numbers of doctors who carry out examinations of claimants to attendance and mobility allowances in the areas mentioned are: (a) Inverclyde—30, (b) Strathclyde—428, (c) Scotland—982. The work is of a casual nature, the available cases being allocated among the doctors who are available and have been trained in the work. Payment is from a scale of fees agreed between the Treasury and the medical profession's representatives. A fee is paid for each case completed, individual case fees depending on the time taken to deal with that case.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average and what is the longest delay in hearing of appeals against refusals of mobility allowances, during each of the last five six-month periods for which records are available.

Mr. Scott: Appeals against refusal of mobility allowance can be made to a social security appeal tribunal if the decision was not on medical grounds and to a medical appeal tribunal on medical questions. Information about these appeals is not available in the form requested. The national average clearance times, during the last 10 quarters, for appeals on mobility allowance to social security appeal tribunals, from date of lodgment to hearing, were as follows:

Quarter ending	Weeks
30 June 1987	19·1
30 September 1987	20·6
31 December 1987	20·1
31 March 1988	23·3
30 June 1988	20·1
30 September 1988	20·3
31 December 1988	20·8
31 March 1989	21·8
30 June 1989	18·8
30 September 1989	17·6

The Department has recently began compiling information on the clearance times for appeals to medical appeal tribunals, but this has not been running long enough to provide representative figures. Information about the time taken to have a hearing on an appeal to a medical board is not kept.

Information about the longest delay in hearing any of these types of appeal can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole are entitled to poll tax rebate based on claims for refund of rebate received from Strathclyde regional council and other regional and island councils; and what percentage of poll tax payers this represents in (a), (b) and (c) above.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The caseload returns made by regional councils do not provide information separately for parliamentary constituencies and district councils. The latest available caseload information for Strathclyde regional council shows that at the end of February 1990 about 490,000 community charge rebate cases were in payment—(counting rebates to couples as one case). The latest 1989-90 caseload estimate for Scotland is 930,000. The total number of individual charge payers receiving help with the community charge is not collected. It is not, therefore, possible to show the proportion of individual charge payers helped by benefit.

Office Relocation

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress on the relocation work from local offices to Glasgow.

Mr. Newton: I am pleased to announce that relocation of all backroom work from the first cluster of four London offices—Ealing, Southall, Acton and Notting Hill—to the social security centre was completed on schedule on 18 June 1990.

My Department recently undertook an evaluation study to establish whether the initiative had resulted in an improved service to our London customers. The results were most encouraging. Claims are being processed much more accurately. The error rate has fallen significantly from 29 to 9 per cent. Work is also being dealt with faster. The average time taken to clear a claim has been reduced by 50 per cent., from 11 days to five days. Caller waiting times have also been reduced, and a sampling exercise revealed that, already, between a third and half of customers have noticed an improvement in the quality of service provided. It is also encouraging that these improvements have been made against a background of greater efficiency: the cost of processing a unit of benefit has reduced by half, from £12 to £6. I am arranging to place a copy of the evaluation study in the Library.

Invalidity Pension

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received on the question of members who serve on local authorities and are in receipt of invalidity pension having the invalidity pension disregarded when assessing the payment of allowances etc. for serving on their local council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has considered disregarding the payment of invalidity pension for those members who serve on local authorities and are disabled, when assessing payment of allowances to councillors; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has discussed with local authority organisations the question of the disregard of invalidity pension for members of local authorities who are in receipt of invalidity benefit when receiving allowances for local government duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The question of entitlement to local authority allowances is the prerogative of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and is a matter over which we have no jurisdiction. I understand, however, that invalidity benefit has no bearing on the amount of local authority allowances payable.

Entitlement to invalidity benefit is dependent upon a person being incapable of work and is not, therefore, normally payable where any work is performed. However, following discussions with hon. Members and councillors' representatives special arrangements were introduced for councillors. These provide that councillors can receive invalidity benefit in full in addition to any local authority allowances to which they are entitled up to the level of the therapeutic earnings limit—currently £35 per week. Where local authority allowances for any week exceed this limit, invalidity benefit is reduced only by the excess. These arrangements have operated since May 1987 and continue unchanged.

Social Fund

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of income support claimants are living below the appropriate scale rate of benefit because they are repaying social fund, or benefit overpayments, or fuel arrears (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) in each local Department of Social Security office area.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of successful social fund applicants are in paid employment (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) in each local Department of Social Security office area.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not collected.

Letters (Cornwall)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 7 April, on behalf of Mr. T. G. Harry, of 20 Barripper road, Camborne, Cornwall.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I replied to my hon. Friend on 22 May.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 7 April on behalf of Mr. P. McKenna, of 8 Greenfield terrace, Portreath, Redruth, Cornwall, reference POS (3) 2223/240;

(2) when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a reply to his letter of 28 February on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Thomas of 19 Castle View Park, Mawnan Smith, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I replied to my hon. Friend on 20 June.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there are any plans to harmonise retirement pensions in the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to harmonise retirement pensions in the European Community.

Debt Recovery

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 53, whether his Department makes any distinction in its treatment of debt collection between moneys owed by (a) current social security beneficiaries and (b) former social security beneficiaries, liable relatives and national insurance contributors.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department undertakes a wide range of debt recovery work and seeks to do so in the most cost-effective way possible. The action taken will depend upon the nature of the debt, the individual circumstances of the debtor and the legal powers available. In the case of current beneficiaries, for example, it is possible to recover sums due by deductions from benefit.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he is having with disablement groups regarding the proposal to introduce a disability employment credit; and when he last met the Disablement Income Group.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how he proposes formally to consult disability organisations on his proposals outlined in "The Way Ahead—Benefits for Disabled People";

(2) when he expects to publish draft proposals for the disability employment credit.

Mr. Scott: We regularly meet the disability organisations to discuss a wide range of issues. I met the Disability Benefits Consortium—an umbrella group representing over 250 disability organisations including the Disablement Income Group—on 5 April in the second of a series of meetings to discuss their views on "The Way Ahead".

The proposals for a disability employment credit were outlined in "The Way Ahead"; the Government propose to implement these proposals by bringing forward legislation at an early opportunity.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will continue to answer parliamentary questions on the full range of social security issues after the proposed executive agencies for social security are established.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 6 June, at column 615.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimates of the proportion of (a) pensioner households, (b) households with dependent children and (c) other households who are taking up their entitlement to housing benefit, showing the division between council tenants and others.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 29 March at column 300.

Community Charge (Members' Questions)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the reasons why he was unable to reply until 14 June to the priority written questions about community charge rebates tabled by the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton for answer on 23 May; and what steps he takes to ensure that answers are provided on the day selected by an hon. Member for priority answer.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All questions for priority written answer by this Department are answered on the specified day, although some may not receive a full reply on that day. Out of over 1,000 questions tabled for priority written answer this Session, fewer than 150 have been given holding replies: these are given only where the information requested is so detailed or complex that a full reply cannot be provided in the time allowed by the hon. Member concerned. Neither of the questions on community charge rebates tabled by my hon. Friend for answer on 23 May was straightforward. A costing was made as quickly as possible in reply to one question. In the case of the other question, detailed consideration led to the conclusion that no estimate was possible.

Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for (a) a single pensioner and (b) pensioner couples showing the effects of community charge benefit on their net weekly incomes, assuming a community charge of (i) £300, (ii) £400 and (iii) £500, and weekly incomes other than the relevant state basic pension of £10, £20, £30, £40, £50, £60, £70, £80, £90, £100, £150 and £200.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 17 May 1990]: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Home Ownership (Pensioners)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the proportion of retirement pensioners who own their own homes (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in those other European Community member states for which information is available.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Comparative information for owner-occupation by age categories appears in table 10.24 of the Building Societies Association's "Housing In Britain", which is in the Library. More recent figures available for some countries are as follows:

Percentage of owner-occupiers among households with a head aged 65 years or over

Country	1984	1985
Great Britain	47	49
Netherlands	—	32
West Germany	—	40
France	56	—

Note:
The West German figure of 63 per cent. for this age category in 1982 appearing in the BSA publication should read 33 per cent.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the proportion of retirement pensioners (a) aged over 75 years and (b) aged 65 to 70 years who (i) own their own homes and (ii) have income from occupational or private pensions.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The available estimates are from the 1988 general household survey and the 1988 family expenditure survey and are as follows.

Age of head of household	[1] Percentage who are owner occupiers	[2] Percentage with income from occupational or private pension
70 to 74	53	57
75 or over	48	49

[1] Source: 1988 General Household Survey (Great Britain).
[2] Source: 1988 Family Expenditure Survey (United Kingdom). Includes covenants and annuities.

The two surveys used as sources do not cover the institutional population, and so exclude people in nursing homes, rest homes or residents permanently in hospital.

WALES

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with glaucoma and diabetes received free eye tests in Wales (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The data requested were not collected centrally before 1 April 1989, since when they have been collected on a six-monthly basis.

The available information is given as follows:

	Estimated[1] number of sight tests paid for by Family Practitioner Committees in the six months ending
	30 September 1989	31 March 1990
Persons aged over 40 who are relatives of glaucoma suffers	2,950	4,910

[1] Estimates based upon a 2 per cent. sample of all such sight tests.

Skomer Marine Nature Reserve

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of his negotiations with the Welsh Yachting Association over the establishment of a marine nature reserve at Skomer.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The draft order in respect of the Skomer marine nature reserve was published in March 1990. Three representations were received during the statutory 28-day objection period including one from the Welsh Yachting Association. The points raised by the representations have been resolved and all the representations have since been withdrawn. We are therefore now proceeding with the designation of the area as a marine nature reserve in accordance with the requirements of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Education Act 1981 (Appeals)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of appeals received under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 by local education authority; and what were the decisions taken by the appeals tribunal for each year from April 1983.

Mr. Grist: Appeals under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 are made directly to the Secretary of State. Four appeals have been made since April 1983 and in two cases the local education authority concerned was directed to reconsider its decision not to complete a statement of special educational need. The details are:

Local education authority	Year	Number
West Glamorgan	1983	1
Gwent	1986	1
South Glamorgan	1987	2

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of appeals received under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 by local education authority; and what were the decisions taken by the appeals tribunal for each year from April 1983.

Mr. Grist: Appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 are made directly to the Secretary of State. Nine appeals have been made since April 1983. The Secretary of State found in favour of the local education authorities in respect of seven cases; the remaining two are still under consideration. The details are:

Local education authority	Year	Number
Clwyd, Mid Glamorgan	1985	2
Clwyd, South Glamorgan	1987	2
West Glamorgan	1988	1
Gwynedd, South Glamorgan	1989	2
Clwyd, Gwynedd	1990	2

Disabled Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of students with disabilities who have entered initial teacher training in Wales for each of the last 10 years; and what percentage of the total number of student teachers these represent.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers with disabilities are currently employed in each local education authority in Wales; and what steps his Department is taking to increase the numbers of teachers with disabilities.

Mr. Grist: Information on the numbers of teachers with disabilities is not held centrally. The initiatives being taken by the Government to increase the supply of teachers are directed at all prospective teachers, including those with disabilities.

Schools (Access)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific funding has been available to Welsh local education authorities to enable access to school and college buildings for pupils and teachers with disabilities in each of the last 10 years; and if he has any plans to make specific grants available to local education authorities to carry out necessary capital works to facilitate physical access for people with disabilities.

Mr. Grist: Under the arrangements agreed with local authorities in Wales, capital resources are not hypothecated to specific services. It is for the authorities themselves to determine priorities between and within services, and therefore to decide how much to spend on facilitating physical access to educational buildings for people with disabilities.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he gives to local education authorities in Wales on the standards of access for people with disabilities for new designs for and adaptations to school and college buildings; and whether he will consult interested parties regarding statutory provision for standards of access for new school and college buildings.

Mr. Grist: Guidance is given to local education authorities in design note No. 18 (1984) "Access for disabled people to Educational Buildings" and in building bulletin 61. The design note is based on the recommendations of a working party comprising representatives of interested parties.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nursery, primary and secondary schools in Wales are fully accessible to pupils and teachers with disabilities; what are these figures as percentages of the total number of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not held centrally.

Clwyd TEC

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to enable Alyn and Deeside district council to have direct representation upon the Clwyd TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The Government's White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" said that training and enterprise councils were to be employer-led. Two thirds of the directors, including the chairman, must be local business leaders from the private sector. The balance may be drawn from other sectors including local authorities, but this is for individual TECs to determine. The TECs will need to work closely with all relevant groups in the community, including the local authorities, and must demonstrate that they have widespread support before their plans will be approved.

Deeside High School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet (a) Shotton town council, (b) Queensferry community council and (c) Haversden community council to hear their views concerning the proposed closure of Deeside high school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 7 February 1990, column 661.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the expected date or dates for implementation of the provisions of the Children Act 1989 in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Some minor provisions covering the admissibility of hearsay evidence, the meaning of "parent" for certain provisions of the Child Care Act 1980 pending its repeal, and tests to establish paternity came into effect on Royal Assent to the Children Act on 16 November 1989. An amendment to the Education Act 1981 in respect of provision outside England and Wales for certain children came into force on 17 January 1990. We expect to bring the remaining provisions into force in October 1991.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make a decision on community health council reform in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I hope to announce a decision shortly.

Obstetric Accidents

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of recent evidence published in the British Medical Journal of 26 May on the causes of certain obstetric accidents, he will undertake a review of the training of junior doctors in Wales in relation to foetal heart monitoring and the use of obstetric forceps.

Mr. Grist: Standards of training are laid down by the General Medical Council and the content of training programmes for junior doctors in this specialty is essentially a matter for the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes the independent sector provides for each year since 1980 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Private and voluntary residential homes are all in the independent sector.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by (a) voluntary registered homes, (b) private registered homes and (c) local authority homes in Wales; and, in each case, what appropriate formal qualifications they have.

Mr. Grist: The number of people employed by voluntary and private registered homes is not held centrally. The number of people employed in local authority homes as at 30 September 1989 is shown in the following table. Information on their appropriate formal qualifications is not held centrally.

Group and type of staff	WTE Staff of residential accommodation for elderly and elderly mentally infirm people	WTE Staff of residential accommodation for younger physically handicapped people	WTE Staff of residential accommodation for mentally ill people	WTE Staff of residential accommodation for mentally handicapped adults	WTE Staff of residential accommodation catering primarily for mentally handicapped children

[1] Including trainee care staff but excluding care assistants.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons aged 65 years and over were in accommodation for the elderly in each local authority in Wales, and how many in each local authority were in accommodation provided by (a) local authorities, (b) voluntary homes and (c) private homes in each year since 1980; and if he will estimate what the change will be in these figures in the future due to changes in community care policy.

Mr. Grist: The number of residents aged 65 years and over in accommodation for elderly people in local authority and private and voluntary residential homes is shown in the following table:

Toxic Algae

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the effect in Wales of toxic algae upon water resources and those who use them.

Mr. Grist: The National Rivers Authority has commenced a major programme, concentrating on public supply reservoirs and inland waters regularly used for water contact sports, to monitor for blue-green algae. If algae is identified in any waters, the authority immediately informs the district council health authority and the owner. Responsibility for taking any necessary precautions and bringing the matter to the attention of water users and other members of the public lies with the owners.

To supplement the information provided by the NRA, Dwr Cymru Cyf is also carrying out routine monitoring of all susceptible water resources used for public supply. Dwr Cymru advises me that, to date, blue-green algae has been reported in four such reservoirs but the algal scums have been limited to small areas on the surface of the water and have thus not adversely affected the water used for public supply.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve security arrangements for the collection and disposal of clinical waste in Wales.

Mr. Grist: All district health authorities in Wales have been made aware of the provisions contained in the Environmental Protection Bill, which will introduce revised standards for the disposal of clinical waste by incineration.

Discussions with senior managers of Welsh health authorities have already taken place to focus attention on this subject and a seminar on the new standards and requirements has been arranged for health authority staff and local authority environmental health officers on 4 July.

Each health authority was also given the opportunity to comment on the consultation document reviewing the operation of the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 and which proposes that clinical waste should be classified as special waste. If implemented this would require a consignment note procedure to be applied to the disposal of clinical waste.

Provision is incorporated in the Environmental Protection Bill imposing on producers of waste the duty to ensure the adoption of proper methods of control in its handling and this duty would apply to producers of clinical waste.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give an estimate of the current number of homeless in Wales; and, of those, how many suffer from (a) alcoholism or drug dependency, (b) AIDS and (c) mental illness.

Mr. Grist: There were 4,208[1] households accepted as homeless during the quarter ending 31 March 1990. Of these, 26 households were classed as in priority need because a household member was considered vulnerable as a result of mental disability. Information on the number of persons in households accepted as suffering from alcohol or drug dependency or AIDS is not collected centrally.

[1] This figure includes an estimated 2,000 households made homeless in Colwyn as a result of the major flooding incident in February 1990.

Home Helps

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of persons aged 65 years and over received home help service in each local authority in Wales since 1980; and what estimate he has made of the likely change in these figures as a result of changes in community care.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

Changes in patterns and volumes of care will take place on the basis of social care plans which are to be produced by social services authorities working with health authorities and other interests and which are to be published by April 1991.

Elderly People (Day Centres)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many day centres for the elderly there were, and how many places were available in these day centres in each local authority in Wales in each year since 1980; and what estimate he has made of the likely future change in these figures as a result of changes in community care.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table. Changes in patterns and volumes of care will take place on the basis of social care plans which are to be produced by social services authorities working with health authorities and other interests and which are to be published by April 1991.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on individual primary schools in Wales published during the last four years, indicating for each the number of pupils attending.

Mr. Grist: Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on individual primary schools to 21 June 1990 are listed in the following tables, by local education authority, with the number of pupils on the school roll in January of the year of publication.

[1] Proposal approved by the Secretary of State.
[2] Proposal determined by the maintaining authority.

During the period one proposal, by Clwyd LEA, to close Cornist Infants School, was rejected by the Secretary of State in 1989.

The Department does not maintain records of primary school closures by size of school.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the additional costs will be following the implementation of the proposals of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill in Wales; and how much will be attributable to community care.

Mr. Grist: The estimated additional recurrent costs in Wales of the implementation of the proposals for the national health service which were included in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill are £10·85 million. The estimated costs for community care in Wales are being considered in the current public expenditure survey.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with local authority representatives from Wales of the financial implications of the new community care policy.

Mr. Grist: Our officials have had extensive discussions with local authority representatives in Wales under the aegis of the Welsh consultative council on local government finance (WCCLGF) to consider the expenditure implications of the arrangments proposed in the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm 849). My right hon. Friend will be discussing this matter with the local authority associations at the meeting of the WCCLGF on 4 July.

Village Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy on small village schools.

Mr. Grist: Our school reforms are intended to improve the quality of education in all schools irrespective of size or location. It is for local education authorities to determine the pattern of education in their areas.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 196, and 30 April, Official Report, columns 426-27, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. David Hunt: The figure is 717,960 sq ft.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums of money have been or are being made available by his Department to support the implementation of the all-Wales strategy for mental illness in each relevant financial year.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 30 April, columns 425-26.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether projects concerned primarily with mental illness will be eligible for grant aid under the urban programme in Wales for the 1991-92 financial year.

Mr. Grist: No. As proposed in the White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" (Cm. 849) and confirmed in Welsh Office circular No. 22/90, a copy of which is in the Library, urban programme resources for community care projects are being transferred to more appropriate Welsh Office funding programmes. This change includes special funding for mental illness services which, from April this year, is allocated solely under the Welsh Office mental illness strategy.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. David Hunt: Energy efficiency is taken into consideration when building works and maintenance schemes are undertaken in my Department's offices, and expenditure relating to energy efficiency is not separately identified.

HEALTH

Immunisation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to complete the pilot study of parent-held child immunisation cards.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the results of the pilot study of parent-held child record immunisation cards.

Mr. Dorrell: The British Paediatric Association published the report of a joint working party on professional and parent-held records used in child health surveillance in May and launched the record itself on 12 June. Copies of the report and a specimen of the child health record, which includes a record of immunisations, have been placed in the Library.

Drugs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what compensation other than through civil action is available to families of somebody who had died from the effects of a particular drug when that drug has begun to show unexpected side-effects.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The question of whether compensation is payable depends on the detailed circumstances of the case. The means by which parties pursue issues between them either by discussion, negotiation, or litigation must also be determined by the circumstances. The Medicines Act 1968 makes no provision for compensation, being a measure aimed at providing safety, quality and efficacy of marketed medicines. Decisions made under the Act are based on the best possible scientific judgment on available information and are monitored carefully, but the possibility of unexpected side-effects cannot be totally excluded.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to bring forward legislation which will allow a victim of a drug injury to claim compensation without having to prove negligence on the part of the manufacturer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 any person injured by a defective product (including a medicinal one) may seek redress through the courts without having to prove negligence on the part of the manufacturer of that product.

Health Education

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the total expenditure on health education in 1990-91 by (a) the Health Education Authority, (b) each regional health authority in England and (c) other agencies; and what proportion of the budget of each regional health authority is devoted to health education.

Mr. Dorrell: The planned expenditure on health education in 1990-91 by the Health Education Authority is £26·8 million.

It is not possible to quantify the proportion of total regional allocations spent on health education by each regional health authority since so much of it is integral to health service activity.

The Department also provides funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, for a large number of voluntary bodies, many of which undertake health education as part of their overall role.

Joint Finance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each regional health authority in England, (a) the total sum available for joint finance for each year 1984-85 to 1990-91, (b) what this sum represents as a percentage of the total regional health authority budget and (c) what proportion of joint finance was allocated to projects relating specifically to the closure of long-stay hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the sums allocated for joint finance (revenue and capital) and the proportion that represents of regional health authorities' total initial allocations (revenue and capital) is shown in the tables. Information on sums allocated to projects relating specifically to the closure of long-stay hospitals is not held centrally.

Child Accident Prevention

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total level of Government spending on child accident prevention via (a) the Health Education Authority, (b) the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and (c) other agencies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Education Authority and the Child Accident Prevention Trust, both of which are funded by the Department, expect to spend £127,000 and £107,000 respectively on child accident prevention in 1990-91. The Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents receives funding from a number of Government Departments; the largest grant is from the Department of Transport, which has allocated it £389,000 in the current financial year for its road safety activities. These extend beyond child accident prevention.

Friedreich's Ataxia

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a separate unitary fund for research into Friedreich's Ataxia.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so. The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science, is the main Government agency for the promotion of biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. In 1988-89, the last financial year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £197,000 on research projects which were relevant to Friedreich's Ataxia. The council is always willing to consider soundly based proposals for research funding in competition with other applications. In addition to this, university departments and medical schools, with support from University Funding Council block grants and health authorities, may be undertaking research into Friedreich's Ataxia; information on this is not collected centrally.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health of the current members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines how many have declared that they are given (a) private consultancy fees from pharmaceutical companies and (b) research grants to their medical departments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Interests are declared in accordance with the code of practice published with the annual report of the Medicines Commission. A copy is in the Library. Under the code, personal interests involve payments to the member personally, for example, consultancies or other fee-paid work. Non-personal interests involve payments to a department for which a member is responsible, but does not benefit the member personally, for example, commissioned research. Currently there are 21 members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) and the interests they have declared are as follows:

	Members
(a) A personal and non-personal interests	11
(b) Non-personal interests only	7

It is vital that committees providing expert scientific advice on medicines have members with practical experience of research and up-to-date scientific knowledge. By following the ethical standards set by the code of practice members are able to avoid conflicts of interest which might otherwise impair the objectivity of the advice they give. We have full confidence in the personal integrity of the members of the CSM.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the names of those members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines who are specialised in allergenic diseases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The membership of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its sub-committees covers a wide range of specialties. Additional experts may be consulted or appointed as temporary members as and when necessary. A table showing the membership of the committee and its sub-committees has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Committee on Safety of Medicines voted in respect of the drug Corwin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The deliberations of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are confidential.

Tampons

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is currently being undertaken by the Government into toxic shock syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: For several years the staphyococcal reference laboratory of the public health laboratory service has gathered information about the occurrence of toxic shock syndrome and has characterised the strains involved from this and other conditions. Work in this field is also being carried out in universities and national health service hospitals and at the centre for applied microbiological research, Porton Down.

Waiting Lists

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the function of waiting list funds and initiatives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The waiting list initiative and waiting list fund provides targeted resources to enable health authorities to treat additional patients from the waiting list, and to reduce the number of patients who wait excessively long times. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 18 January 1990 at columns 403-4.

GPs (Computer Software)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the provision of computer software for general practitioners' budgets.

Mr. Dorrell: We are continuing our discussions with the computer companies, many of which have been directly consulted during the development of the technical specifications for the software package. We are unable to give any details about these discussions at this stage as to do so would be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many relatives of glaucoma sufferers in each district health authority area of England received free eyesight tests in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. District health authorities do not collect such information. The table gives estimated numbers by patient group and regional health authority for the period in question:

NHS sight tests paid for during April-September 1989
Relatives of glaucoma sufferers

	Relatives over 40
Regional health authority
Northern	2,700
Yorkshire	3,950
Trent	9,260
East Anglia	3,900
North West Thames	3,500
North East Thames	5,190
South East Thames	4,150
South West Thames	4,800
Wessex	5,860
Oxford	3,250
South Western	4,950
West Midlands	5,650
Mersey	2,520
North Western	5,360

These figures are based on a 2 per cent. sample of NHS sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. They do not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April 1989 but conducted before that period.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects to receive a report from the Bolton family practitioner committee of the inquiry into the financial background and other related matters of its general manager; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to change the reference and vetting procedures for recruitment of officials to posts involving responsibility for public resources to require that their past financial and other relevant history is available to the interviewing committee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that Bolton family practitioner committee dismissed its general manager on 14 June with immediate effect. This decision was a matter for the committee as employing authority.

Under the terms of health circular HC(FP)(89)9, which governs FPC general manager appointments, regional health authorities were asked to provide a complete service to family practitioner committees for the recruitment and appointment process. This service was provided to Bolton family practitioner committee by the North Western regional health authority. I understand that the authority is re-examining the procedures applied in this case. If more general lessons emerge, we shall ensure they are brought to the attention of other national health service authorities.

A copy of health circular HC(FP)(89)9 has been placed in the Library.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what demographic and social changes were taken into account in his Department's calculation of the numbers of elderly persons likely to need local authority support to live in residential homes after 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: It will of course be for local authorities to decide how many elderly people should receive residential care with their support in future years. Each year the local authority associations will provide the Department with estimates of the number of people whom they consider are likely to receive such care, taking into account demographic and other factors and those estimates will be taken into account by the Government in determining the level of revenue support grant to local authorities.

"Face the Facts"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the BBC Radio Four programme, "Face the Facts", broadcast on 13 June.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Whilst the Department is aware of its content, the programme was concerned in the main with compensation claims in respect of families who had been in some way connected with the operations of the Sellafield reprocessing plant. Matters relating to nuclear safety are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Ambulance Dispute

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when regional health authorities were notified of charges arising from the military assistance during the ambulance dispute; and when the costs were notified to each district health authority of the sums they would have to pay towards costs incurred during the ambulance dispute;

(2) what is the total amount of money that each regional health authority has been asked to pay for costs incurred during the ambulance dispute for military assistance; and what is the amount apportioned to each district health authority budget by regional health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total costs that each regional health authority has been asked to pay for military assistance during the ambulance dispute are given in the table. Regional health authorities were notified of amounts due in respect of the period to 31 December 1989 on 7 March 1990, and in respect of the period January to 31 March 1990, on 14 June 1990. Information is not held centrally about the amount apportioned by regions to district health authorities nor when such amounts were notified.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the expected date or dates for implementation of the provisions of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Some provisions of the Children Act 1989 are already in force. We plan to implement the remaining provisions in October 1991.

Night Working

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the implications for care homes of the proposed European Community directive on night working.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The European Commission has not yet issued a draft of its proposed directive on working time; however, we understand that the Commission is likely to propose restrictions on night and shift working. Clearly this may have implications for a wide range of workers, including those in care homes, and in other health services, where there is a need to maintain care on a 24-hour basis. We will not be able to assess the full implications until the Commission has published its detailed proposal.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding hospitals opting out of the present national health service management structure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 May at column 418. Since then a further six units have expressed interest in national health service trust status. This brings the total number of units which have expressed interest in trust status to 199.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the national medical organisations which have made representations to him expressing support for proposals for national health service hospitals to become self-governing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the White Paper was published in 1989 it has attracted a great deal of interest from the medical profession at national and at local level. Much of the discussion with the national organisations has been about the detailed implications and practical details of the implementation of the proposals. At local level there is substantial interest and support from the medical profession on the proposals for establishing NHS trusts.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how far his decision on whether a hospital will become self-governing will depend on the number of individuals and organisations in the area who have been involved in the consultation process concerned being in favour of such a step being taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consider applications for national health service trust status individually in the light of all relevant information, including any views expressed in the local consultation exercise.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) of 19 April, Official Report, column 990, if he will make a statement on the state of negotiations with Porton International on the future of the centre for applied microbiology and research, Porton.

Mr. Dorrell: I have nothing to add to the reply my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 April at column 990.

NHS Pay Bargaining

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 12 June, Official Report, columns 150-51, whether he intends to issue guidance in respect of pay to protect specific groups of workers and to prevent shortages in specialisms across the country.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to issue guidance on pay in national health service trusts. Guidance will be issued on non-medical education and training to ensure an adequate supply of suitably trained staff throughout the national health service.

Sheppey General Hospital

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the assessment made regarding the proposals to cut acute geriatric and acute medical provision at Sheppey general hospital, what regard was made to questions of (a) population influx to Sheppey in the summer months, (b) future housing development in Sheppey, (c) the nature of access to the island and (d) the availability of an ambulance service on the island.

Mr. Dorrell: Medway health authority is currently consulting locally on its proposals for Sheppey general hospital.

The hon. Member should contact the chairman of Medway health authority for information about the factors taken into account in the authority's assessment of the future use of Sheppey general hospital.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to improve security arrangements for the collection and disposal of clinical waste in England.

Mr. Dorrell: Collection and disposal of clinical waste is governed by the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and the related Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988, No. 819).

It is the responsibility of health authorities to ensure adequate arrangements are made for the safe storage, collection and disposal of clinical waste from their premises. The responsibility for collection and disposal of clinical waste from private dwellings rests with the local authority.

Obstetric Accidents

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in the light of recent evidence published in the British Medical Journal of 26 May on the causes of certain obstetric accidents, he will undertake a review of the training of junior doctors in relation to foetal heart monitoring and the use of obstetric forceps.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The training of junior hospital doctors in the use of techniques such as foetal monitoring and the application of forceps is a matter for the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, and the individual consultants under whose supervision such junior doctors work. However, issues like those identified in the recent article in the British Medical Journal will, as a matter of course, be raised during the regular meetings held between the Department and the college.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Dorrell: For the whole of the period for which information is available, the Department of Health was part of the Department of Health and Social Security. I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security gave him today.

SCOTLAND

Flooding, River Tay

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the expert hydrologists who will carry out the independent survey of the causes of the flooding in the River Tay valley on Sunday 5 and Monday 6 February will have powers to investigate the operation of the hydro board water control measures on these dates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The independent study will be overseen by a working group of interested parties and the consultants will be free to investigate any matters within the agreed terms of reference. Scottish Hydro-Electric plc is represented on the working group and we would expect any relevant information to be made available.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the powers (a) under which the independent survey of the flooding in February in the River Tay valley will be carried out and (b) under which his Department is funding the survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The independent consultant is to be appointed by Tayside regional council which has powers under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 to investigate, and collect information relating to, any matter concerning its area.

The Government's contribution towards the cost of the survey will be made under the authority of the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act 1911 and the Appropriation Act.

Fishing Industries

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the likelihood of haddock quotas being exhausted before the end of 1990; and whether he has any plans to ensure that excess landings in any producer organisation's area do not lead to closures in other areas where quotas are not in danger of being exceeded.

Mr. Lang: The objective of the fisheries departments is to ensure maximum uptake in the United Kingdom's haddock fisheries without exceeding national quotas. Fisheries departments, therefore, closely monitor uptake as well as operating established penalty and compensation arrangements for overfishing. Departments are implementing in full special arrangements introduced in March in the North sea haddock fishery with the aim of spreading uptake more evenly throughout the year, thus minimising the risk of premature closure. At that time departments wrote to producer organisations setting a limit of the amount of fish they could take by 30 June. A further limit was set on the amount that could be taken by 30 September. To enforce this measure fisheries departments will, as a minimum, suspend the North sea haddock licence of any producer organisation which looks as though it will breach its 30 June limit (or 60 per cent. of the more recently circulated interim allocations, whichever is the greater) and are considering whether more stringent action is required if the 30 September limit is breached. Such suspensions will apply to individual producer organisations and can be effective for differing periods of time. To date none of the Scottish, and only one of the English producer organisations is likely to have problems remaining within its 30 June limit.

I believe that the measures that departments have already taken considerably reduce the risk of United Kingdom catches getting out of hand, but it would be wrong of me to guarantee under any circumstances a full 12-month fishery since this will depend on self-discipline being exercised by fishermen and their organisations.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all cattle arriving at Scottish abattoirs are subject to examination for BSE.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1961 all cattle slaughtered in Scottish abattoirs have been subjected to statutory ante-mortem inspection by suitably qualified meat inspectors or veterinary surgeons in order to determine whether they are showing symptoms of any disease, including BSE, or signs of injury, disease or stress. This applies equally to export approved abattoirs and those producing meat for domestic consumption only.

GP Budgets

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the general practitioner practices in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Strathclyde which have indicated that they wish to become fund holders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Ambulance Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which ambulance services have expressed an interest in becoming self-governing trusts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Chief ambulance officers, in common with a number of others working in the national health service, have asked for, and been given, background briefing on self-governing status.

Schools (Access)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what specific funding has been made available to local education authorities to enable access to school and college buildings for pupils and teachers with disabilities in each of the last 10 years; and if he has any plans to make specific grants available to local education authorities to carry out necessary capital works to facilitate physical access for people with disabilities;

(2) what advice he gives to local education authorities on the standards of access for people with disabilities for new designs for and adaptations to school and college buildings; and whether he will consult interested parties concerning statutory provisions for standards of access for new school and college buildings;

(3) how many primary and secondary schools in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland are fully accessible to pupils and teachers with disabilities; what are these figures as percentages of the total number of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Authorities are responsible for funding educational building work and other capital programmes within the broad limits set each year on the total capital expenditure which each authority may incur. Authorities have wide discretion in the use of capital resources and the limits set are not hypothecated to particular projects or limited to use for individual programmes.

Since 1985, the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations have required that the design of most new or altered or extended buildings, including schools, take proper account of the needs of disabled people. The Scottish Education Department published guidance to education authorities on access to educational buildings for disabled people in educational building note 19 in 1984. Copies of the regulations and the building note are in the Library.

Information about local authority buildings which are accessible to the disabled is not held centrally.

Nursing Homes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from (a) COSLA and (b) other interested parties on the provision of nursing home care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In responding to the White Paper "Caring for People" the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities suggested that the lead responsibility for the registration of nursing homes should lie with local authorities, rather than with health boards as at present. The Government remain of the view that, since nursing homes accommodate people who have a need for health care, health boards are best placed to ensure that standards in nursing homes are maintained.

I also receive from time to time representations from Members of Parliament and members of the public about various aspects of nursing home care, including the provision of care in individual homes.

Housing (Elderly People)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he proposes to have on the housing needs of the elderly.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has recently carried out a research project into the housing needs of elderly people in Scotland. This involved interviews with elderly people themselves and consultation with various interest groups. A circular will be published later this year, based on this research and further informal consultation, giving new guidance on meeting the housing needs of the elderly and other groups who require care in the community.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all beneficial appointments and non-governmental paid positions for which officials and former officials of his Department sought, and were granted, permission to accept since June 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: Since June 1979, 55 officials and former officials have sought and received such permission. It is not my Department's practice to release details of individual cases.

Manufacturing Industry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the figures in constant value of the output in manufacturing industries in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole (i) in 1979 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Output figures in constant value terms are calculated for Scotland as a whole only in index form. Output figures for Strathclyde are not available. The table shows manufacturing output of Scotland at constant prices, indexed with 1985 = 100.

Manufacturing output index (1985 = 100)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, using 1979 at a value of 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: Figures are not available in the form requested because there are no separate price deflators for Scotland and the use of United Kingdom deflators for Scotland does not give sufficiently reliable constant price estimates.

The following table gives estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation by manufacturing industry in Scotland at current prices for each year from 1979 to 1987, the latest year for which estimates are available.

Separate figures for Strathclyde region are not available.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing by district council ward the numbers unemployed in the constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow in 1979, 1983, 1987 and for the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The table gives the number of unemployed claimants by district council wards for Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency for May 1990, the latest figures available, May 1987 and June 1983, the earliest figures available. Figures on the number unemployed by ward are not available before June 1983.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage change in employment in (a) the service sector, (b) self-employment and (c) manufacturing industry between 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Lang: Between December 1979 and December 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of employees in employment in the service sector increased by 10·5 per cent., and the number of employees in employment in the manufacturing sector decreased by 29·0 per cent. Over the same period the number of people who are self-employed is estimated to have increased by 54·1 per cent.

Dyslexic Children

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new measures he intends to undertake to assist dyslexic children in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Responsibility for dyslexic children within schools lies with education authorities, which employ learning support teachers to provide for their special educational needs. Additionally the Scottish Education Department has commissioned a research study of policy, practices and provision for children with specific learning difficulties, including dyslexia, which will identify any gaps in provision and offer guidance to teachers of such children. The research will be completed by spring 1992.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many dyslexic children are educated in each of the education authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many specialist teachers of dyslexics there are in post in each of the education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available.

Disabled Teachers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of students with disabilities who have entered initial teacher training for each of the last 10 years; and what percentage of the total number of student teachers this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available centrally.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of COSLA to discuss possible changes to the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met representatives of COSLA on 6 April when several aspects of the community charge, including possible changes to the system, were discussed.

Homelessness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) families and (b) single people are accepted as homeless within (i) Inverclyde district, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of applicants under the homeless persons legislation assessed by local authorities as homeless, as recorded in the returns submitted to the Scottish Development Department in the year ended 31 March 1989, are as follows:

	Number
Inverclyde district	111
Strathclyde region	4,494
Scotland	9,561

These returns do not record information on the composition of applicants' households. It is not therefore possible to say how many were from families and single people respectively.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the current number of homeless in Scotland, and, of those, how many suffer from (a) alcoholism or drug dependency, (b) AIDS and (c) mental illness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on which to base such an estimate is not held centrally.

EC (Civil Servants)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of people seconded from the Scottish Office to the United Kingdom's permanent representation to the European Community in Brussels, in each of the years since the United Kingdom entered the European Community; and if he will break these down by Scottish Office department.

Mr. Rifkind: Scottish Office staff on secondment to the United Kingdom's permanent representation to the European Community in Brussels in each year since 1973 are listed in the table, by department.

Department	Year	Number
Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland	1973	1

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers, ranks and departments within the Scottish Office of those civil servants who work exclusively on European Community affairs; which are monitoring European Community activities; and which are administering and advising on grants.

Mr. Rifkind: Information in the form requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Services

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Consumers Council about the possible decline of legal services in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The council has expressed concern about the possible effect of the Bill on rural legal services, and has welcomed our initiative in monitoring the position. The council welcomes the proposals in the Bill to widen consumer choice as something for which there is demand in Scotland.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answers of 30 April, Official Report, column 453, and 10 May, Official Report, column 214, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Rifkind: The figure is 1,241,664.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Rifkind: About £62,000 in 1988-89.

Water Pollution

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has issued to regional councils, environmental health departments and other relevant authorities in Scotland regarding the dangers posed by freshwater algae.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 June 1990]: Regional councils are responsible for providing wholesome drinking water and they, together with environmental health and other relevant authorities in Scotland, are aware of the potential problems arising from certain types of freshwater algae. No specific advice has been issued as there is no evidence of a significant problem in Scotland, but the matter is under consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

Eastern Europe

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is undertaking to assist the new democratic regimes in eastern Europe.

Mr. Howard: The reforming countries of eastern Europe urgently need practical help to develop their labour markets, to fight unemployment, to increase training and retraining, and to generate a spirit of enterprise. My Department is giving a high priority to providing such help, working with and through the Government's know-how fund.

In recent weeks I have visited Czechoslovakia and Hungary, and have signed agreements of co-operation in the labour market area with both Governments. This week I shall be in Poland, where I shall sign a similar agreement with the Polish Government. These individual agreements set out specific, practical measures, based on each country's particular needs, in a number of areas where my Department can help, including training and retraining, support for the development of small firms and enterprise, and the management of unemployment.

Departmental Public Relations Adviser

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends making an appointment to his Department of a public relations adviser.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to appoint a public relations adviser.

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the annual publicity-promotional budget allocated to his Department's wages inspectorate for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The cost of publicity and promotional activities undertaken by the wages inspectorate is not distinguishable from general running costs.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people employed by his Department's wages inspectorate in the north-west region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Number of staff employed in the north-west in September of each year
1979	38
1980	36
1981	28
1982	27
1983	29
1984	29
1985	30
1986	28
1987	[1]21·5
1988	[1]19·5
1989	[1]20·5

[1] Since 1987, staff employed in the north-west have also had responsibility for advisory and enforcement work in north Wales.

Wages Councils

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment where he distributes literature about wage council protection.

Mr. Nicholls: Notices giving details of minimum rates are distributed to all establishments where workers covered by wages councils are thought to be employed. These notices and supplementary literature are also issued to other organisations and individuals, in particular those offering advisory services.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those local education authorities participating for the first time in TVEI extensions in 1990-91; when each such authority was informed by the Training Agency of their budget for 1990-91; and when they were informed of their budget for 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: Education authorities starting TVEI extension in 1990-91 are as follows:

Avon
Barnet
Central Doncaster
Dorset
Harrow
Highland
Hillingdon
Humberside
Knowsley
Lancashire
Lincolnshire
Merton
Newham
Nottinghamshire
Redbridge
Rotherham
St. Helens
Strathclyde—districts of Ayr
Dumbarton
Lanark
Tayside

These authorities were given approval on 25 May 1990 to start extension. They were informed of their budgets shortly afterwards.

Authorities have not yet been given their budgets for 1991-92.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the TVEI extensions budget for 1990-91 for each local education authority in (a) the north-west, (b) Yorkshire and Humberside, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) Wales and (e) Scotland.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Wednesday 20 June. TVEI does not operate in Northern Ireland.

Employment Training

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employment training places are not filled.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are estimated to have been on employment training courses since the inception of the scheme; what has been the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: About 700,000 people have entered employment training at a cost of about £1·6 billion. This is indicative both of the programme's success in attracting large numbers of unemployed people and the Government's significant investment in adult training.

Fatal Accidents

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for fatal accidents at work per million employees and the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The figure for 1979 was 27 per million employees. The latest available figure, for 1988-89, was 24 per million employees—provisional—which includes the fatalities from the Piper Alpha disaster.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of women (a) in full-time work, (b) in part-time work and (c) self-employed for the current year and for 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Female employment—Great Britain
Thousands seasonally adjusted

Period	Workforce in employment Full-time	Workforce in employment Part-time	Self-employed
June 1979	5,960	3,837	348
December 1989 (latest available)	6,709	4,997	775

Skill Centres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total expenditure involved in the payment to METEL for the acquisition of the Liverpool skill centre.

Mr. Eggar: No payment was made to METEL for its acquisition of Liverpool skill centre. METEL paid the Government £65,000 for the centre.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total payment to the Training Business Group Ltd. for the acquisition of the Lambeth skill centre.

Mr. Eggar: The sale of the training businesses at Lambeth skill centre to the Training Business involved a payment of some £800,000 from the Government to the consortium.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the members of the Lakin consortium who successfully bid for skill centres.

Mr. Eggar: The members of the consortium, headed by Mr. Christopher Lakin, who successfully bid for the training businesses at Cumbria, East Lancashire, Ipswich and St. Helens skill centres, are:

Mr. Christopher Lakin
Mr. Howard Lien and
Mr. Clive Ibbison-Steele

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which skill centres have achieved approved training organisation status for employment training.

Mr. Eggar: Employment training providers have two years to achieve approved training organisation status. The assessment process for organisations which joined employment training at its outset on 5 September 1988 is still under way. No skill centres have as yet been fully assessed.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total payment to Mr. Lakin for acquisition of skill centres.

Mr. Eggar: The sale of the training businesses at Cumbria, East Lancashire, Ipswich and St. Helens skill centres to the consortium headed by Mr. Christopher Lakin involved a payment of some £2·1 million from the Government to the consortium.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the dismissed staff at Liverpool skill centre have been offered re-engagement by the METEL group; and under what terms and conditions of employment.

Mr. Eggar: Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Ltd.—METEL—purchased Liverpool skill centre on 14 May 1990. From the completion of the sale contract, responsibility for the continuing employment of former STA staff, and the terms and conditions of their employment passed to it. It is understood that four former STA staff were offered re-engagement, but I am not aware of the terms and conditions which are a matter for METEL.

Employment Service Offices

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the total number of full-time employment exchanges; and if he will list the full-time employment exchanges which his Department is currently considering closing for Scotland, Wales, the standard regions of England and Great Britain;

(2) what is the total number of local employment exchanges; and if he will list any part-time local employment exchange which his Department is currently considering closing for Scotland, Wales, the standard regions of England and Great Britain;

(3) what is the total number of part-time unemployment benefit offices; and if he will list the part-time unemployment benefit offices which his Department is currently considering closing, for Scotland, Wales, the standard regions of England and Great Britain;

(4) what is the total number of full-time unemployment benefit offices; and if he will list the full-time unemployment benefit offices which his Department is currently considering closing, for Scotland, Wales, the standard English regions and Great Britain.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount paid to Mr. Bishell, Mr. Kent and Mr. Wells for consultancy fees on the sale of the Skills Training Agency; if he will list the consultants involved; whether the advance has been repaid; and for what period consultancy advice was given.

Mr. Eggar: As I informed the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 3 April 1990, Official Report, column 585, Mr. Bishell, Mr. Wells and Mr. Kent appointed Coopers and Lybrand to advise on their bid for the Skills Training Agency and Irwin Mitchell to provide legal advice.

Following the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) on 13 March 1989 that he intended to make financial assistance available to members of STA staff contemplating a buy-out, Messrs Bishell, Wells and Kent applied for help. This was offered on 31 March 1989. A total of £82,500, excluding VAT, was made available to them as a contribution to their costs, and this has now been repaid in accordance with the terms on which it was offered.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total estimated expenditure involved in the payment of fees to Deloitt Haskins and Sells for work done on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency, for the most recent dates for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: Similar questions were recently posed by the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer). I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to him on 27 March, Official Report column 158 which was reiterated on 3 April, Official Report column 585. Total expenses in connection with the sale of the Skills Training Agency in 1989-90, including professional fees and expenses paid to Deloittes and other advisers will be available in the appropriation accounts—class VI, vote 5—to be published in the summer.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed by the Health and Safety Executive at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: At 1 April 1990 the Health and Safety Executive employed 3,698 staff.

Employment Schemes

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the Government schemes to increase employment he has assessed as producing the best results.

Mr. Eggar: Indicators of the cost-effectiveness of Government measures to assist unemployed people into work are published in chapter 6 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm. 1006). Since the nature of the measures and the characteristics of their respective client groups differ, it is not possible to single out any one as producing results which are better than the others.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 448, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Nicholls: The square footage is 16,913,143.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 448, if he will break down the figure of £0·578 million into spending on solid fuels, liquid fuels and any other categories.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1990]: Cost details were not collected in the form requested and this information is not readily available.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

2. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effect of the top limit of 90 per cent. of the grant available under the home energy efficiency scheme, especially to households in the lowest income brackets.

Mr. Baldry: A number of representations have been received about the 90 per cent. limit as part of the consultation process. These are currently being considered.

8. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to promote energy efficiency in business and industry.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to promote energy efficiency in business and industry.

Mr. Baldry: The Energy Efficiency Office encourages the adoption of energy efficiency measures in the home and the workplace, through a comprehensive marketing strategy at national and regional levels. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State is currently hosting a series of seminars for key energy users throughout the country.

28. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many homes he expects to be provided with energy conservation improvements via the home energy efficiency scheme in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole in the next financial year.

65. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of homes he expects to be provided with energy efficiency improvements via the home energy efficiency scheme in the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The home energy efficiency scheme will increase the take-up of basic insulation measures in low-income households. Final targets for the number of homes to be treated will be set following finalisation of the details of the scheme in the light of the consultation process.

53. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what calculations his Department has made of the potential reduction in greenhouse gases which would result from the improved thermal efficiency achievable by industrial, commercial and city combined heat and power; and if he has any plans to provide stronger market signals.

Mr. Peter Morrison: "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions", published as energy paper No. 58 estimated that growth in CHP could, based on plausible assumptions, lead to reductions of 5 to 10 per cent. of United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions.

Interest in CHP is already increasing rapidly in response to direct market signals. These are supplemented by my Department's encouragement of the use of combined heat and power through its best practice programme and by the industry's own marketing initiative, under the auspices of the Combined Heat and Power Association.

63. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to ensure Government Departments practise greater energy efficiency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since the details of a campaign to promote energy efficiency within Government Departments were announced on 20 July 1989, Ministers with special responsibility for departmental energy use have met three times to discuss progress towards the Government's aim of achieving savings rising to £45 million per annum—15 per cent. of the current bill—over five years. The first report on the campaign will be published shortly.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Wakeham: Investment in items expected to make a significant contribution to the energy efficiency of the new headquarters building into which my Department moved in September 1989 is estimated by the Property Services Agency to have cost around £1 million. It includes an up-to-date electronic building energy management system, and additional air conditioning and secondary glazing beyond that specified by the developer.

Offshore Energy Production

6. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the total stock of fixed capital investment in offshore oil and gas fields has been invested since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Of the £65,000 million capital investment in offshore oil and gas fields, over 60 per cent. has been invested since 1979.

10. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current output of oil and gas from the United Kingdom sector of the continental shelf.

Mr. Baldry: Oil and gas production in the first quarter of this year were, respectively, 24·2 million tonnes and 5,700 million therms.

18. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what level he expects exploration and appraisal drilling on the United Kingdom continental shelf to reach in the current year.

30. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what level he expects exploration and appraisal drilling on the United Kingdom continental shelf to reach in the current year.

Mr. Baldry: A survey of company intentions by my Department showed that a record number of more than 200 exploration and appraisal wells could be drilled in the United Kingdom continental shelf this year.

Renewable Energy

19. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he uses on the comparative costs of renewable sources of energy, fossil fuel and nuclear power to guide his conduct of energy policy.

Mr. Baldry: In the pursuit of energy policy I make use of information from the energy industries and a variety of other sources.

21. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much investment by the Government in the development of renewable sources of energy has risen since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Annual expenditure since 1979 by the Department of Energy on its renewables programme has more than doubled from £8·2 million to £17·9 million.

I will arrange for a table of annual expenditure to be published in the Official Report.

Department of Energy research, development and demonstration expenditure on renewable energy (£ millions)

[1] Includes expenditure on "waste as a fuel" under the Energy Efficiency Demonstration Scheme.

Note:

Up to 1986-87 total for R & D also includes expenditure on low head hydro and general studies. These are separately identified for 1987-88 and include work carried out by the Chief Scientist's Group, ETSU.

44. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to reassess the potential for wave power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I announced to the House on 13 November 1989, an updating study to review cost, technical and commercial viability and prospects for wave energy in the United Kingdom is currently under way. The views of all interested parties are welcome and I will ensure that they are all taken into account. Further consultation will take place as work progresses and the final report will be published.

45. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the development potential of Salter's Duck.

Mr. Peter Morrison: While my Department has no current plans for additional funding of this project, an updating study to review wave energy in the United Kingdom is currently under way. Interested parties will be consulted fully as this study progresses; indeed, only last week I met Professor Salter to ensure that I was personally aware of his views.

48. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to encourage the generation of wind power.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government will continue to support a major research and development programme on wind power aimed at developing its commercial viability and environmental acceptability for electricity generation. In addition, wind-generated electricity should benefit from the non-fossil fuel obligation and, at the present time, the public electricity suppliers are examining a number of possible schemes which have been submitted for inclusion under the renewables order to be made in the late summer.

50. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much his Department allocated in 1989 to research and development for (a) nuclear fission and (b) renewable energy sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Provision for research and development into nuclear fission in 1989-90 was £135·4 million. This includes research and development into nuclear materials and radioactive waste management. Provision for renewable energy research and development in the same year was £17·9 million. Of the total expenditure of £153·3 million, some 35 per cent. was spent in Scotland.

54. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made an assessment of the appropriateness for the development of renewable energy of placing the energy technology support unit at the Atomic Energy Authority's research site at Harwell.

62. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made an assessment of the appropriateness in respect of the development of renewable energy sources of locating the energy technology support unit at the Atomic Energy Authority's research site at Harwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Responsibility for the research and development programme on renewable sources of energy remains with my Department. The energy technology support unit is responsible for the day-to day-management of the programme. On that basis, the Advisory Council on Research and Development, set up independently to advise the Secretary of State for Energy on matters of research and development for fuel and power, has reviewed and endorsed my Department's programme on renewables.

Electricity Generation

20. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the most up-to-date estimate of the share of electricity generation in England and Wales fuelled by (a) coal, (b) nuclear, (c) gas and (d) oil in the year 2000.

Mr. Wakeham: Future fuel shares are uncertain and will depend largely on decisions taken by the market. Two possible scenarios for 2005 were published in energy paper No. 58—table 4.10—a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

69. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his best estimate of the level of gas burn in electricity generating power stations in 1995, 2000 and 2005.

Mr. Baldry: The future levels of gas burn in electricity generating power stations are highly uncertain and will depend on future electricity demand, relative fuel prices, and the investment decisions in the privatised electricity supply industry. Two scenarios of the future gas burn levels in the United Kingdom were published in energy paper No. 58—table 4.11—a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

22. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of National Power and PowerGen regarding flue gas desulphurisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of PowerGen and chief executive of National Power frequently and discuss a wide range of issues, including flue gas desulphurisation.

EC Ministers

23. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss energy and environment issues.

Mr. Wakeham: I expect energy and environment issues to feature regularly at future meetings of the Energy Council. Community Energy Ministers will be meeting informally in Rome next month.

43. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to attend a meeting of the European Community Council of Energy Ministers.

Mr. Wakeham: The next meeting of the European Communities Council of Energy Ministers is due to take place on 29 October 1990. The United Kingdom representation at this Council will be decided on nearer the time. In addition, Energy Ministers of member states will meet informally in Rome on 16 July.

Electricity Privatisation

24. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has recently met, or is planning a meeting with, the chairman of Nuclear Electric to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of Nuclear Electric plc regularly to discuss various matters.

25. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairmen of electricity distribution companies to discuss privatisation.

32. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the area electricity distribution companies to discuss privatisation.

37. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairmen of electricity distribution companies to discuss privatisation.

56. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the area electricity distribution companies to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet regional electricity company chairmen regularly to discuss a range of matters.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the area electricity distribution companies to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin).

Coal Production

26. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of national average production in the coal industry in the year ending 1989-90.

57. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of national average production in the coal industry in the year ended 1989-90.

Mr. Baldry: During 1989-90 the estimated production of the coal industry, including both deep-mined and opencast coal, was 95·2 million tonnes.

64. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the increase in labour productivity in the coal mining industry since 1983-84.

Mr. Baldry: The output of coal per man-shift in the British Coal Corporation has increased by over 75 per cent. since 1983-84.

Sellafield

27. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of Britain's energy output is produced at Sellafield.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 0·2 per cent. of Great Britain's energy output in 1989 was produced by the Calder Hall power station at Sellafield.

Atomic Energy Authority

29. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals his Department has to assist the Atomic Energy Authority to maintain its atomic energy research capabilities and to develop new non-nuclear business.

Mr. Baldry: AEA Technology has launched a major drive to become more commercial, more efficient and to reduce costs. This initiative offers the AEA the opportunity of exploiting its research capabilities and of developing new business.

Offshore Installations

31. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of accidents involving injury to personnel on offshore installations for the first three months of 1990.

Mr. Peter Morrison: One fatal accident, 16 serious accidents and 129 accidents causing disablement from work for three days or more were reported to this Department between 1 January 1990 and 31 March 1990.

59. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the director of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association to discuss safety on offshore installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I meet the director of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association regularly to discuss a range of issues concerning safety on offshore installations. In addition, my safety directorate is in regular contact with the association about measures to improve offshore safety.

Lead-free Petrol

33. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much the sales of lead-free petrol have increased since 1979.

55. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much the sales of lead-free petrol have increased since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Sales of unleaded petrol have increased substantially over the last two years. In 1979 there were no sales of unleaded petrol, whereas currently about one third of petrol sold is unleaded.

Sizewell B

34. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has received in favour of the construction of Sizewell B; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has received several representations in favour of constructing Sizewell B.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last reviewed the cost of construction and the resulting cost of electricity from the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) earlier today.

British Coal

35. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of the coal industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

47. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss investment funding for new pits in the east midlands.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of the coal industry. I have recently announced a capital allocation for the corporation for 1990-91 of £445 million. Within this allocation investment in particular projects is a commercial matter for the management of British Coal, but I would of course expect to be consulted about any major new investment project.

49. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to see the chairman of British Coal to discuss productivity.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of the coal industry, including productivity in which the corporation has achieved excellent improvements since 1985.

Pollution

36. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the impact on consumer prices of the measures taken to reduce pollution of the environment from power stations.

Mr. Baldry: Measures to reduce pollution from existing power stations are likely to increase costs. The extent to which measures to reduce pollution will increase consumer prices will depend on a number of factors, including the cost and availability of alternative, cleaner sources of supply.

Methane Discharges

38. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on methane discharges from gas terminals.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Methane cannot be released unignited into the atmosphere from gas terminals unless a consent under section 12 of the Energy Act has been given by the Secretary of State for Energy. Consents are issued only when it has been demonstrated that it is necessary for the safe operation of a particular plant.

Industrial Gas Prices

39. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much industrial gas prices have risen since 21 November 1986; and by how much they rose between 1974 and 1979.

40. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much industrial gas prices have risen since 21 November 1986; and by how much they rose between 1974 and 1979.

51. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much industrial gas prices have risen since 21 November 1986; and by how much they rose between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison Data on average prices are available only quarterly. Between the fourth quarter of 1986 and the fourth quarter of 1989 the latest period for which figures have been published there was a fall of 21 per cent. in real terms in industrial gas prices. From 1974 to 1979 there was an increase of 83 per cent. in real terms.

Electricity Prices

41. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made a recent assessment of the respective costings of electricity generated from (a) nuclear power and (b) renewable energy sources.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's latest estimates for the generating costs of renewable technologies are published in energy paper No. 55, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Nuclear costs are a matter for the industry.

Radioactive Material (Transport)

42. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will outline his Department's responsibilities in respect of the transportation of radioactive material.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's responsibilities are concerned with the security measures necessary to ensure the safe transportation of radioactive materials in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Electric

46. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive the auditor's report on the accounts of Nuclear Electric plc.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric plc's review of its accounting policies is continuing. The company's opening report and accounts will be published during the summer.

Pipelines

52. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which pipeline systems in the United Kingdom continental shelf are to be shut down for maintenance in the current year; and for how long.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Three pipelines on the United Kingdom continental shelf are due to be shut down for maintenance work during 1990. These are:

(i) Ivanhoe/Rob Roy, Gas Pipeline (Amerada Hess).
(ii) Cleeton to Dimlington, Gas Pipeline (BP).
(iii) Hewitt 48/29 FTP to Bacton, Gas Pipeline (Phillips).

In addition, emergency shutdown valves are to be installed or repositioned in 110 pipelines to comply with SI 1989/1029, and sub-sea isolation systems installed in 10 pipelines during 1990. The pipelines will be shut down for varying periods, from a minimum of four days to a maximum of several months while this work is carried out.

Offshore Industry (Exports)

58. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the value of export orders won by the British offshore industry in 1989.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The British offshore supplies industry is estimated to have won export orders worth around £2 billion in 1989. I have every hope that the value of these exports will continue to grow over the next few years now that the United Kingdom is established as a major centre of technological excellence.

Gas Privatisation

60. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many gas bill vouchers issued at the time of the privatisation of British Gas have still to be used.

70. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many gas bill vouchers issued at the time of the privatisation of British Gas have still to be used.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 31 May 1990, a total of 50,790 gas bill vouchers worth £1,297,440 had yet to be used. All gas bill vouchers are valid until 30 September 1990.

Geothermal Energy

61. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most recent estimate of the potential for geothermal energy production in Cornwall.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The most recent estimate of the potential for geothermal energy production in the United Kingdom was published in energy paper No. 55, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. A review of progress of the geothermal programme and future possibilities is currently in hand. I hope to visit the project myself next month.

Coal Privatisation

66. Mr Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will bring forward proposals to give to the mineworkers the opportunity to own their industry.

Mr. Baldry: No decisions have yet been taken on the future structure of the privatised coal industry, but all options, including employee participation, will be considered.

Gas Leaks

67. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made a recent assessment of leakage levels from the gas distribution system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 23 April 1990 at column 96.

Nuclear Safety (France)

68. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to improve co-ordination between the nuclear installations inspectorate and the French civil nuclear safety authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has frequent contact on topics of mutal interest with its French counterpart, the Service Central de Surete des Installations Nucleaires, under a formal exchange of information arrangement. This co-operation is currently being enhanced by the formation of two new working groups to discuss safety standards, and advanced computer protection systems.

Energy Conservation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his Department's efforts to improve energy conservation in the home.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy efficiency in the domestic sector is promoted by my Energy Efficiency Office through a number of programmes and initiatives. These include the provision of authoritative and targeted information via the best practice programme; marketing and publicity initiatives targeted on low-income householders and those moving house or undertaking improvements; proposals for a new scheme of grants for insulation measures and advice in low-income households; and support for home energy labelling schemes.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the further energy savings which could result from the wider adoption of contract energy management systems.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government see contract energy management as a very important option available to help industry, commerce, and the public sector to improve their energy efficiency. It allows consumers access to expertise and capital. Its uses range from heavy industry through hospitals and offices to groups of dwellings. My Department, together with Property Holdings, is currently looking at the potential for contract energy management in its headquarters building.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many homes have been insulated by community insulation projects since 1982.

Mr. Peter Morrison: More than 750,000 homes have been treated by the projects since their work began in 1982.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the United Kingdom will comply with the European Community's directive on sulphur dioxide emissions from large combustion plants.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Greenhouse Effect

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent evidence he has received casting doubt upon the importance of the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The report of the science working group of the intergovernmental panel on climate change is clear that, without some change in the rate of man-made greenhouse gas emissions, there will inevitably be some consequent warming of the earth's atmosphere. Considerable uncertainty remains as to the scale and timing of such a warming, but, potentially, it could be of the highest importance for our future. I have seen no authoritative evidence to the contrary. However my right hon. Friend has received a number of letters expressing an alternative view. All but one of these have been from my hon. Friend.

Coal Imports

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of imported coal for the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Coal imports to the United Kingdom in April 1990 amounted to 1·12 million tonnes.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the third-stage decommissioning costs of nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government do not make estimates of the cost of decommissioning nuclear power stations. The work of decommissioning nuclear power stations and estimates of the cost of that work are matters for the operators of nuclear power stations.

National Grid Company

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to increase Government control of the National Grid Company.

Mr. Wakeham: No. In the new structure NGC is owned, through a holding company, by the 12 regional electricity companies.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 201 and 30 April, Official Report, columns 414-15 about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Wakeham: The total area of office space occupied by the Department in 1989-90 to which the energy consumption figures relate was 259,683 sq ft.

DEFENCE

Security Clearance

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the main factors which are considered to present a security risk among those working for sub-contractors to his Department;

(2) in how many cases in the last 12 months sub-contractors' employees working at Faslane have failed to gain security clearance; and what was the average length of time such employees had been working at the base before they were informed of this.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am unable to give the information requested, owing to national security considerations.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what rights of appeal exist for sub-contractors' employees working at Faslane who fail to gain security clearance;

(2) what procedures his Department adopts when sub-contractors' employees fail to gain the necessary clearance to work at Faslane;

(3) what steps his Department takes to vet sub-contractors' employees working at Faslane.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the policy of this or any previous Administration to release details of security clearance procedures.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total cost of the repairs to the Hawk aircraft, tail number XX227, following its accident on 21 April 1983; and where the repairs were carried out;

(2) what was the total cost of the repairs to the Tornado aircraft, tail number ZA597, following its accident at RAF Honington in November 1983;

(3) what was the total cost of repairs to the Tornado aircraft, tail number ZA412, following its accident at RAF Wildenrath on 14 April 1987.

Mr. Neubert: Exact repair costs for these aircraft are not available, but estimated figures are as follows:

Aircraft	Date of Accident	Estimated cost of repair £K
Hawk XX227	21 April 1983	35
Tornado ZA597	14 November 1983	91
Tornado ZA412	14 April 1987	23

Hawk XX227 was repaired at RAF Scampton and repainted at RAF St. Athan.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours for Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft in (a) 1988 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Neubert: The rates of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours for Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft, defined as Buccaneer, Harrier, Jaguar, Lightning, Phantom and Tornado aircraft, were 0·79 for 1988 and 0·59 for 1989.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents to Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft since 1979 in which an aircraft was assessed to have category 4 damage, providing for each such accident (a) the date, (b) the type of aircraft and (c) the tail number of the aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: There have been eight accidents to RAF fast jet aircraft since 1979 where the damage has been assessed as category 4. Details are as follows:

Date	Aircraft type	Tail number
6 June 1979	Harrier	XW767
19 August 1980	Hawk	XX243
12 May 1982	Tornado	ZA330
8 June 1982	Harrier	XZ989
14 November 1983	Tornado	ZA597
19 November 1985	Harrier	XW922
10 December 1986	Tornado	ZA611
24 June 1988	Hawk	XX304

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the total number of Hawk aircraft procured for the Royal Air Force has been lost in accidents over the aircraft's service life so far.

Mr. Neubert: Of the total number of Hawk aircraft procured for the RAF, 14·2 per cent. have been lost in accidents.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours for the Tornado GR1 aircraft since its entry into RAF service, as at the latest available date; and how many RAF Tornado aircraft have been destroyed in flying accidents.

Mr. Neubert: Twenty-four Tornado aircraft have been lost in accidents since the aircraft's entry into service (23 Tornado GR1, and one Tornado F3).

On major accident rates, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 26 June 1989, column 361.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the total number of Harrier aircraft procured for the Royal Air Force has been lost in accidents over the aircraft's service life so far.

Mr. Neubert: Of the total number of Harrier aircraft procured for the Royal Air Force, 27·4 per cent. have been lost in accidents.

Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to contractorising the mooring services functions of the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The mooring and salvage work undertaken by the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service is currently the subject of studies to determine future requirements. Whether this work should be offered to competitive tender will depend upon the outcome of those studies.

Air-to-Surface Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a statement on the deployment of a tactical air-to-surface missile on British soil.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 15 June at column 379.

Soviet Union (Official Visit)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what matters were discussed by him or his officials with their Soviet counterparts during his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend had extensive discussions with Soviet leaders on a wide range of defence and security issues including future European security, German unification, arms control, confidence and security-building measures and bilateral defence relations.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any proposals recently to his counterpart in the Soviet Union concerning the international non-proliferation regime.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, but we continue to keep non-proliferation issues under close review.

Atomic Weapons Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will ensure that any legislation on the contractorisation of the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston, and other atomic weapons research establishment sites will contain a clear statement of legal accountability and public responsibility between Government and contractor in the event of a serious accident;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that legislation on the contractorisation of the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston contains a firm commitment to the safety of those working on the site.

Mr. Neubert: The Government's proposals for the future management of AWE recognise the primary importance of safety at AWE's sites. Appropriate arrangements will be made to ensure that safety standards are maintained and that the responsibilities of both the MOD and the contractor in this area are carefully defined. It would, however, be inappropriate to anticipate the detailed content of proposed legislation at this stage.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments under The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants and members of Her Majesty's armed services in his Department.

Mr. Neubert: Assessments of workplaces under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 were initiated on 1 October 1989. The assessments are carried out in accordance with the guidance given by the Health and Safety Executive.

Combat Aircraft (Warsaw Pact)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish figures showing the trends in rates of production of tactical combat aircraft by Warsaw pact countries since 1983.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Tactical combat aircraft are produced by the USSR, Czechoslovakia, Romania and Poland. The aircraft manufactured by the east European countries are mainly combat capable trainers. The Soviet aircraft industry is dominant, both in terms of the volume of output and the capability of the aircraft being produced.

Estimated annual production of tactical combat aircraft by Warsaw pact countries, 1983-1989 (including combat capable trainers)

	Number of aircraft
1983	1,000
1984	1,000
1985	950
1986	1,000
1987	1,000
1988	925
1989	875

Wardlaw Hill, Ayrshire

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the Royal Air Force facility on Wardlaw hill, Ayrshire; what construction has taken place there in the past five years; and what new facilities are planned there.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Air Force facility on Wardlaw hill, Ayrshire, provides a communications link between the mainland and the Scottish islands. It was constructed during the last five years and consists of two aerial masts, a building housing the associated communications equipment, and power supplies.

We have plans to erect a further radio mast and an unmanned digital telephone exchange by the end of 1992.

Construction Projects

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date it became his Department's policy to produce environmental impact statements for new defence construction projects; and if he will list all such environmental impact statements produced to date.

Mr. Neubert: My Department first undertook an environmental impact assessment in 1984. Since then it has been the practice to consider their preparation wherever the submission of a notice of proposed development to a local planning authority might give rise to local concern. In so doing, we now adhere to the guidelines issued in 1988 by the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Office, and the Welsh Office.

To date we have produced environmental impact statements in relation to the following proposed developments:

Clyde Submarine Base—Overall development proposals;
Clyde Submarine Base—Glen Fruin Road;
Clyde Submarine Base—Northern Access Road and Garelochhead Bypass;
Clyde Submarine Base—Rhu Narrows;
Clyde Submarine Base—Magnetic Treatment Facility;
NATO Pipeline—Colne to Purton to Fairford;
Otterburn Training Area—New Military road.

Soviet Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what trends have been observed in the rate of production of nuclear-powered submarines by the Soviet Union since 1985.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following a low in the mid-1980s as newer types were introduced, Soviet output of nuclear-powered submarines recovered in 1987 and since then it has remained at about five a year.

ROF, Bishopton

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has with the royal ordnance factory at Bishopton; and what is their financial value.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are currently a total of 24 headquarters contracts placed with the royal ordnance site at Bishopton and these have a total value of £17 million. It is not our practice to disclose details of individual contracts for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Options for Change

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence hether any academics have been asked to work on the udy of options for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence) whether any staff are at present working full-time on ie study of options for change;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 14 June, Official Report, olumn 329, what is the number of staff from (a) the office management and budget and (b) the defence staff, who e engaged in work on the study of options for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Several dozen staff within the linistry of Defence have been involved at various times in rtain aspects of the options for change work in addition their normal duties.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence nether any staff from the Procurement Executive have en involved in the study of options for change.

Mr. Alan Clark: Several dozen staff within the Ministry Defence have been involved at various times in certain pects of the options for change work as part of their rmal duties, and this will include staff from the ocurement Executive.

Military Threats

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence iat is the current assessment of the nature of the military reat from (a) Iraq, (b) Libya and (c) Iran; and what sessment of the potential military threats from each of ese countries has taken place as a result of the study of tions for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All potential threats are kept der constant assessment, but it is not our practice to give tails of such assessments. The implications of changing ernational circumstances are being considered in our mination of options for change.

Tornado

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at communications have taken place between his partment and British Aerospace plc (a) prior to 18 June and (b) since 18 June this year regarding the economic and industrial consequences of the decision not to authorise work on the order for the eighth batch of Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are in constant communication with British Aerospace on a range of topics. The industrial consequences of procurement decisions—18 June 1990, column 771—are a matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the costs to his Department, on cancellation charges, of the reduction in the orders for Tornado aircraft announced on 18 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no cancellation charges as such. Rundown costs will be negotiated with the contractors.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1988-89 the Ministry of Defence invested some £9 million in energy-saving measures throughout the defence estate and a smaller but unquantifiable sum of money on the civil estate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 429, whether he has any plans to increase the number of energy managers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no current plans to increase the number of energy managers, but we keep the matter under review.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 30 April, Official Report, column 429 and 10 May, Official Report, columns 213-14 about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information regarding the floor area of buildings comprising the defence estate is not held centrally. However, the floor area of buildings on the civil estate is estimated to be 6·5 million sq ft.

Tuesday 26 June 1990

WALES

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many relatives of glaucoma sufferers in each district health authority area in Wales received free eyesight tests in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Estimates of numbers of sight tests for different types of patient are based on a 2 per cent. sample. This sample is not sufficient to make robust estimates by patient type within district health authority areas.

Schools (Mid Glamorgan)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any plans to help fund the replacement of dilapidated temporary classrooms with permanent structures in Mid Glamorgan;

(2) what plans the Welsh Office has for helping Mid Glamorgan county council to meet its ongoing annual commitment on repairs and maintenance of the county's schools;

(3) if any provision will be made for the captial building programme to provide funds to replace any of the Mid Glamorgan schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities are responsible for the provision, repair and maintenance of their schools. As in previous years the level of potential capital investment for 1990-91 is sufficient to enable all Welsh education authorities, including Mid Glamorgan county council to continue to meet their obligations according to their own priorities. Nationally the 1990-91 capital settlement included an allowance of £53·7 million for education, a 60 per cent. increase over the equivalent 1985-86 figure. Mid Glamorgan had its fair share of that allowance.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the circulars and other documents of guidance he has issued on the workings, implementation or interpretation of the Children Act 1989 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The following documents have been issued in Wales:

Circulars

Welsh Office Circular 62/89: the Children act 1989: Notice of Royal Assent and the provisions to take immediate or early effect.

Welsh Office Circular 10/90: Training Support Programme 1990-91—Children Act 1989.

Welsh Office Circular 12/90: The children Act (Admission of Hearsay Evidence) Order—Statutory Instrument 143/90.

Other Documents

Children Act 1989: Training Together—Training and Curriculum Model.

An Introduction to the Children Act 1989.

The Care of Children: Principles and Practice in Regulations and Guidance.

Consultation Paper No.1—Secure Accommodation (Guidance and Regulations.)

Obstetricians

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultant obstetricians are employed by the national health service in Wales; and what is the number on a full-time equivalent basis (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority in Wales in the current year and in each of the past five years.

Mr. Grist: The available information, which relates to consultants in obstetrics and gynaecology, is given in the following table:

Consultants in post as at 30 September[1]

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria have been used by his Department to determine how sums of money allocated to support the all-Wales strategy for mental illness should be distributed.

Mr. Grist: Allocations are made on the basis of individual county plans, having regard to their quality and the extent to which they are in line with the principles of the all-Wales strategy. Allocations for the current year have been targeted particularly to help establish the essential infrastructure for the new patterns of services, including the development of community mental health teams, the provision of accommodation and of community-based services such as drop-in centres.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 472, if he will give for each year and each district the number of planning appeals (a) determined, (b) dismissed and (c) undetermined.

Mr. Grist: The information is set out in the following table:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poverty

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of United Kingdom bilateral aid was allocated to poverty alleviation, for the most recent three years available, using the same criteria used for the figures supplied by the Overseas Development Agency in the NAO report, "Bilateral Aid to India", fig. 2, page 10.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures for expenditure on poverty alleviation for the bilateral aid programme overall are not available. The figures for India supplied to the NAO by the Overseas Development Administration related to specific projects in the housing, welfare, education and renewable natural resources sectors which were regarded as being for direct poverty alleviation.

Poverty alleviaton is an important objective of the aid programme and is pursued indirectly through support for sustainable economic growth and by direct action. Projects and programmes supported with aid vary in the extent to which they contribute directly to poverty alleviation. It is not possible to collate meaningful statistics on expenditure that can be categorised as concerned with poverty alleviation and that which cannot.

European Development Fund

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many ecologists are employed at the European development fund and as to how many administrative staff are employed to deal specifically with environmental issues.

Mrs. Chalker: There are seven staff in the environmental unit within DG VIII, which is responsible for the administration of the European development fund. There are two administrators responsible for environmental policy; an ecologist with responsibility for the relevant budget line; two foresters (both seconded to the Commission as "national experts", one from the United Kingdom); and two support staff. The unit is able to call on additional assistance as required from DG XI, which has responsibility within the Commission for environmental matters.

Climate Change

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contributions by the United Kingdom and other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development donors to assist developing countries to participate in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

Mrs. Chalker: According to the report of the IPCC special committee on the participation of developing countries (June 1990), the following contributions were received in 1989 from OECD members other than the United Kingdom:

		Equivalent in Swiss francs
Australia	$ 15,175	24,963·05
Canada	C$ 11,000	14,519·50
Denmark	$ 5,000	7,550·00
Finland	$ 5,000	7,950·00
France	FF 100,000	25,303·00
Federal Republic of Germany	SFr 43,750	43,750·00
Japan	$ 50,000	75,500·00
Netherlands	$ 25,000	40,250·00
Norway	$ 15,000	25,050,00
Switzerland	SFr 55,000	55,000·00
United States of America	$ 120,000	199,500·00

The United Kingdom paid £50,000 (approximately equal to SFr 129,400), making us the second largest contributor in 1989. This year, we have offered a further £25,000.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will discuss with the Governments of France and West Germany the means of continuing taxonomic support for teams working in Malaysia and Cameroon in the light of staff reductions at the natural history museum.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 19 June 1990]: In common with many other Government-funded institutions, including national museums and galleries, the natural history museum is now expected to develop its ability to attract non-Exchequer revenue. The work referred to in Malaysia and Cameroon yields no financial remuneration to the museum, and the museum authorities consider that it will be more appropriate to develop research projects in those countries in collaboration with the ODA's executive agency—the Natural Resources Institute—and with other external funding agencies. I shall be keeping in view the museum's progress to that end, but I have no plans at present to discuss the matter with the French and West German Governments.

Mr Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of reductions in the Heteroptera section of the natural history museum for work sponsored by his Department (a) in Surinam on shield-bugs as transmitters of agricultural diseases and (b) coccid research and its agricultural implications for United Kingdom supported agricultural development programmes.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 19 June 1990]: My Department is not funding any work in Surinam on shield-bugs, nor is it commissioning any research on coccids. There are specialists on both insect groups working at the natural history museum for the Commonwealth Agricultural Bureaux International's institute of entomology, without any duplication of effort as the range of insect species is so vast. I do not anticipate that the planned staff reductions at the museum will have a serious impact on agricultural development programmes supported by the United Kingdom. However ODA's Natural Resources Institute will be continuing to discuss with the museum and the institute of entomology the future of taxonomic and identification needs in support of agricultural development and pest management programmes funded by my Department.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether trade protocols one, two and three with Iraq contained any military components, explosives or propellants.

Mr. Redwood: The British exporters supplying goods to Iraq under the 1983-1986 financial protocols were of course responsible for applying for obtaining export licences for controlled goods in the normal way, and were required to confirm that the relevant Government approvals had been obtained.

Film Industry

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on assistance to the British film industry.

Mr. Forth: The Government provide support of £1·5 million a year through British Screen Finance Ltd. for feature film production, together with a further £0·5 million a year for short films and script development. Our present five-year commitment to British Screen is due to expire at the end of this year, but we announced in July 1989 that funding will continue at the present level of £2 million a year for a further three years, until the end of 1993.

We announced on Friday 15 June that the Government would in addition provide £5 million over the next three years to provide pump-priming finance to support producers seeking to enter European co-production. We also announced a range of other measures including the setting up of a working party to be chaired by my Department to look at the structure of the film industry and how to attract greater private sector finance into United Kingdom film production, and to report back in the autumn.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in opposition to the Exchequer subsidising the British film industry.

Mr. Forth: My Department has received no representations in opposition to the Exchequer subsidising the film industry.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessments under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Forth: My officials have carried out the assessments required under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations in all workplaces occupied by the Department, in accordance with the guidance issued by the Health and Safety Executive.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has anything to add to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 387, in respect of solid fuels.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not use solid fuels.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 383, about energy consumption, if he will give the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The energy consumption figures relate to the total space of 5·8 million square feet occupied by the Department, including office space, specialised and storage buildings.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In past years, responsibility for such investment has been divided between the Property Services Agency and the Department, with the result that this information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. However, it is being collected for future years.

Stock Group (Channel Islands) Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what authorisations were granted by his Department for the activities of Stock Group (Channel Islands) Ltd.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Stock Group (Channel Islands) Ltd. has never received authorisations from the Department. It has carried on stockbroking business in the United Kingdom by virtue of its membership of the international stock exchange until the entry into force of the Financial Services Act on 29 April 1988 and thereafter through authorisation from the Securities Association.

Dunsdale Securities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Dunsdale Securities made annual returns of audit certificates for each year it had business authorisation from his Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958, audit certificates in support of an application for a licence to deal in securities were not required until Aptil 1983 when revised licensing regulations were introduced. After that date each application and monitoring return submitted by Dunsdale Securities was duly verified by an auditor.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Closures

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of each of those local education authority-maintained single-sex schools in South and West Yorkshire which have been closed since 1985, he will list (i) the gender of pupils, (ii) the maintaining local authority and (iii) the number of pupils on roll and physical capacity of the school at the most recent convenient date before closure.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is given in the table. Information on school capacity is not available centrally. There have been no closures of single-sex schools in South Yorkshire since 1985.

Scientists

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the meeting of the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) with Professor Duff and representatives of British scientists abroad.

Mr. Jackson: I met Professor Michael Duff on 20 June. The main points which I made at our meeting were set out in Department of Education and Science press notice 202/90, dated 20 June, in which I pointed out that:

Science is international, and it is highly desirable that scientific careers should include experience of working abroad.

No single country in the modern world can afford first class facilities in every branch of science—and the British Government are actively promoting the development of first-class research facilities in selected areas in Britain, through:

(a) an overall increase in the science budget—up 27 per cent. in real terms since 1979;

(b) the development of specialist "interdisciplinary research centres"; and

(c) the more selective allocation of university research funding by the UFC.

The "brain drain" is a field in which anecdotes are drawn upon for lobbying purposes, but in which facts are hard to come by. The only overall statistics which are available are those collected by the universities and published in the Universities Statistical Record. These show (a) that there has been a net inflow of academic staff into British universities from abroad in every year since 1983; and (b) that there tends to be a net inflow at the professional level, indicating a net gain in quality. This conforms with the finding of the 1987 Royal Society study of the brain drain, that there was a broad balance between the outflows and inflows of scientists from Britain.

The Government accept that the Universities Statistical Record data may not provide a complete picture. This is why I asked the CVCP last year to conduct a review. In the meantime, however, I stressed that, in determining public policy it is better to make use of such information as is available rather than simply to ignore it.

Not all British post-doctoral scientists can, or should, expect to find jobs in British higher education. At least a third of those whose council-funded research studentships ended in 1988 proceeded to work in British industry and public service —and more should do so. Meanwhile, the proportion of "Post Docs" going abroad has fallen from 35 per cent. in 1963 to 12 per cent. in 1988. Recent data from the United States National Science Foundation show that, while the numbers of scientists immigrating into the United States from abroad increased by 19 per cent. between 1984 and 1987, the numbers from the United Kingdom decreased by 6 per cent. during that period.

The USR statistics do not support recent suggestions that there is an "internal" brain drain from the universities into other employment within Britain. They indicate that, in each year since 1983, there was a net inflow of university staff from industry/commerce and public service.

Finally, I suggested to BSA that they should reflect on the implications of their statements for the image and self-image of British science. International comparisons of scientific publications suggest that Britain remains second only to the United States in world science—a position it has maintained throughout the 1980s. I suggested that there is something profoundly wrong with a style of lobbying for public expenditure that leads self-appointed spokesmen for British science to run down their country's scientific achievements and prospects.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the applications for grant-maintained school status notified to his Department from within the seven counties of the south-west.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the 54 proposals for GM Status that have so far reached my right hon. Friend for a decision, he has approved 44 schools. The approvals include seven schools in the south-west. Three schools in that area had their applications rejected. The list of applications is as follows.

List of schools in the seven counties of the south west who have applied for grant-maintained status

County and School	Application Details
Avon
Beechen Cliff School, Bath	Approved, now incorporated.
Dorset
Bournemouth Grammar School	Approved for incorporation on 1 September 1990.
Foster's Grammar School for Boys' Sherborne	Rejected.
Lord Digby's School for Girls, Sherborne.	Rejected.
Devon
Colyton Grammar School	Approved, now incorporated.
Gloucestershire
Ribston Hall High School, Gloucester	Approved, now incorporated.
Marling School, Stroud	Approved for incorporation on 1 September 1990.
Stroud Girls' High School	Approved for incorporation on 1 September 1990.
Pate's Grammar School, Cheltenham	Approved for incorporation on 1 September 1990.
Highwood, School, Nailsworth	Rejected.

Currently, no schools in Cornwall, Somerset and Wiltshire have applied for GM status.

Computers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the school timetable on average English school pupils spend using computers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is not available.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has anything to add to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 392, in respect of solid fuel.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The Department does not occupy any accommodation which consumes solid fuel.

Assessment Tests

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what restrictions he has placed on the circulation within the National Foundation for Educational Research of its work on standard assessment tests commissioned by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of each of the pilot assessments for seven-year-olds.

Mrs. Rumbold: Separate figures for the costs of the pilot assessments are not available. However, the pilots were mounted by the three agencies undertaking the development of standard assessment tasks for seven-year-olds in the core subjects as one aspect of their contracts for this work with the School Examinations and Assessment Council. The total provision made in the School Examinations and Assessment Council's published corporate plan for the continuation of these contracts in 1990-91 is £2·5 million.

National Curriculum

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by individual subject the key phases of the national curriculum which will be introduced in September 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: National curriculum subject requirements will be introduced with effect from 1 August 1990 for key stages as follows:

Key stage	Pupils aged	Subject
1	5/6	Technology
2	7/8	English

Key stage	Pupils aged	Subject
		Mathematics Science Technology
3	11/12	English Technology

Last year, English, mathematics and science were introduced at key stage 1, starting with five to six-year-olds. Mathematics and science were also introduced at key stage 3 last year, starting with 11 to 12-year-olds.

In addition, national curriculum subjects must be taught for a reasonable time as follows:

Key stage	Pupils aged	Subjects	With effect from
1 2 3	5/6-7/8 7/8-11/12 11/12-13-14	All	1 August 1989
4	14/15	English Mathematics Science	1 August 1990

Assessment Tests

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 558, what assessments of each of the pilot studies of standard assessment tests at age seven years are to be made by bodies which are independent of the agencies which developed the pilot studies.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responsibility for evaluation rests with the School Examinations and Assessment Council which will collect common data about the performance of the SATs used in the pilot assessments from each of the SAT development agencies, and which will report to my right hon. Friend in due course.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Appointments)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what civil service guidelines lay down concerning civil servants becoming company directors prior to the termination of employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The civil service pay and conditions of service code states that civil servants may not accept a directorship, except as a nominee of the Government or with the express permission of the permanent head of their Department, in any company holding a contract with their Department. More generally, the code provides that civil servants must not subordinate their public duties to their private interests, and must avoid conflicts of interest.

THE ARTS

Film Industry

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what responsibilities fall to him with regard to the British film industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: My Department funds both the British Film Institute and the national film and television school. I also take the lead in co-ordinating Her Majesty's Government's views on the Commission's proposals for a MEDIA programme designed to strengthen the European audio-visual industry.

Theatres (Audio-description)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps his Department is taking to encourage audio-description in theatres.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is committed to improving access to the arts for disabled people. As part of its arts and disability initiative, it is encouraging audio-description in all its theatres. From October, the council will be monitoring how its clients are implementing this initiative.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about the circumstances of the redundancy payments to long-employed scholars in the service of the natural history museum in South Kensington.

Mr. Luce: I have received no formal representations from trade unions about redundancy payments at the natural history museum. However, I understand that, at a recent meeting between the Office of Arts and Libraries and union representatives, officials of the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists outlined their concerns about the museum's proposals, including the nature of redundancy arrangements. My officials have subsequently briefed me on the outcome of this meeting and have discussed a number of the points with the museum's management.

All questions of staff management such as the circumstances of redundancy payments are the responsibility of the natural history museum's director and trustees.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has anything to add to his answer of 6 June, Official Report, column 607, in respect of solid fuel.

Mr. Luce: No. No solid fuel is used.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to the answer of 1 May, Official Report, column 475, about energy costs, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The figures given in the answer of 1 May relate to 14,261·6 sq. ft. of floor space.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Unitary Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last raised the issue of unitary taxation at a European Council of Finance Ministers meeting.

Mr. Lilley: The European Community continues to take an active interest in unitary taxation and last June, the Government played a prominent part in the Community demarche on unitary tax to the United States Treasury. In response, the United States Treasury said that the issue of unitary taxation remained of serious concern to the Administration of President Bush and that further progress was required before federal concerns on this matter could be put to rest.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the joint Government and United States administration review on unitary tax will be completed.

Mr. Lilley: It is anticipated that the joint review with the United States Treasury on unitary tax will be completed this summer.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what direct action Her Majesty's Government will take to support the efforts of British business with regard to legislation being considered by the Californian legislature on unitary tax.

Mr. Lilley: The Government are fully aware of the difficulties which unitary tax still causes for British businesses and fully support further legislative reform in California. In this connection, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer wrote earlier this year to Secretary Brady at the United States Treasury and Governor Deukmejian in advance of a small delegation of senior Government officials to California to assess the situation as part of the unitary tax review.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in negotiating an amendment to the United Kingdom-United States double taxation treaty on unitary tax.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom sought such an amendment in the 1970s, only for the United States Senate to refuse to ratify such a provision. The United States authorities have in the last few years made it clear that they were looking for progress towards resolving the unitary tax issue in California rather than at federal level. They have, however, equally made it clear that further progress is required before federal concerns on the issue can be put to rest.

Save As You Earn

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when save as you earn will be extended to the banks; and on what terms.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed in his Budget that, in addition to the Department for National Savings and building societies, banks may offer SAYE contracts. Provision has accordingly been included in the Finance Bill. Subject to Royal Assent, approved banks will be able to offer SAYE contracts later in the year. The terms of new SAYE contracts associated with approved employee share option schemes, which enable participants to save up to £150 a month to purchase shares in their company, are to be improved at the same time. The bonus paid on completed contracts will be increased from 12 times to 15 times the monthly contribution (when proceeds are taken after five years) and from 24 to 30 times that contribution (when proceeds are taken after seven years).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eastern Europe

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much food aid has been provided to eastern Europe by the EC and member states so far in the current year.

Mr. Maude: The amount of food aid given by the Community to the countries of central and eastern Europe remains as set out in my answer to the hon. Lady's question of 10 May at column 205. In addition, four member states (Belgium, Spain, France and Luxembourg) have together provided some 2,200 tonnes of food aid for Romania, according to information available to the Commission who are co-ordinating western aid to eastern Europe.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the EC Commission's scoreboard of assistance from the G24 countries to Poland and Hungary has been updated since 24 April.

Mr. Maude: Yes. The Commission updated the G24 scoreboard of assistance provided by the G24 countries to Poland and Hungary on 18 May. A new version is expected in advance of the G24 ministerial meeting on 4 July and this and any future versions will be placed in the Library of the House.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has anything to add to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 405, in respect of solid fuel.

Mr. Sainsbury: No solid fuel is used in office buildings either in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or the Overseas Development Administration.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the posts at which delays of more than nine months elapse between receiving applications for entry clearance and first interview taking place.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 30 April 1990, overseas posts with estimated waiting times to first interview of nine months or longer are:

Post and category	Waiting time (months)
Bombay
Settlement reapplicants	10·0
Islamabad
Fiancé(e)s	10·0
Settlement reapplicants	19·0
Dubai
Non-resident applicants[1]	9·5

[1] Mainly Iranians.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the latest estimated waiting times for interviews in all categories of applicants for entry clearance at posts on the Indian subcontinent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 30 April the estimated waiting times (in months) are:—

	Settlement
	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Islamabad	3	6	10	19
Karachi	1	3	3	6
Dhaka	3	3	3	9
New Delhi	0	3	5	8
Bombay	1	6	9	10
Madras	All settlement applicants 2 months.
Calcutta	No settlement queues.

Setlement queues are organised as follows:
Q1. Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Q2. All spouses, and all children under 18 years.
Q3. Fiancé(e)s and others applying for the first time for settlement.
Q4. Re-applicants.
Visitors
Due to seasonal high demand applicants for visit visas in Islamabad requiring a full interview can expect to wait up to five days. Elsewhere they are dealt with on day of application.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on the present estimates, when he expects the main queues of those applying for entry clearance to the United Kingdom from the Indian sub-continent will be cleared; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to forecast how many applicants will apply for settlement entry clearance in future years nor therefore to predict the length of settlement queues.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he takes to ensure that claimants of social security benefits are fully informed as to their entitlements.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's policy on take-up of benefits is set out in the White Paper on the Government's expenditure plans 1990-91 to 1992-93, chapter 14, paragraph 27, which is in the Library.

B1 Form

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what mistakes were found in the revised and printed B1 form which led his Department not to issue it; how much was spent on the withdrawn B1 form; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No mistakes were found in the April 1990 version of form B1, and it was distributed in the normal way. No stocks have been withdrawn.

Benefit Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what type of assistance would be available to a claimant who, about to start work and unable to manage until they get their first week's wages, approaches a local social security office, as suggested in the revised UB40/UBL18, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Since income support is normally paid fortnightly in arrears, an unemployed person has two weeks' benefit on which to manage until he receives his first wage. Nevertheless, if a person runs out of money and there is serious risk to his or his family's health or safety, a crisis loan from the social fund may be made.

Pensioners

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those pensioners who have recently retired are receiving income from occupational pensions or savings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that in 1987, 90 per cent. of those pensioners who had recently retired[1] had income from either occupational pensions or savings or from both of these income sources.
Source: [1] Family expenditure survey.
"recently retired" includes those pensioners within five years of pensionable age.

EC Citizens

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if any record is maintained of the sums paid out from his Department's offices to EC nationals and the citizens of overseas territories of EC member states.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No record is kept of the total sums paid by the Department to EC nationals and the citizens of overseas territories of EC member states.

Local Offices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many executive officers there are in his Department's office in (a) Caernarfon and (b) Porthmadog; how many of these, respectively, are Welsh-speaking; how many new appointments have been made during the past 12 months to such posts in each office; and how many of these new appointments are Welsh-speaking.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Caernarfon local office has 16 executive officers in post, of whom 10 are Welsh-speaking. No new executive officer appointments were made during the past 12 months.

The Porthmadog local office has 14 executive officers in post, all Welsh-speaking. One new appointment was made during the past 12 months.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct his Department's office at Clarence road, Manchester, to reply to the letters of 28 February, 2 April and 3 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. B. P. Madden, 4 Barnesdale close, Manchester.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The manager of Longsight local office has written to the right hon. Member on 25 June in reply to his letters of 28 February, 2 April and 3 May on behalf of Mr. B. P. Madden of 4 Barnesdale close, Manchester. I very much regret the uncharacteristic delays by the local office in responding to the correspondence.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether a person who deprives himself of a substantial amount of capital is entitled to receive an income-related benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Where the independent adjudicating authority decides that a person has deprived himself of capital for the purpose of receiving an income-related benefit, regulations provide for him to be treated as notionally still possessing that capital. Benefit may be payable, however, if the total capital, including any notional capital, that he possesses does not exceed the capital limit for that benefit. As my noble Friend Lord Henley announced in another place on 25 June, regulations are to be introduced into all the income-related benefits from October to provide for the phased reduction of the national capital according to the circumstances of the particular case.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down into the different benefits the extra £100 million which is being spent in real terms on income-related benefits in comparison with the old scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's estimates of expenditure in April 1988 suggest that overall expenditure on weekly benefit payments in the pre and post-reform schemes was broadly the same. However, owing to the very different nature of the two schemes, and subsequent improvements in the benefit system, straightforward comparisons between overall expenditure on income-related benefits under the old and new schemes have become less meaningful with the passage of time.

Family Incomes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) Official Report, 3 May, column 653, what proportion of the lowest quintile were dependent on social security benefits broken down by family type and type of benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is set out in the tables.

The tables show the proportion of people in the lowest quintile in 1979 who were in households receiving the various benefits. The tables do not show what other sources of income may have been received by these households.

Individuals in lowest quintile of income distribution showing proportion living in households receiving benefits by family type of benefit unit 1979

Single without children	40	15	25	20	100
TOTAL	31	25	39	5	100

Notes:

1. Figures for individual family types are rounded to nearest 5 per cent. Figures may not add to 100 per cent. because of rounding.
2. SB: Supplementary Benefit; RP: Retirement Pension; CB: Child Benefit.
3. Benefit receipt is to the household as a whole. Thus, for example, where two or more benefit units are sharing a household, all household members would be shown in the supplementary benefit column if any of them was receiving supplementary benefit.
4. Figures are according to the definitions used in "Households Below Average Income".
5. People receiving more than one relevant benefit appear in the first appropriate column.

Social Security Benefits

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving family credit or income support in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The figures requested are set out in the table.

	Greenock and Port Glasgow	Strathclyde	Scotland
Income Support[1]	16,076	275,812	490,067
Family Credit[2]	883	14,995	36,000

[1] Data are derived from a 100 per cent. count of cases in action in May 1990, which include a number where benefit payment has ceased but other action is continuing and are provisional and subject to amendment.

[2] Number of families receiving Family Credit in Greenock, Port Glasgow and Strathclyde on 1 June 1990 ie excludes awards on claims made before that date but not decided at that stage. For Scotland caseload is as at the end of March 1990, including backdated awards and is therefore provisional. Information on this basis is available only for Scotland as a whole.

Home Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many home visits, excluding those made for the purpose of investigating suspected fraud, were made per 1,000 claimants for the latest year available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, 149·34 home visits were made per 1,000 income support claimants. Specialist visits, including those for the purpose of investigating suspected fraud, have been excluded from the calculation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases awaited determination before the immigration appeal tribunal as at 31 May or the nearest available date.

The Attorney-General: As at 22 June 1990, 237 cases awaited determination before the immigration appeal tribunal.

Factortame

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the juridical implications of the ruling of the European Court of Justice in Factortame.

The Attorney-General:

The Context

Owners and operators of certain fishing vessels formerly registered as British have claimed that some of the registration conditions contained in part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 are incompatible with Community law. They have applied to the High Court for judicial review.

The divisional court has referred the relevant questions of Community law to the European Court of Justice for a ruling. But the applicants also asked the divisional court for interim relief to protect their claimed rights in the meantime, by disapplying the relevant provisions of the Act pending final judgment.

The Secretary of State for Transport has opposed this application strongly.

The divisional court decided to grant the interim relief that was asked for. It ordered that the relevant part of the 1988 Act should be disapplied, so as to allow all previous registrations to remain in effect pending the European Court's ruling.

The Secretary of State appealed. The Court of Appeal reversed that order, and the House of Lords upheld the Court of Appeal. It held that, as a matter of national law, the divisional court had no jurisdiction to make any such order.

The House of Lords itself, however, referred to the European Court the separate question whether in the circumstances of the case Community law either obliged the national court to grant interim relief by suspending the application of a national measure, or alternatively gave it power to grant such interim protection of the rights claimed; and, if so, upon the application of what criteria.

The immediate effect

The United Kingdom argued before the European Court that Community law neither obliged nor enabled a national court to grant interim relief suspending the application of a national measure where the national court was debarred by national law from doing so. The court has, however, ruled that, where a national court would have granted such interim relief in order to protect directly effective Community law rights had it not been for a rule of its national law prohibiting it from so doing, it must as a matter of Community law set aside that rule.

In consequence the application for judicial review now returns to the English courts for decision as to whether interim relief should now be granted and, if so, on what terms. The Secretary of State will make submissions as to the general criteria to be applied and will argue strongly that interim relief ought not to be granted in the present case; but since the matter is sub judice it would be wrong to say more. Meanwhile, the practical position as regards fishing rights remains unchanged pending resolution of this issue.

When a country joins the Community it is obliged to reconcile its constitution, whether written or unwritten, with Community membership. It has to provide for the application of Community law within its territory, which means providing for Community law to have supremacy over any conflicting provisions of its own national law.

Community law requires that directly effective Community law rights must be fully and uniformly applied in all the member states. If the provisions of any national law might prevent, even temporarily, Community rules from having such force and effect as Community law requires, national courts shall be able to set them aside. This requirement derives from article 5 of the treaty of Rome. It is Parliament that has given effect to requirements such as this, by means of the provisions of section 2(1) of the European Communities Act 1972:

"All such rights, powers, liabilities, obligations and restrictions from time to time created or arising by or under the Treaties, and all such remedies and procedures from time to time provided for by or under the Treaties, as in accordance with the Treaties are without further enactment to be given legal effect or used in the United Kingdom shall be recognised and available in law, and be enforced, allowed and followed accordingly; . . ."

In Factortame the Court of Justice held that the full effectiveness of Community law would be impaired if a jurisdictional rule in the law of a member state prevented its national courts from granting interim relief so as to preserve directly effective rights claimed under Community law, where the national courts would otherwise consider it appropriate to do so. The House of Lords is accordingly now under a Community law obligation to give effect to the ruling, because that ruling is automatically brought into English law by the operation of section 2(1) of the 1972 Act. Moreover, by virtue of section 2(4) of the Act, Parliament has provided that an Act of Parliament such as the 1988 Act is to be construed and have effect subject to the obligations and powers which arise under section S2(1):

"[S2(4)] . . . and any enactment passed or to be passed, other than one contained in this Part of this Act, shall be construed and have effect subject to the foregoing provisions of this section . . ."

Finally, it is important to note that the ruling of the Court of Justice applies equally to the national courts of every member state.

SCOTLAND

Local Enterprise Companies

75. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how his Department intends to monitor the quality of training provided by LECs.

Mr. Lang: It will be for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise respectively to monitor —through regular data returns and visits—the quality of training delivered by the local enterprise companies in their areas. The Scottish Office will monitor the performance of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise in carrying out this task.

Trials (Angus Sheriff Courts)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases did not proceed to trial on the day allocated in Angus sheriff courts; and what assessment he has made of the ability of Scottish courts to cope with the volume of business they are currently undertaking.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During May 1990, 29 summary trials did not proceed on the day allocated, seven due to lack of court time and 22 for other reasons. The ability of Scottish courts to cope with business is kept under continuous review.

Brook Advisory Centres

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make additional funds available to the Brook advisory centres in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The Brook advisory centre in Scotland receives grant assistance from the Scottish Home and Health Department towards the administrative costs of its all-Scotland education activities. For 1990-91 the centre has been awarded a grant of £6,700. No representations have been received regarding the level of grant and all the available resources have been fully allocated.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessments under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Responsibility for undertaking these assessments in the Scottish Office and for acting on the results has been delgated to heads of divisions and professional units. Because the performance of many diverse tasks is relevant, and because the responsibilities often in practice overlap with other management responsibilities no attempt is made to maintain central records of the issues that have arisen.

Rents-to-mortgages Scheme

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to extend the rents-to-mortgages scheme to new town properties in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The rents-to-mortgages scheme has been available to tenants of development corporations and Scottish Homes since its introduction in 1989.

Privacy

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement in respect of his response to the recommendations of the committee on privacy and related matters so far as they affect Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In his statement on 21 June, at columns 1123-24, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary expressed the Government's warm welcome for the general approach taken in the report of the committee. The committee concluded that existing civil law remedies against press intrusion offences were adequate in Scotland, and it endorsed the Scottish position on the identification of victims of crime. The committee noted that some of the most serious forms of press intrusion might be subject to criminal proceedings under Scots common law. As recommended by the committee, we shall consider whether any extension of the law of Scotland is required in respect of the three new criminal offences proposed by them.

Sheriff Officers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheriff officers operating under section 7 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act 1888, and certificated by a sheriff principal, are operating in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The Law of Distress Amendment Act 1888 does not extend to Scotland.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many certificated sheriff officers are operating within the courts in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sheriff officers are not certificated. They hold commissions from sheriffs principal and as at 1 January 1990 there were 191 individuals with commissions. An individual can hold commissions for more than one sheriff court area.

Capital Assets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the regions which have now completed their register of capital assets; and if he will give the number of entries made on each register.

Mr. Rifkind: All health boards are currently working towards the completion of asset registers.

Sewerage

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes to make any funds available to Scottish regional and islands councils for expenditure on sewerage improvements.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government are committed to further improving the quality of our rivers and coastal waters. There are pressing needs for new and upgraded sewage treatment and disposal facilities to meet European Community bathing water and other environmental standards and Scotland is disproportionately affected. Accordingly, I have decided, subject to the necessary legislation and in due course the approval by Parliament of funds, to make available to regional and islands councils a capital grant of £130 million over three years for works on sewerage, sewage treatment and disposal to reduce pollution or otherwise benefit the environment. The amounts available, at a grant rate of 75 per cent. on eligible works, would be £30 million in 1991-92, £45 million in 1992-93 and £55 million in 1993-94.

Home Improvement Grants

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the new system for home improvement grants will come into operation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No date has been set for the introduction of a new improvement grant system in Scotland. The Government's proposals for reform of the present system were set out in a consultation paper which received many constructive comments. These are being considered fully as details of the proposed new system are developed. It is our intention that a further consultation paper will be issued before legislation to reform the system is placed before Parliament.

Social Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many extra social workers and support staff are being appointed and what training provisions have been made to implement the community care programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No information is kept centrally as to the number of extra social workers or support staff being appointed by local authorities specifically for community care, but the total number of staff on a whole-time equivalent basis employed by local authority social work departments increased from 32,453 in October 1987 to 35,228 in October 1989.

In order to ensure that local authorities and other agencies will be equipped to undertake their new responsibilities anticipated in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, the Scottish Office has funded the university of Dundee to provide a training programme for key members of staff in the social work departments and the other agencies involved in community care for a three year period from 1990, with a possible extension to five years. Discussions are also being held with officials of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, Dundee university and the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work on ways of providing short-term training for the staff immediately involved in establishing the new community care procedures and the production of a training pack for use by local authorities in training the wide variety of staff involved in community care.

Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the spending and (b) the number of participants in each of his training and employment measures in (i) the last three years, (ii) the current year and (iii) projections for the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Information about projected numbers and spending on training and employment measures in Scotland for the next three years is not available. For the last three years and the current year, it has not been possible to provide all the information requested in precisely the form required. In so far as data are available, they are set out in the tables:

[1] Number of participants means number of entrants to the programmes or number of starts in training as appropriate.

[2] This covers YTS, and in 1990-91 Youth Training. The expenditure figures do not include elements of National Providers Unit expenditure paid for from a GB budget.

[3] Adult Training includes the original Job Training Scheme, Training for Enterprise, Access to Information Technology, Self Standing Work

Preparation and Training linked to the Community Programme. The 1989-90 expenditure is residual and includes Community Programme and New Job Training Scheme.

[4] The Community Programme and New Job Training Scheme ended in August 1988 and 1988-89 expenditure cannot be broken down below GB level. Numbers of participants for 1988-89 are until the end of August 1988.

[5] This programme took over from Adult Training, Community Programme and the New Job Training Scheme on 2 September 1988. The expenditure figures do not include elements of National Providers Unit expenditure paid from a GB budget but do include expenditure on Community Opportunities. These figures include an element for trainee allowances.

[6] This programme started at the same time as Employment Training.

Disabled Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that access funds are sufficient to meet the applications of all entitled students.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990.]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science announced on 26 March 1990, Official Report, column 34, the Government have increased to £20 million the access funds available for higher education, making a total provision—including £5 million for the further education access fund—of £25 million in 1990-91. The purpose of this increase is to give the higher education institutions greater scope for extending discretionary assistance on a flexible basis to their students, notably those facing relatively high accommodation costs.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of each of the access funds associated with the student loans scheme has been allocated to him to disperse.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has made provision for a total of £2·1 million to be distributed to non-university institutions of higher and further education in Scotland in 1990-91.

The breakdown of this figure between the three funds is as follows:

	£ million
Postgraduate Fund	0·26
In Scope of Loans Fund	1·10
Further Education Fund	0·76
	[1]2·1

[1] Rounded.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines about entitlement he has established for access funds in Scotland;

(2) whether any categories of application for access funds will have priority funding.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Subject to the terms of the necessary regulations, a statement of the terms and conditions for the payment of access funds, together with associated guidance notes, will be prepared. It is intended to issue these to grant-aided colleges, education authorities and further education colleges in Scotland during July. Individual institutions will be entirely free to manage the administration of their share of the access funds in accordance with those terms and conditions and to determine the priority to be afforded to any particular category of applicant.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have been held between the Scottish Education Department and education institutions about access funds; and what was the outcome of the talks.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Officials of the Scottish Education Department have held discussions with representatives of the Conference of Scottish Centrally Funded Colleges on the proposal to introduce access funds, with particular reference to the position of the Scottish grant-aided colleges. Similar discussions have been held with representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Directors of Education in Scotland in relation to further education colleges in Scotland. These discussions were necessarily of a preliminary nature. It was made clear that the detailed provisions of the access funds would be set out formally in advance of their introduction in Session 1990-91.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what administrative procedures he has established to allocate access funds in Scotland;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that access funds are available at the start of the academic year.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The level of resources for access funds to be allocated to each grant-aided college in Scotland will be determined by my right hon. and learned Friend, broadly on the basis of the number of full-time students in attendance at that institution. A similar allocation system will apply to each further education college in Scotland, taking account of the numbers of full-time students aged 19 and over.

Subject to the terms of the necessary regulations, payment of access funds' allocations will be made so that they are available for distribution by institutions with effect from 1 September 1990.

Lord Advocate (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates when the Lord Advocate was abroad on official business during the present parliamentary Session.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate was abroad on official business on the following dates:

21 to 26 January 1990
4 to 6 March 1990
12 to 27 April 1990

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Fleets

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the system of certification for work on existing aircraft fleets to deal with new acquisitions.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation, and the certification of aircraft is part of the regulatory process. There is no reason for the Department to interfere.

I understand that any aircraft coming on to the United Kingdom register of aircraft has to meet the full requirements of the air navigation order for both initial issue and renewal of its certificate of airworthiness. Aircraft not on the United Kingdom register which are used by British operators may be leased only from states which are signatories to the convention on international civil aviation and which thus comply with the requirements of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Bus Companies (Subsidies)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove of 19 June on subsidies to bus companies, what is the present annual cost to public funds of subsidies to bus companies in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Freeman: We estimate that some £6·6 million in fuel duty rebate was paid to bus companies in Greater Manchester in 1988-89, and some £30,000 in rural bus grant. In addition, the passenger transport executive made direct subsidy payments to bus companies for running socially necessary services of £10·7 million; they also gave support to the bus industry in other ways such as the provision of bus stations and publicity for timetables.

Aircraft (Counterfeit Parts)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a study of the use of counterfeit parts in commercial and private aircraft with landing rights in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: It would be quite impracticable to investigate the service history of the thousands of aircraft which may land in the United Kingdom in order to study the possible use of counterfeit parts; it would be a gross intrusion into the responsibilities of the states of registry of the aircraft concerned; the industry is well aware of the problem and is taking effective steps to combat it; and the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the regulation of civil aviation, is also aware of the problem.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relationship between civil aircraft accidents in the United Kingdom, or over United Kingdom airspace, and the use of bogus or faulty replacement parts.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the safety data analysis unit of the Civil Aviation Authority, which has been keeping the relevant statistics since 1976, that there have been no accidents to public transport aircraft in any way related to unauthorised parts.

There have been seven accidents to private aircraft after which the investigation discovered unauthorised parts, but these were not directly the cause of the accidents. Three of the aircraft involved were light aeroplanes, three were microlight aeroplanes and one was a light helicopter.

Airport Maintenance Engineers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the resources being devoted to the Civil Aviation Authority inspectorate for work on monitoring the qualifications and resources of maintenance engineers at British airports and the effectiveness of the certification process.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority from time to time and discusses, among other things, the Civil Aviation Authority's resources. However, the detailed allocation of those resources is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation.

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken since the publication in November 1989 of the National Audit Office report on road maintenance and building.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has completed preliminary consideration of the recommendations made by the NAO and the accounting officer has given evidence to the Public Accounts Committee. It has already reviewed its quality control reporting procedures. The Department will decide whether further action is necessary when it has received and considered the committee's report.

A40 Western Avenue

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the estimated cost of the A40 Western avenue improvement scheme in November 1987; and what is the latest estimate for these works.

Mr. Atkins: I presume that my hon. Friend is concerned with the scheme to improve the A40 Western avenue at its junction with Long lane. The estimated cost quoted in the Secretary of State's decision letter of November 1987 was £18·2 million (1986 prices). The latest published estimate was £34·1 million (1987 prices). The cost of the scheme has been reassessed, in accordance with the Department's usual practice, before tenders are invited this summer for the first of two major construction contracts. For commercial reasons it is not the Department's practice to reveal such estimates at this stage. An indication of the size of the contract will be given when notice of intention to invite tenders is published in the EC's Official Journal.

Driving Tests

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions have been reached about conducting heavy goods vehicle and public services vehicle driving tests on Saturdays.

Mr. Atkins: The recent 12-month trial has confirmed that Saturday vocational testing is a practical proposition and provides a service that is welcomed by customers. During the year some 4,300 Saturday tests were conducted and the number of centres where the waiting times for vocational tests were at or below four weeks doubled. I have decided to continue the service on a permanent basis and to make it available at all centres where Saturday testing is feasible and there are examiners available.

EC Transport Council

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the meeting of the European Community Transport Council on 18-19 June.

Mr. Parkinson: I attended the meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers which was held in Luxembourg on 18 to 19 June. My hon. Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping was also present.

I am particularly pleased that the Council adopted a second package of measures which seals the commitment to the liberalisation of air transport in the European Community by the end of 1992.

The new package builds on the first set of measures agreed in 1987. It contains arrangements for setting fares which introduces an element of double disapproval and simplifies the existing zonal system; further relaxes the limits on capacity sharing; and eases access to the market. The Council accepted the need to deal quickly with predatory practices; agreed principles against which air cargo services should be further liberalised; and agreed to open aviation negotiations with the EFTA countries.

The Government welcome this second package. We have taken the lead in pressing for maximum progress, and the agreement which we have won will give airlines greater scope to respond to market demands. The way is open for airlines to offer greater choice to consumers.

On shipping matters, the Council adopted resolutions highlighting the importance of safety on ferries, in the light of recent tragic accidents; and on pollution at sea. It was agreed that a regulation on block exemptions for consortia should be adopted by the end of the year. There were discussions, but no agreements, on cabotage, and on the transfer of vessels between EC registers. The Commission gave a report on implementation of the 1986 measures on liberalisation.

A conditional agreement was reached by the Council on a further ad-hoc programme to December 1992 to support the development of certain transport infrastructure projects. This is subject to the resolution of outstanding questions on the scope of the programme and the way in which it will be operated.

On inland transport the Council agreed to abolish minimum hire periods for vehicles without drivers and restrictions on hire of vehicles under 6 tonnes by own account operators. Discussions were held on measures in the event of a crisis in road haulage; road haulage quotas for 1991 and 1992; the maximum length of road trains; road safety; and fiscal harmonisation and the proposed German lorry tax. The Commission reported the state of play in the negotiations between the Community and Switzerland, Austria and Yugoslavia over third country transit.

Among the items discussed briefly under "Other Business" were air traffic control, transport relations between the two Germanies, European high-speed railways and the alignment of Community and AETR (the European agreement concerning the work of crews of vehicles engaged in international road transport) rules on drivers hours. The Commission responded favourably to a United Kingdom request for regular reports on implementation of EC transport legislation.

Noise Insulation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the eligibility of householders for grants to cover the cost of insulation when traffic noise levels exceed 68 decibels.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 govern eligibility for an offer of insulation or grant to owners or tenants of dwellings and other buildings used for residential purposes. The criteria in the regulations apply in respect of new or altered roads. There is no provision for insulation against increased traffic noise from existing roads.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total value of insulation work carried out and grants made (a) as a duty under regulation 3 of the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 and (b) as a power under regulation 4 of those regulations, since 1985.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Information on expenditure for noise insulation is not held in the form requested. Since 1985 the total value of insulation work carried out and grants made in respect of the trunk road programme in England is estimated at £7 million. This figure includes insulation provided under regulations 3 and 4 and under regulation 5 against construction noise.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 217, and 30 April, Official Report, column 434, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Energy consumption and expenditure figures quoted in the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 217, and 30 April, Official Report, column 434, relate to the total of 3,619,718 sq ft of accommodation occupied by the Department of Transport.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Of the order of 10 per cent. of its expenditure on energy is estimated to have been invested by the Department of Transport in energy efficiency measures in 1989-90.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Security

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children claimed under the community grant heading of the social fund from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990; and of these how many received payment at each of the social security offices in South Down.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Social Fund Community Care Grants 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990

Social Security Office	Number of applications	Number of awards
Ballynahinch	294	103
Banbridge	734	433
Downpatrick	858	386
Kilkeel	255	192
Newcastle	383	216
Newry	2,432	1,211
Total (South Down)	4,956	2,541

Teachers

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is made under local management of schools for cover teachers in the case of illness; what representations he has received concerning the relationship between this provision and the present practice of employing a substitute teacher on the third day of absence; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under local management of schools the cost of substitute cover after the 20th day of a teacher's absence because of illness will not be a charge on a school's budget but will be met centrally. The cost of illness cover before this will fall to be met from the school's budget. Where substitute cover would not apply under the normal arrangements and the board of governors of a school has delegated responsibility for managing teacher costs, it is, of course, open to the school to use some of its budget to fund such cover.

I have received one representation on this matter and have no plans to change the arrangements.

Privacy

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement in respect of his response to the recommendations of the committee on privacy and related matters so far as they affect Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The terms of reference of the committee did not extend to Northern Ireland. We are considering whether the proposals might be appropriate for introduction in Northern Ireland.

Terrorist Bomb Damage

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how payments to loss adjusters are calculated in Northern Ireland in respect of terrorist bomb damage.

Mr. Cope: Payments made to loss adjusters are in respect of fees. These are calculated in accordance with scales agreed with representatives of companies which act for the Northern Ireland Office in criminal damage claims. The fee payable in each case depends on the amount of compensation determined.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the report he has received from the Standing Advisory commission on Human Rights on religious and political discrimination and equality of opportunity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I am publishing the report today as a command paper (Cm. 1107) and copies have been laid before Parliament.

The report "Religious and Political Discrimination and Equality of Opportunity in Northern Ireland: Second Report" concluded a major review by the commission of the laws and institutions dealing with religious and political discrimination and equality of opportunity in Northern Ireland. The commission's first report "Report on Fair Employment" was published as a command paper (Cm. 237) in 1987.

I am grateful to the commission for the considerable effort which has been devoted to the preparation of the report which I regard as a valuable one and a welcome contribution to how human rights might be further protected in Northern Ireland. It would be inappropriate of me to commit the Government to accepting the commission's recommendations before there has been an opportunity for these to be fully considered, but I am firmly committed to eradicating discrimination and ensuring equality of opportunity for everyone in Northern Ireland whatever their religious background. I shall therefore be giving the report and its detailed recommendations the very careful consideration they deserve before reaching any conclusions.

Maternity Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on the application of the reports of the maternity services advisory committee by health boards.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The four health and social services boards in Northern Ireland have been asked to ensure that the recommendations made in the maternity services advisory committee reports are taken into account in the planning and organisation of maternity services in their areas.

Bangor Post-primary School

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason the South Eastern education and library board excluded all-ability, co-educational and integrated status for the proposed post-primary school for the Bangor area, in their current consultations.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 25 June 1990]: It is a matter in the first instance for the South Eastern education and library board to decide the character and type of post-primary provision which will meet the best educational interests of secondary age children in the Bangor area. The consultation which it carries out in this issue is a matter for the board.

ENVIRONMENT

Nursery Schools

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have reduced nursery school places by more than 10 per cent. as a result of community charge capping.

Mr. Portillo: Although I have no information about whether authorities have reduced their nursery school places, I can say that the Government have proposed to cap only those councils which are budgeting to spend well in excess of what we believe it would be appropriate for them to spend.

Searches

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the average length of time taken by each of the district councils in Staffordshire to undertake searches for solicitors in the four most recent three-month periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: None.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the percentages of planning decisions made in four weeks, eight weeks, and 12 weeks by each of the district councils in Staffordshire and in the Peak District national park in the 12 most recent three-month periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: Information on planning decisions made by local authorities is not collated in the format requested. The information which is available is listed in the table.

Lincolnshire County Council (Planning)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to change the regulations that allow local authorities to give themselves deemed planning consent.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on 7 February, Official Report, volume 166, column 638. I am currently considering responses to the consultation paper referred to in that reply.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to intervene in the case of Lincolnshire county council and its plan to grant planning permission contrary to structure plan policy, at Surfleet near Spalding without any determination from South Holland district council.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has issued a direction to Lincolnshire county council under article 14 of the Town and Country General Development Order 1988, preventing the council from deeming itself planning permission for this proposed development without special authorisation from the Secretary of State. A decision will be made in due course on whether to require the council to apply to the Secretary of State for planning permission for the development.

Councillors (Pecuniary Interests)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend circular 105/73 so as to dispense only those councillors who are not in rent arrears from the obligations and disabilities arising from the pecuniary interest provisions of the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Portillo: None. We consider that the general dispensation under circular 105/73 does not extend to councillors who are in rent arrears voting on questions relating to such arrears. There is, however, no reason why the existence of arrears, for which there may be a good explanation, should disable a councillor from speaking or voting on other questions of general housing policy.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and in what manner he expects the London Docklands development corporation to publish its budget for the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: The corporation will provide details of its expenditure programme for 1990-91 in its corporate plan to be published in September.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department has made in its re-examination, in relation to the grant-related expenditure assessment for 1989-90, of the standard spending assessment for 1990-91 for Torbay.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has made it clear that he is willing to consider any fresh evidence on standard spending assessments before making decisions for 1991-92. Officials are currently discussing with the local authority associations the evidence which has been brought forward.

Threatened Species

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to secure an EC ban on the transit of threatened species through the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: No. Such a ban would be inconsistent with the provisions of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora and regulation EEC No. 3626/82.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievement of target completion dates in respect of BATNEEC notes for prescribed processes and scheduled processes under the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Trippier: The production of BATNEEC notes is proceeding according to the programme for introducing integrated pollution control, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 26 April 1990.

Particle and Fibre Board Industry

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (a) if he will list the membership of the working party concerned with the particle and fibre board industry, indicating which members are (i) representatives of HMIP, (ii) representatives of local authorities, (iii) representatives of environmental or community groups and (iv) employed with the particle and fibre board industry; and (b) what criteria he used to determine the membership of the working party.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: (a) The membership of the working party is as follows:

Dr. M. G. Bigg, HMIP
Mr. A. S. Fidling, Glyndwr District Council

Representatives of the particle board and fibre board industry
Mr. T. Allison
Mr. K. H. Bryant
Mr. D. G. Duke-Evans
Mr. N. F. Hodnett
Mr. C. P. Towl
Mr. R. Kenworth
Mr. A. F. Kerr
Mr. R. N. Stewart
Mr. A. Twitchett

In addition to the working party meetings discussions have taken place between Dr. M. G. Bigg and the following representatives of local authorities whose residents are affected by particle board and fibre board processes:

Mr. A. Millie, North Devon District Council
Mr. A. Fuller, Alyn and Deeside District Council
Mr. S. Fraser, Cullinghame District Council
Mr. D. Hubbick, Tynedale District Council
Mr. N. Findlay, Coleraine District Council
Mr. T. Rose, Sterling District Council
Mr. A. Fidling, Glyndwr District Council

In addition a meeting has been held with representatives of the following community groups:

Central Scotland Environmental Action Group (CSEAG)
The National Association for the Control of Chipboard Industry Pollution
Chirk Residents Environmental Group (CREG)
Mr. A. Fidling, Glyndwr District Council was also present at this meeting.

(b) HMIP invited the local authority associations, local government professional institutions, and the industry to nominate members to serve on the working party. All the members nominated were appointed.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference of the working party concerned with the particle and fibre board industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A group is preparing the first draft of the guidance for local authority air pollution control of the manufacture of particle board and fibre board. The terms of reference of this group are to determine the appropriate techniques to meet the objectives set down in section 7(2)(a) of the Environmental Protection Bill.

The objectives are: ensuring that in carrying on a prescribed process, the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost will be used:

(i) for preventing the release of substances prescribed for air into air or, where that is not practicable by such means, for reducing the release of such substances to a minimum and for rendering harmless any such substances which are so released; and

(ii) for rendering harmless any other substances which might cause harm if released into any environmental medium.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the re-appointment of the chairman of the London residuary body.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has today re-appointed Sir Godfrey Taylor as chairman of the London residuary body for a further term from 12 August until 31 March 1993.

The bulk of the London residuary body's remaining GLC-related property, rights and liabilities were transferred by order to the London boroughs and other functional successors on 30 March. This marked the virtual completion of the residuary body's highly successful role in relation to the abolition of the GLC. Its main task now is to discharge the responsibilities which it has inherited as a consequence of the abolition of the ILEA.

The re-appointment reflects the confidence of my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Education and Science, in Sir Godfrey's and his board's ability to complete the residuary body's new tasks by 31 March 1993.

Council Rents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average English council rent level as a percentage of (a) average male earnings and (b) the national insurance retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple in each of the years since 1987 for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Average council rents expressed as a percentage of average earnings and national insurance retirement pension levels are notional calculations. In particular, it should be emphasised that council tenants whose sole income is a national insurance retirement pension would usually qualify for rent assistance through housing benefit and others with incomes from other sources may also qualify. For example, in 1988, 1·3 million retirement pensioners were receiving rent rebate from their local authority; the average value was £17·81 a week for pensioners receiving housing benefit and income support and £12·54 for pensioners receiving housing benefit only.

Frogs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made so far in Leicester polytechnic's study of the population levels of frogs; when it expects to complete its research; and what assessment he has made of the implications for policy.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Nature Conservancy Council advises me that it has contracted Leicester polytechnic to update a survey made in the early 1980s into the population status and trends of nine widespread species of amphibians and reptiles, including the common frog. Questionnaires have recently been circulated and the polytechnic is due to report to the Nature Conservancy Council in October.

World Cup

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other countries in connection with the monitoring of the behaviour of football fans in Italy for the World Cup competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I have held a number of discussions with the Italian authorities to assist them in making safety and security arrangements for England's participation in the tournament and for the appropriate monitoring of the behaviour of English supporters.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when officials or Ministers in his Department plan to meet officials of the Football Supporters Association in Italy.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Officials from my Department have had meetings with the Football Supporters Association in connection with the World Cup both in England before the tournament began and in Italy during the England team's stay in Sardinia.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has requested from the Football Supporters Association for use in assessing the behaviour of English football supporters at the World Cup tournament.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have today given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing). My Department has not found it necessary to seek such information from the Football Supporters Association, as officials in Italy during the World Cup are able to provide me with a first-hand assessment.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what aid his Department has granted to the Football Supporters Association towards establishing its football embassy in Italy.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: My Department welcomed the setting up of the Football Supporters Association advice centre in Sardinia in connection with England's participation in the World Cup. The question of Government financial assistance for the centre has not arisen.

Geographic Information

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions have been taken by his Department following the receipt of the report by the Chorley committee on the handling of geographic information in 1987.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Government's response to the report of the committee of inquiry chaired by Lord Chorley was published in February 1988. This document sets out the Government's reponse to each of the recommendations made by the Chorley committee and where these relate to the Department of the Environment my officials are actively engaged in carrying them forward.

One of the key responses to the report of the Chorley committee has been the establishment of the Association of Geographic Information (AGI), the launch of which was attended by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan). The Department is a sponsor member of the AGI and is represented on its council.

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the relationship between article 1.5 of Council directive 85/337/EEC, on the environmental assessment of certain projects, and the private Bill procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 25 June 1990]: A number of representations have been received in the last two years about article 1.5 of directive 85/337/EEC on environmental assessment which provides that the directive shall not apply to projects, the details of which are adopted by a specific act of national legislation. The Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedures included in its 1988 report (HC 625 Session 1987-88) a recommendation that promoters of works Bills must deposit either an environmental statement or a certificate from the appropriate Secretary of State saying that an assessment is not necessary as the project does not fall within the scope of the directive. The Government have welcomed this recommendation and are consulting the authorities in both Houses about its implementation.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contacts he has had with the Commission of the European Communities concerning compliance by the United Kingdom with the requirements of Council directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment, in respect of works intended to be authorised by the private Bill procedure.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In the case of the King's Cross Railway Bill currently before Parliament the EC Commission forwarded a complaint in January this year alleging that directive 85/337/EEC was being infringed. The Commission was advised in response on 27 February that, although those proposals were exempt from the provisions of the directive because they were contained in a private Bill, British Rail—the promoters—had produced an environmental statement voluntarily. The Commission was advised of the recommendation of the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedures in so far as it related to environmental assessment and the Government's acceptance of that particular recommendation.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals for further regulations to implement Commission directive 85/337/EEC on environmental assessment.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: As indicated in the recent consultation document on "Private Bills and New Procedures" (Cm. 1110) environmental assessment requirements would be included in the new procedure proposed in that document. Apart from some regulations which are currently in preparation to complete implementation of directive 85/337/EEC in Northern Ireland, the Government have no proposals at present for further regulations relating to environmental assessment.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend paragraph 68 of "Environmental Assessment: A Guide to the Procedures", to give guidance to persons who could have obtained authorisation for proposed works by procedures under legislation to which the requirements of Council directive 85/337/EEC on environmental assessment have been applied by regulations, that private Bill procedure should not be seen as a possible means to avoiding the submission of an environmental statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No. As the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedures made clear in its report (HC 625), the private Bill procedure is not an alternative which is generally available to every developer since the purpose of the Bill must be one which cannot be effected without parliamentary authority. The procedure cannot therefore be chosen simply to avoid the need for environmental assessment. Paragraph 68 of the booklet "Environmental Assessment: a Guide to the Procedures" makes clear the Government's view that the promoter of a private Bill should provide an environmental statement if his project would otherwise require one.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to issue a revised statement of view as to legal requirements in connection with Council directive 85/337/EEC on environmental assessment published by his Department.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I see no need for such a revision at present.

Rented Housing

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the percentage of rented housing in the United Kingdom and other OECD countries.

Mr. Chope [holding answer as 25 June 1990]: The available information is as follows:—

	Percentage of rented housing	Year
Australia	32	1986
Austria	50	1981
Belgium	39	1981
Canada	38	1986
Denmark	44	1987
Finland	39	1980
France	49	1984
Germany	59	1985
Greece	28	1982
Iceland	not available
Ireland	24	1981
Italy	36	1986
Japan	38	1983
Luxembourg	40	1981
Netherlands	56	1985
New Zealand	29	1980
Portugal	44	1981
Spain	24	1980
Sweden	43	1985
Switzerland	70	1980
Turkey	38	1979
United States	36	1987
Yugoslavia	not available

Corresponding estimates for the United Kingdom are 42 per cent. for 1982 and 35 per cent. for 1988.

Figures for the various countries are not all compiled on a comparable basis and should be interpreted with caution.

PRIME MINISTER

Bradford

Q31. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to pay an official visit to Bradford Forster Square station.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has at present no plans to do so.

Natural History Museum

Q52. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with co-ordination between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Education and Science, and the Office of Arts and Libraries on the future of science at the natural history museum in south Kensington.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is satisfied with the degree of co-ordination between Government Departments over the future of science at the natural history museum.

I understand that the museum is in discussion with the Government's chief scientific adviser and the Office of Arts and Libraries about its position in relation to the United Kingdom science base. The Minister for the Arts has indicated that he will be calling a further meeting with the chairman of trustees and the museum's director to discuss the natural history museum's corporate strategy and these wider issues.

European Community

Q134. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government plan to put proposals to other European Community states concerning the structure of the relationship between the European Parliament and the Commission of the European Community and the relationship of these two with national legislatures within the European Community.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

We are participating fully in the Community debate on institutional reform. In particular we believe the Commission should be more accountable to the European Parliament, especially on financial issues, and that closer links should be established between national and European Parliaments, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs explained to the House on 11 June.

Boxley

Q182. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Boxley.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

4. Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 June.

5. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 June.

13. Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 June.

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 June.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 June.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending the European Council meeting in Dublin.

HEALTH

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants in the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Dorrell: A list giving details of consultancies and projects for the years 1986-87 to 1989-90 has been placed in the Library.

Details prior to 1986-87 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The amount paid to individual consultants is subject to commercial confidentiality. Information on the outcome of each consultancy is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Studies prior to April 1989 were undertaken on behalf of the then Department of Health and Social Security; therefore some projects listed do not relate solely to health matters.

Inequalities in Health

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to implement the recommendations of the Black report on inequalities in health; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the publication of the Black report in 1980, a copy of which is available in the Library, a number of preventive and health promotion measures have been introduced. These have contributed to an overall improvement in the health of the nation and life expectancy and a reduction in infant mortality to an all-time low. Programmes for breast and cervical screening and vaccination and immunisation have been important factors along with targeted health promotion schemes by the Health Education Authority, such as the "Look After Your Heart Campaign". The Government will continue to promote the equitable distribution of health services throughout the country and ensure these are available to all.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been sponsored by his Department into social inequalities in health since the publication of the Black report by (a) the Medical Research Council, (b) the Economic and Social Research Council and (c) any other research body.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) is the main public body funding research in this area. A major programme of work has been funded by the council at the centre for health economics, York, which covers studies on:

- intergenerational inequalities in health;
- gender and race inequalities;
- use of health status as an indicator of social position;
- and the role of health status in the process of social mobility.

Other projects funded by ESRC include:

- development of new techniques for measuring inequality in health;
- an econometric technique to examine the relationship between individuals' states of health and socio-economic factors such as housing conditions, income, occupation, education, employment status, and so on;
- restructuring health care provision in England: its spatial implication;
- and distributional consequences of changes in United Kingdom health policy.

Maternity Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to advise district health authorities in England and Wales to take full account of the reports of the maternity services advisory committee when drawing up contracts for the maternity services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The maternity services advisory committee reports remain the basis of our policies for the delivery of maternity services. They should be used by health authorities to help them draw up contract specifications for these services. There is evidence that this is already happening.

School Health Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what school health statistics are routinely gathered relating to the results of tests of hearing, vision and measures of height and weight; and if he will publish a list of data published as school health statistics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is a standard health authority school medical examination form on which height and weight are recorded with the results of tests and assessments of vision, hearing, locomotion, manipulation, speech/language and behaviour. It is for local health authorities to decide what aggregate statistics to publish from this information. Information of this detail is not collected centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which persons or bodies may initiate the process to apply for the self-government of a hospital; and what measures are taken to seek to obtain the opinion of the majority of those affected by a decision to make an application.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Initial expressions of interest in NHS trust status may be made by any individual or group with links with an NHS unit. When applications for NHS trust status are submitted, following parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will direct regional health authorities to consult such other bodies as the authority considers appropriate in addition to community health councils. In all cases this should include health authorities, staff, patients, GPs and the local community as well as other groups with a particular interest in the application.

Royal National Institute for the Deaf

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) Official Report, 24 April, columns 160-64, if he will provide details of the grant awarded to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf under section 64.

Mr. Dorrell: The grant was for the administrative expenses of the National Rubella Council (NRC) for which the director of finance of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf (RNID) acts as honorary treasurer.

Pesticides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications for humans of chronic exposure to pesticides.

Mr. Dorrell: Pesticides are approved for use by Ministers after receiving the advice of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, which considers all relevant data including the possible effects of chronic exposures. If any significant adverse health effects are a possibility, approval is not recommended.

Menopausal Clinics

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in England have menopausal clinics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make extra funds available to regional health authorities to meet the costs of military assistance provided during the ambulance workers' dispute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to make extra funds available. Regional health authorities are aware that contingencies of this nature must be met from within existing resources.

Chrysoidine

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if chrysoidine has been investigated by the carcinogenic substances committee.

Mr. Dorrell: The Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has considered chrysoidine, a dye which has been used to colour maggots used by coarse fishermen, on a number of occasions in the past. At its meeting on 29 October 1985 when it was last reviewed the committee reaffirmed earlier advice that it would be prudent for anglers who wanted to use chrysoidine to avoid skin contact with the dye by, for example, using gloves when handling the dye or when baiting hooks with the dyed maggots. The Government conveyed this advice to the National Federation of Anglers and the angling press at the time.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments under Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: An initial assessment of potentially hazardous substances was made to comply with the regulations. This assessment is subject to continual review.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities that purchased their laundry services from other health authorities during 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply on competitive tendering on 1 March, Official Report, column 301, if he will explain how the figures relating to the savings generated by competitive tendering are calculated.

Mr. Dorrell: The detailed basis of calculating the annual saving made in consequence of tender action was left to district health authorities to determine. Generally previous annual costs were compared with the new costs following tender action inclusive of any redundancy or other similar additional costs averaged over the contract period.

Liverpool RHA

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has had with Mr. G. R. Scaife, regional general manager of Liverpool regional health authority, on the subject of community health councils; and if he will list dates and any correspondence between his Department and Mr. Scaife on this subject.

Mr. Dorrell: As part of the process of planning for the NHS review, an official wrote to Mr. Scaife on 22 September 1989 about the future role of community health councils. Mr. Scaife discussed the subject very briefly with the Department on 5 October 1989 before responding constructively to this letter on 9 October. The Department's subsequent reply to Mr. Scaife was dated 22 November. We know of no other discussion between Mr. Scaife and the Department of Health on the subject of CHCs.

Helicopter Emergency Services

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of the study being conducted by regional ambulance officers into helicopter-borne emergency medical services;

(2) if he intends to publish the results of the study into helicopter-borne emergency medical services.

Mr. Dorrell: The regional ambulance officers' working party on helicopter transport has reported. The report will be made available to the NHS.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many relatives of glaucoma sufferers in England received free eyesight tests in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. A total of 65,050 national health service sight tests for relatives of glaucoma sufferers were paid for in England during the period 1 April to 30 September 1989. This figure is based on a 2 per cent. sample of NHS sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. It does not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April but conducted before that period.

NHS Land Disposal

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the proceeds from the disposal of national health service land in the Trent region, and in each of the district health authorities in the Trent region for each of the past 11 years; and if he will list the reasons given for the disposal of that land.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested on disposal proceeds has been placed in the Library. The land and property sold was surplus to requirements as a result of changes in service provision determined by local health authority management.

The land sales exclude sites of less than an acre or £50,000 in value.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on hospitals which are currently short of blood supplies; and if he will list the name of the health authority in which they are located;

(2) what steps he is taking to improve the supplies of blood to hospitals;

(3) how much money is spent on advertising the need for blood donors to national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Blood supplies can fluctuate but are at present satisfactory and there is no need for any hospital to cancel elective surgery due to shortage of blood.

To maintain blood supplies the national blood transfusion service (NBTS) has been allocated a central publicity budget of £627,000 for the current financial year. This central funding is supplemented by regional health authorities for local publicity campaigns.

The NBTS is constantly seeking better ways of matching supply and demand for blood. These include improved communications with blood donors to encourage more recruitment, retention and response to call-up; improved arrangements through the national directorate of the blood transfusion service to transfer blood when needed between regions; and improved communications between hospitals and transfusion centres so that demand may be foreseen and the level of supply planned in advance. However, the availability of blood ultimately depends on the good will and generosity of our blood donors. We are grateful to them.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the savings to each health authority within the Trent region which have resulted from each hospital closure during the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not held centrally.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the circulars and other documents of guidance he has issued on the workings, implementation or interpretation of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The following documents which are available in the Library have been issued:

Local Authority Circular LAC(89)/16: The Children Act 1989: Notice of Royal assent and the provisions to take immediate or early effect;

Local Authority Circular LAC(89)/17: Social Services Training Support Programme: Financial Year 1990-91 ;

Local Authority Circular LAC(90)/3: The Children Act 1989 (Admission of Hearsay Evidence) Order—Statutory Instrument 143/1990;

Children Act 1989: Training Together—A Training and curriculum Model;

An Introduction to the Children Act 1989;

The Care of Children: Principles and Practice in regulations and Guidance:

Children Act 1989 Consultation Paper No. 1—Secure Accommodation (Guidance and Regulations).

Consultation paper No. 2—Policy and Standards of Day care and Educational Services (Guidance)—will be issued later this week; further consultation papers are being prepared, and will be issued shortly.

In addition, the Department of Health produces "Implementation News", a monthly newsletter which provides a forum for the exchange of information about courses, conferences and seminars, training material, progress on implementation, news from the regions, and initiatives by local authorities and voluntary and other agencies. "Implementation News" is widely distributed to local authorities, voluntary and professional agencies and other relevant organisations.

Bone Marrow Transplants

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total number of bone marrow transplants carried out in the latest year for which figures are available at the Royal Marsden, Hammersmith, Westminster, Royal Free and Great Ormond Street hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Outcome Assessments

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has any proposals to standardise outcome assessment in national health service trust hospitals;

(2) whether he has any proposals to standardise outcome assessments in district health authority-managed hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities will be expected to assess outcomes in monitoring the contracts they make with providers of health services. The new purchasing role will give district health authorities strong incentives to move from specifying input to developing measures of health outcome. The Department is developing a methodology for outcome assessment, and guidance for health authorities to equip them to monitor outcome effectively.

Obstetricians

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant obstetricians are employed by the national health service in each regional health authority in England; and what is the number on a whole-time equivalent basis in the current year and in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table:

(1) Includes permanent paid and honorary staff.

(2) From 1987 Senior hospital Medical Officers (with allowance) are excluded. These are included with Other Staff.

(3) Staff holding two or more appointments with the same of different regions are counted only once. Differences in the sum of numbers of staff for all regions is due to the duplication of staff holding appointments in more than one region. Such staff are included separately in each region. This duplication does not occur in the WTE component.

GPs (Operations)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any assessment has been undertaken on the benefits to out-patients' departments of requiring general practitioners to undertake all minor surgery operations, rather than a selection of such operations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No, but it is a reasonable expectation that the more minor surgery that GPs can carry out in their own surgeries, the fewer visits patients will have to make to the out-patients' department (OPD) and the more time OPD doctors will have to respond to other patient care needs. There is a practical difficulty in assessing with any accuracy the effect of the new arrangements on out-patient departments. Once on the minor surgery list, a GP is not required to undertake every procedure in which he or she is competent every time a patient presents with the relevant condition. It has to be a matter of clinical judgment on the part of the GP as to what action to take in the light of the particular circumstances. Arrangements for monitoring the GPs' new contract will, in time, provide helpful information on the extent to which minor surgery has expanded in general practice.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the operations in which general practitioners are now required to have competence to qualify for inclusion in the minor surgery list; and whether there have been any changes from the original list in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The procedures in which GPs must be competent before gaining admission to the minor surgery list are set out in the table. There have been no changes to the original list which appeared as schedule 1B of the NHS (GMPS) Regulations 1974 (as amended). However, we have recently agreed to amend the list of procedures by removing ligation of varicose veins.

Minor surgery procedures

Injections
- intra articular
- peri articular
- varicose veins
- haemorrhoid

Aspirations
- joints
- cysts
- bursae
- hydrocele

- removal of toe nails (partial and complete)

Currette cautery and cryocautery
- warts and verrucae
- other skin lesions (eg molluscum contagiosum)

Other
- ligation of varicose veins
- removal of foreign bodies
- nasal cautery

Family Planning

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give the total number of family planning cases seen by general practitioners in 1982 and in the latest year for which figures are available in Greater London;

(2) if he will give the total number of family planning cases treated at family planning clinics in 1982 and in the latest year for which figures are available in each health district in Greater London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1982, a total of 295,383 women received contraceptive services from general practitioners in Greater London compared with 374,560 in 1988.

In 1982, the number of people seen in family planning clinics in Greater London was 353,320 compared with 294,629 in 1988-89. The breakdown for each district health authority in Greater London is shown in the following table:

Number of family planning cases seen at family planning clinics

Hospital Beds

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were closed in each region for 1989-90, 1988-89 and for the latest six months.

Mr. Dorrell: Centrally held statistics record only beds available at the end of each financial year. Comparing year-end figures does not provide a measure of beds closed because the published figures are also affected by new beds opening or reopening during the year. The information requested is therefore not available centrally.

Cervical Smear Test

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total number of cervical smear tests carried out in the latest year for which figures are available in each of the four Thames regions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of smears examined by NHS laboratories in each of the Thames regions is given in the table. Smears taken from women in a particular region are sometimes analysed by laboratories in other regions.

General Practitioners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practices and general practitioners in each district health authority area within the Northern region; and what is the number of such general practices and general practitioners that have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on numbers of general practices in each district health authority is not available centrally. The latest figures for the numbers of practices and general practitioners in Northern region by family practitioner committee are given in the table. A total of 65 practices in Northern region expressed their interest in the fund holding scheme and the regional health authority announced on 27 March 1990 that 31 practices which met the eligibility criteria will be undertaking the necessary preparatory work for the fund holding scheme.

Breakdown of the number of practices and unrestricted principals by family practitioner committee in the Northern region as at 1 October 1987

Family practitioner committee	Number of practices	Number of general practitioners
Cleveland	83	273
Cumbria	100	269
Durham	83	289
Northumberland	50	165
Gateshead	34	109
Newcastle	50	156
North Tyneside	34	102
South Tyneside	31	79
Sunderland	53	142
	518	1,584

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, column 535, whether the discussions with Ordnance Survey concerning general practitioners' practice leaflets have yet been concluded.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. A circular clarifying the position will be issued to all family practitioner committees shortly.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the necessary computer software packages for the management of general practitioner practice budgets will be available; and what Government subsidies will be paid to computer companies for the development of appropriate software packages.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 25 June.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the standard mortality ratios for coronary heart disease for (a) women and (b) men aged 15 to 64 years in each district health authority area and each regional health authority in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information covering the years 1983-87, for men and women aged 15 to 64 years, has just been published in a report from the Health Education Authority, "Mapping the Epidemic—Coronary Heart Disease". Copies are available in the Library.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the existing membership of family practitioner committees will be kept in place with full responsibility until 31 March 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is our intention that regulations ending family practitioner committees and commencing family health services authorities will be laid shortly after the National Health Service and Community Care Bill receives Royal Assent.

NHS Reform

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money is likely to be spent in each of the next five years in administering the indicative prescribing scheme under the proposed national health service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The indicative prescribing scheme should lead to more effective and efficient prescribing by GPs, the cost of which is currently £1·8 billion per annum. The scheme will require a "one-off" capital investment of around £7 million and have a recurring cost of around £7·5 million per annum at current prices.

Capital Assets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all district health authorities which have now completed their register of capital assets; and if he will give the number of entries made on each register.

Mr. Dorrell: Most district health authorities had completed their asset registers by the end of May 1990. The few authorities which had not achieved completion of registers by that date are expected to have done so by the end of June. The number of entries made on each register cannot be given as this information is not held centrally.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to make Erythropoietin, when it receives a full licence, freely available to doctors to prescribe for any patient for whom it is appropriate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Erythropoietin has received a licence, as announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 11 June at column 39.

Responsibility for funding hospital prescribing of this product is for the health authorities concerned. General practitioners are also free to prescribe erythropoietin provided they are content to accept clinical responsibility for that aspect of the patient's care.

Encephalopathies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has yet established if the infective agent responsible for human encephalopathies can be transferred subcutaneously; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A small number of cases of the human spongiform encephalopathy, Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, can be attributed to inadvertent transmission by transplantation of nervous tissue and corneas and the use of dura mater and human growth hormone. Similar information is not available for kuru, another human spongiform encephalopathy that at one time was common in certain tribes in New Guinea.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being undertaken to establish any possible connections between Alzheimer's disease and human spongiform encephalopathies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health has not commissioned any such research. The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and biomedical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Drug Expenditure

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health wht is the expenditure figure allowed for drug expenditure in the family practitioner service in real terms in 1991-92 as stated in paragraph 3.1 of the document, "Improving Prescribing—Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The public expenditure White Paper shows that gross expenditure on the family practitioner services as a whole in 1991-92 will be £6,520 million, an increase of 3·9 per cent. in real terms over the previous year.

The numbers given for 1991-92 onwards are planning figures only and are subject to revision. To quote disaggregated figures, for example, for drugs alone, would therefore be misleading. Firm expenditure plans for 1991-92 are being discussed in this year's public expenditure survey, and the outcome will be published in due course.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the financial implications in terms of dispensing fees of the Boots monitored dosage system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Monitored dosage systems have no financial implications in terms of dispensing fees.

Medicines Resource Centre

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the anticipated annual cost of the medicines resource centre.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The medicines resource centre cost £250,000 in 1989-90. We expect costs of the same order annually for the following three years up to 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people will be employed by the medicines resource centre.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The medicines resource centre employs four staff—three pharmacists (including the director) and one secretary.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the first medicines resource centre bulletin will be issued; and how often they will appear.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The first medicines resource centre bulletin was issued during the week commencing 11 June. All GPs should by now have received a copy. The medicines resources centre bulletins will be issued monthly.

Leeds University (Prescribing Unit)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the anticipated annual cost of the prescribing unit at the department of general practice at Leeds university.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The detailed scope of the work to be undertaken by the prescribing unit and the costs are still under discussion.

Regional Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings each regional health authority is having to make in the current year in order to have the required balanced budget for financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: It is essential for health authorities to establish a sound financial position in 1991-92. Elimination of underlying deficits has been made a priority in the current financial year. Measures to be taken by individual health authorities are for agreement between the region and district concerned.

Cervical Cancer Tests

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for every month in each of the last two years the district health authorities not meeting the one-month target for cervical cancer test turnround time; and if he will state the time taken in each of those authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Health authorities must aim to return the results of cervical smear tests to the doctor who undertook them within one month. Since December 1989 around 80 per cent. of districts have been meeting the target. A table of district health authorities not meeting this target over the past two years has been placed in the Library. The average processing times are shown in weeks. Since June 1988 this information has been collected on a quarterly rather than a monthly basis.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if operating costs of the blood transfusion service are currently covered by a standard national charge for each unit.

Mr. Dorrell: At present in 12 of the 14 English regions no charges are made by the national blood transfusion service (NBTS) to national health service hospitals for operating costs. The remaining two regions have introduced arrangements by which the operating costs are recovered in proportion to the district's demands on the regional transfusion centre (RTC) for blood supplies. The reimbursement to the RTCs will not include any element for the blood itself. This is freely donated by voluntary donors to whom we are all indebted.

There are, however, standard national blood handling charges designed to recover the costs incurred in supplying non-NHS hospitals with blood and blood derivatives. Again, these charges do not include any element for the blood itself which is donated free of charge to the NBTS for use where needed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Discipline

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to bring to the attention of prisoners the alteration in prison rule 47 made in 1989; and when the booklet made available to prisoners concerning matters relating to discipline was last revised.

Mr. Mellor: Circular instruction 25/1989, issued in June 1989, advised governors that information should be made available to prisoners about the change made to the disciplinary rules on 1 April 1989 and asked them to consider what steps they needed to take for this purpose. An extract from the new rules was also sent to prison establishments in March 1989 for inclusion in the manual on the conduct of adjudications, a copy of which is available to prisoners in every prison library and which they may purchase if they wish. A revised prisoner information booklet containing details of the new code of offences will be circulated shortly; the booklet was previously revised in 1986.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Waddington: Details of the proportion of research awarded on a customer-contractor basis are not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. The information shown in the table relates to research and development. Variations in the percentages shown in column 3 are attributable in part to changes in the scope and classification of departmental expenditure.

Police (Training and Promotion)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review methods of training and promotion in the police forces in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Over the past three years there has been a comprehensive review of police training in England and Wales, which has led to the introduction of new training courses for recruits, experienced constables, sergeants and inspectors. The programme of command and carousel courses at the police staff college has also been revised and updated.

The system of qualifying examinations for promotion to the ranks of sergeant and inspector has recently been reviewed by the police promotion examinations board. The main recommendation of that review is that the existing system of examinations should be replaced by a two-part examination, consisting of a factual written paper and a series of performance-related tests.

Promotion to the ranks of chief inspector, superintendent and chief superintendent is a matter for the chief officer of the force concerned. For the most senior appointments the Government share the Home Affairs Committee's view that it would be desirable for all officers appointed to chief officer rank to have attended the senior command course or to have had acceptable equivalent training such as the chief police officer course which is to be held at the police staff college in 1991 and 1992. We intend to introduce this as a general policy when sufficient numbers have pased through the senior command course and chief police officer course to provide a good field of qualified candidates.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest information available to him about the prevalence of the illegal taking of drugs by injection in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: Reports of finds of needles and syringes and of substances such as heroin and cocaine suggest that the incidence of drug misuse by injection in establishments is relatively low. Over 90 per cent. of finds of substances involve cannabis and only 3 per cent. heroin and cocaine. The results of research studies which have been conducted, including those recently reported in the British Medical Journal, need to be treated with some caution because of the small size of the samples. But we are studying the findings. As my hon. Friend is aware, we are considering whether some form of screening, whether for clinical or control purposes, should be introduced, and we are looking at other means to assist in assessing the scale of misuse.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce (a) computerised file tracking in the immigration and nationality department and (b) computerisation of the immigration appellate authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The immigration and nationality department plans to start implementation of the file tracking system in December 1990. Responsibility for the immigration appellate authorities rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports and letters were awaiting acknowledgement in the B1 division of the immigration and nationality department on (a) 28 March, (b) 27 April and (c) 31 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of passports and letters in IND awaiting acknowledgement was 3,471 on 30 March; 5,134 on 27 April; and 4,437 on 1 June. On 1 June the waiting period before acknowledgement was two working days for passports and four for letters.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the standard cost of processing applications in respect of citizenship applications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Fees for citizenship applications are set at a level intended to cover processing costs. The present fees, set in 1986, are:

Registration	60
Naturalisation on grounds of residence	170
Naturalisation as the spouse of a British citizen	60

These fees are under review to take account of prevailing cost levels.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to review staffing levels at the immigration and nationality department in Lunar house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staffing levels at the IND in Lunar house are reviewed regularly in the light of up-to-date workload, staffing and financial information. In the process of review the Government will also be taking account of the recommendations about staffing levels at IND made by the Home Affairs Committee in its fifth report on "Administrative Delays in the Immigration and Nationality Department", published on Wednesday 20 June. The Government's formal response to these, and the other recommendations in the committee's report, will be made in due course.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time between receipt of application for naturalisation in the immigration and nationality department and determination of such applications as at 31 May or the nearest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 20 June at column 574.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters currently await acknowledgement by the immigration and nationality department; what is the comparable figure for each quarter since 1 January 1988; what is the average time taken by the immigration and nationality department to acknowledge correspondence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 15 June the number of items of mail awaiting acknowledgement in IND was 4,850. The comparable figures for each quarter since 1988 were:

Items of mail awaiting acknowledgement

	1988	1989	1990
January	181,892	1,228	5,622
April	122,546	4,523	3,774
July	1,086	2,165	—
October	3,126	5,844	—

On average letters are being acknowledged within three days and citizenship applications within seven days of receipt in the Department.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in the past year the immigration and nationality department has admitted to the loss of a case file; in how many cases applicants in all categories have been asked to re-submit documents when the originals were lost or mislaid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the categories of application received by the immigration and nationality department and (b) the number of applications, in each category, which are currently (i) unopened, (ii) allocated to a caseworker, (iii) subject to inquiry, (iv) decision recommended and (v) awaiting dispatch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The principal categories of applications received by IND are:

Variation of leave
Refugee status
Political asylum
Referred entry clearance
Travel documents
Re-entry visas
Citizenship applications

The information requested at (b) is not fully or readily available. I shall reply as soon as possible providing such information as is available.

Correspondence

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now able to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East enclosing one from Mrs. C. D. Scott sent to him on 11 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of right hon. and hon. Members have written to my Department on behalf of Mrs. Scott and all have received a reply. However, we have no record of a letter being received, on behalf of Mrs. Scott, from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist).

I have today received a facsimile copy of the hon. Member's letter, and enclosure, and will reply promptly.

Prisoners

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for the latest date available what percentage of sentenced female prisoners had been convicted of an offence which involved violence, robbery, sex or drug trafficking;

(2) how many and what percentage of male and female prisoners in England and Wales are accused of, or have been convicted of, drug-related offences.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The latest readily available information relates to the sentenced population and is published in table 8 of "The Prison Population in 1989", Home Office statistical bulletin 12/90, copies of which are in the Library. Offences of drug trafficking are not separately identified.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for the latest date available how many female prisoners in England and Wales were serving a prison sentence that was (a) less than six months and (b) between six but less than 12 months;

(2) for the latest date available how many female prisoners in England and Wales were serving their sentences because of a fine default.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Population[1] of females under sentence in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1989: by sentence length and type of sentence

Length of sentence	Type of sentence: Immediate custodial	Type of sentence: In default of payment of fine	All types
Under 6 months	82	24	106
6 months and under 12 months	143	—	143
12 months and over	1,030	—	1,030
All lengths	1,255	24	1,279

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest date available; how many probation psychiatric voluntary hostel places were available in England and Wales for female offenders.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 June 1990]: There are 91 beds funded by the Home Office for use by the probation service in voluntary after-care hotels dealing with ex-offenders with histories of mental illness or personality disorder. Only two of these beds are designated specifically for female offenders, but the remainder would be available to them.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest date available what was (a) the weekly cost for a female probation hostel place and (b) the average weekly cost of a female prison place.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 June 1990]: There are no hostels taking only women on probation, although there are two probation-bail hostels designated for women offenders and defendants. Other probation-bail hostels accept men and women, but the costs relating to women cannot be disaggregated.

From information available for 1988-89 for those hostels which took women only the average weekly cost per occupied place was £152. This compares with an average weekly cost in 1988-89 of £155 per occupied place in all probation-bail and bail hostels. The average weekly cost of a place at a women's prison establishment in 1988-89 was £399.

EMPLOYMENT

Pre-entry Closed Shop

15. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the provisions contained in the Employment Bill to outlaw the pre-entry closed shop to take full statutory effect.

Mr. Howard: The Employment Bill, which is currently being considered in another place, includes provisions which will make it unlawful for an employer to refuse to employ a person because he is, or is not, a member of a trade union. We expect the Bill to become law before the end of this Session and intend that individuals seeking employment should have the benefit of this important protection as soon as is practicable after Royal Assent.

Work Permits

17. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he intends to bring forward as a result of his Department's review of the work permit scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I am discussing with colleagues the implications of my Department's review of the work permit scheme before making proposals.

Industrial Training

18. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary for State of Employment what plans he has to improve the quality of industrial training.

Mr. Howard: Employer-led training and enterprise councils (TECs) are being set up all round the country with the primary responsibility of improving training performance within their local labour market. In addition, industry training organisations have a major role in establishing recognised standards and promoting them within their sector.

Labour Statistics

19. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total unemployment figures and the rate of unemployment in May 1990, and May 1980.

Mr. Howard: In May 1990, the seasonally adjusted level of unemployment in the United Kingdom was 1,611,000 or 5·7 per cent. of the work force, compared with a level of 1,224,400 in May 1980 or 4·6 per cent. of the work force.

68. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of unemployed in 1979; and what it is now.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990 the level of unemployed, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom, was 1,611,000 or 5·7 per cent. compared with 1,088,500 or 4·1 per cent., in May 1979 on the consistent basis.

64. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the unemployment rate in the northern region in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990, the rate of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the north region was 8·5 per cent., compared with 10·4 per cent. in May 1989 and 12·4 per cent. in May 1988.

65. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lambeth below the age of 18 years are unemployed and not in training or in full-time education.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990 the number of unemployed claimants aged under 18 in the Lambeth local authority district was three.

60. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the figure for unemployment in the west midlands in (a) 1980 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the west midlands, was 149,300 or 5·8 per cent., compared with 119,000 or 4·7 per cent. in May 1980 on the consistent basis.

50. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the Rugby-Daventry travel-to-work area; and what was the figure three years ago.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available employment estimates for travel-to-work areas are from the September 1987 census of employment. There were then 46,200 employees in employment in the Rugby and Daventry travel-to-work area. This compares with a figure of 46,100 in September 1984 when the previous census of employment was taken. The figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

51. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much unemployment has fallen in Cumbria since June 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: Since June 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Cumbria has fallen by 9,292 or 48 per cent. on the unadjusted basis. Direct comparisons are slightly affected by the change in benefit regulations for under 18-year-olds in September 1988.

52. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and how many women (a) full and (b) part-time there were in employment in each standard planning region in the United Kingdom in June 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows:

Civilian work force in employment in each standard region of the United Kingdom

[3] Regional full-time and part-time breakdown for males is not available.
[4] Figures for full and part-time employment are not available for Northern Ireland.

47. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent initiatives he has implemented to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Tim Eggar: My Department's aim is to support economic growth through promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market. As a result many of the initiatives that we implement will help to reduce unemployment either directly—through giving more effective help to unemployed people to help them find work, or improve their chances of doing so—or indirectly, by improving the working of the labour market in other ways and removing barriers to employment.

45. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the proportion of new jobs created during the last five years which are of part-time and low-paid character.

Mr. Nicholls: Between December 1984 and December 1989, part-time employment in Great Britain rose by 965,000. This represented 37 per cent. of the increase in the work force in employment.

There is no official definition of low pay.

32. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest unemployment figures for Sheffield expressed as a percentage; and what is the national average.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990, the unemployment rate for the Sheffield travel-to-work area was 8·1 per cent. on the unadjusted basis. The comparable figure for the United Kingdom was 5·5 per cent.

Tourism

16. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the provision of accommodation within the tourist industry after the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from a wide cross-section of the tourism industry on the possible effects of the introduction of the community charge and the uniform business rate.

20. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many tourists from the United States of America have visited the United Kingdom for each year since 1985.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated number of visits to the United Kingdom by residents of the United States of America for the years 1985-89 are as follows:

	Number of visits
1985	3,166,000
1986	2,288,000
1987	2,800,000
1988	2,620,000
1989	2,814,000

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to reinstate section 4 grants in England.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no such plans.

71. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the Heart of England tourist board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the chairman of Heart of England tourist board, but my noble Friend Lord Strathclyde, the Minister with responsibility for tourism, has met members and officers of the Heart of England board during visits to the region, and hopes shortly to have an opportunity of a discussion with its chairman.

61. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many holidays in the United Kingdom were taken by United Kingdom citizens in 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest estimates show that United Kingdom residents took 64·5 million holidays in the United Kingdom in 1989.

62. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to promote tourism in Essex.

Mr. Nicholls: In the year beginning 1 April 1990 the East Anglia tourist board will receive a subvention of £410,000 from the English tourist board, 66 per cent. more than in the previous year. The East Anglia tourist board is working on a number of initiatives, in partnership with local authorities and the private sector, which will benefit tourism in Essex.

56. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's review of tourism.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply of 28 November 1989 by the then Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan), Official Report, column 212.

37. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has recently met the chair of the British Tourist Authority and English tourist board to discuss tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for tourism regularly meet the chairman to discuss matters relating to tourism. The two boards are implementing the outcome of the review of tourism policy and their total grant in aid has increased by 10 per cent. compared to the amount in the last financial year.

31. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas visits to the United Kingdom were made in the first quarter of 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: Overseas residents made an estimated 3,510,000 visits to the United Kingdom during the first three months of 1990, 4 per cent. higher than in the equivalent period of 1989.

27. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were self-employed in tourism-related industries in (a) 1983 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is published in the footnote to table 8.1 of the June 1990 issue of Employment Gazette.

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom, and the income generated from such tourist activity, during the first three months of 1990; and what were the comparable figures for 1989.

Mr Nicholls: It is estimated that overseas residents made 3,510,000 visits to the United Kingdom during the first three months of 1990, 4 per cent. higher than in the equivalent period of 1989. Spending in the United Kingdom by overseas visitors in the same period is estimated to be £1,305 million, 10 per cent. higher than in 1988.

Industrial Action

21. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those years since 1960 with a greater number of stoppages due to industrial action than 1989.

Mr Howard: The year 1989 had the lowest number of stoppages for over half a century.

41. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to alter the legislation concerning secondary industrial action.

Mr. Nicholls: The March 1989 Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" (Cm. 655) proposed changes to the present law to make it unlawful to induce industrial action by workers of an employer not party to a trade dispute except in the case of lawful picketing. The current Employment Bill, which had its Second Reading in another place on 15 June, contains provisions which will bring those changes into effect.

33. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of stoppages due to industrial action in (a) 1977, (b) 1978, (c) 1979, (d) 1987, (e) 1988 and (f) 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The recorded number of stoppages due to industrial action is given in the table:

Year	Number of stoppages
1977	2,737
1978	2,498
1979	2,125
1987	1,016
1988	781

Jobcentre, Hackney

22. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to visit the jobcentre on Mare street, Hackney.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans at present.

Employee Share Ownership

23. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to help promote among his European Community counterparts the introduction on a European Community-wide level of employee share ownership trusts.

Mr. Howard: Our publication "People and Companies" has been widely distributed round the European Community to draw the attention of our counterparts to the merits of our approach to employee involvement, including employee share ownership trusts.

Part-time Work

25. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning the proposals for a European Community directive concerning part-time work.

Mr. Howard: The proposed directives on part-time and temporary work are misguided and unnecessary. They would damage job prospects in Britain and right across Europe. They are in conflict with the well-established principle of European Community legislation that issues which are best dealt with at national level should be left to member states to decide. We shall oppose the directives vigorously.

Training and Enterprise Councils

26. Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have now signed their operational contracts.

Mr. Howard: Fifteen training and enterprise councils have now signed operating contracts.

34. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what role the Government envisage within the training and enterprise councils for those agencies in the voluntary sector which have participated in Government-initiated training schemes.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are free to contract with the training providers they feel are best placed to deliver their plans, based on the needs they have identified. Training providers from the voluntary sector are likely to continue to have an important role in the delivery of programmes such as youth training (YT) and employment training (ET), particularly in relation to trainees with special needs.

Newspaper Industry (Disputes)

28. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding current disputes in the newspaper industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Representations have been received from the National Union of Journalists about various disputes in the newspaper industry concerning trade union recognition.

Health and Safety

29. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Health and Safety Commission's annual report 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) and for Barnsley, West and Penistone, (Mr. McKay), Official Report, 13 March 1990, cols. 147-48 and 149-50.

30. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Health and Safety Executive on resources.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions. Officials keep in regular contact with the staff of the Health and Safety Executive over a variety of matters including resources.

Disabled People

35. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to improve the employment prospects of disabled people.

73. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new measures he intends to introduce to enable people with disabilities to participate fully in the work force.

Mr. Eggar: My Department already maintains a comprehensive framework of services to help people with disabilities find and retain jobs. The adequacy of current measures to help people with disabilities to participate fully in the work force has been considered in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has just undertaken. We will be publishing the consultative document giving the results of the review within the next few days.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to alter the 3 per cent. quota provision for the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Eggar: All aspects of the quota scheme have been considered in the review of services to people with disabilities which my Department has just undertaken. We will be publishing the consultative document giving the results of the review within the next few days.

49. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future of the quota system in respect of the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Eggar: All aspects of the quota scheme have been considered in the review of services to people with disabilities which my Department has just undertaken. We will be publishing the consultative document giving the results of the review within the next few days.

Civil Servants (Buy-outs)

36. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what buy-outs by civil servants in his Department are currently being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have taken no decision to privatise any further areas of my Department's activities. Therefore, I am not considering any buy-outs by civil servants.

Long-term Unemployed (Training)

38. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he intends to introduce to enable the long-term unemployed to receive training.

Mr. Eggar: Employment training already provides a full range of opportunities for all long-term unemployed people to acquire the skills and experience they need to compete for jobs. The flexibilities available to training and enterprise councils in delivering employment training will ensure that training provision will be even more responsive to local needs.

Employment Training

39. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of employment training.

Mr. Eggar: The flexibilities which training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and local enterprise companies in Scotland will have in delivering employment training will make it even more responsive to the training needs of both individuals and employers in local labour markets and further reinforce its success in helping long-term unemployed people to get jobs.

Training (Young People)

40. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends further to encourage training for young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The new youth training arrangements which build on the success of YTS will deliver relevant vocational training for young people to enable them to achieve recognised qualifications. The training credits pilot schemes announced on 27 March 1990 will have the potential of strengthening the motivation of young people to seek continued education and training after leaving school. The compact initiative is helping to encourage training for young people in urban programme authority areas by guaranteeing a job with training or training leading to a job to all young people who meet their locally agreed goals.

Construction Industry (Safety)

42. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve safety in the construction industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Prime responsibility for health and safety rests with employers and employees in the workplace. As part of a continuing process to promote long-lasting change in the industry, the Health and Safety Commission has proposed regulations to:

(a) strengthen management of health and safety on construction sites;

(b) require all employers with more than five employees to obtain relevant safety advice.

The Health and Safety Executive is also targeting inspection activity where it will be most effective. Inspectors will focus on more hazardous activities like roofwork and demolition and on the quality of site management and its ability to manage health and safety.

44. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees have been killed and injured on construction sites in the past five years.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Injuries to employees in the construction industry reported to all HSC/E enforcing authorities 1984 to 1988-89[1] [3]

Date of accident	Fatal	Major[4]	Over three day
1984	100	2,288	[2]—
1985	104	2,239	[2]—
[5]1986-87	99	2,736	16,468
[5]1987-88	103	2,767	16,622
[2 5]1988-89	100	2,865	16,240

[2] Not available.

[3] Reported to HSE's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates and all other relevant enforcing authorities, under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1980 (NADOR) and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 for later years.

[4] As defined in NADOR for the years 1984 to 1985. The introduction of RIDDOR widened the definition of the major injury category thereby making direct comparison of figures with those for earlier years impossible.

[5] Years beginning 1 April.

Czechoslovakia

43. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of his last visit to Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on Tuesday 5 June, Official Report, columns 457-58.

Women Returners

46. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage women back into the workplace after having children.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) on 13 March, Official Report, column 214.

YTS (Scotland)

48. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees there were in Scotland at the latest date.

Mr. Nicholls: At 31 March 1990, there were about 45,100 young people undertaking YTS training in Scotland.

Inner-city Areas

53. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in inner-city areas in 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: My Department will spend about £1·1 billion during 1990-91 in the 57 areas on which the Government's action for cities measures are targeted.

Scottish Conservative Party Head Office

54. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set up an official inquiry into employment practices and industrial relations at the Scottish Conservative party head office, Chester street, Edinburgh.

Mr. Howard: No.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

55. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under which articles of the treaty of Rome the decisions were made at the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting in Brussels on 29 May.

Mr. Eggar: Based on the articles of the treaty of Rome, the following decisions were made in Brussels on 29 May.

Article 118A, adoption of the Council directive on the minimum health and safety requirements for handling heavy loads.

Article 118A, adoption of the Council directive on the minimum health and safety requirements for work with display screen equipment.

Article 118A, agreement of a common position on the Council directive on the protection of workers from the risks related to exposure to biological agents.

Article 128, adoption of the council directive for a proposal for action programme on continuing training (FORCE).

Article 235, adoption of the Council decision for a third joint programme to encourage the exchange of young workers within the Community.

Other decisions taken, for which no treaty basis is required, were: adoption of resolutions on the dignity of women and men at work, long-term unemployment and the fight against racism and xenophobia.

Agriculture

57. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the trend of full-time employment in the agriculture industry has been over the past five years; and what assessment he has been able to make of future trends.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of full-time employees in employment in the agriculture industry over the past five years is shown in the table. The Department does not make forecasts of future trends in employment.

Full-time employees in employment in the agriculture industry Great Britain: Thousands

	Number
December 1984	253·7
December 1985	247·1
December 1986	237·6
December 1987	231·5
December 1988	220·6
December 1989	208·1

Women in Work

58. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the member states of the European Community with a greater number of women in work than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987, the latest date for which comparable data are available, the United Kingdom has more women in civilian employment than any other member state.

Female civilian work force in employment in the European Community: 1987

Thousands

	Females	Civilian workforce in employment	Percentage of civilian workforce in employment
United Kingdom	10,729	24,755	43
Germany	10,042	25,440	39
France	8,822	20,976	42
Italy	7,065	20,584	34
Netherlands	1,829	5,251	35
Belgium	1,419	3,621	39
Luxembourg	58	169	34
Ireland	346	1,067	32
Denmark	1,201	2,663	45
Greece	1,236	3,597	34
Spain	3,477	11,383	31
Portugal	1,724	4,169	41

74. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the projected growth in the labour force between 1989 and 2001 is female.

Mr. Nicholls: The information required is contained in the article "Labour force outlook to 2001" published in Employment Gazette, April 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

EC Commissioner for Social Affairs

59. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the European Commissioner for Social Affairs to discuss employment legislation.

Mr. Howard: I last met the European Commissioner at a formal Council of EC Labour and Social Affairs Ministers in Brussels on 29 May.

Hungary (Ministerial Visit)

63. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of his visit to Hungary.

Mr. Howard: I visited Hungary from 3 to 5 June. During my stay I met the newly appointed Minister of Labour, Mr. Sandor Györivanyi, and other members of the Government. I also had discussions with Hungarian business men and entrepreneurs, and visited a factory.

Discussions focused on the importance of ensuring that the climate is right for small firms to flourish, and the more immediate practical help and advice my Department can give.

On 5 June Mr. Györivanyi and I signed a joint statement on co-operation between our two countries in the labour market area. We agreed a programme of immediate assistance which will include advice and practical help in the development of training and retraining, including open learning, employment services, and small firms and enterprise.

In addition, I invited the Hungarian Government to send officials to Britain for an extended visit to study the relevance of our conciliation and arbitration systems.

I am pleased that the Hungarian Government have asked my Department for assistance and that we have been able to agree a programme of co-operation. I look forward to the development of a rewarding and beneficial relationship between our respective Ministries.

Trade Unions (Injunctions)

66. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to alter the liability of trade unions to ex parte injunctions.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The law gives an employer threatened with an unlawful call to take industrial action the right to seek an injunction against the relevant union in order to protect his business. The procedure for obtaining an injunction against a trade union is no different from the procedure for obtaining an injunction to stop unlawful behaviour by any other organisation, and my right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of changing that.

Minimum Wage

67. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received any representations calling for the introduction of a national statutory minimum wage.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1 December 1989 my right hon. and learned Friend has received 21 representations on this subject.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

69. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the staffing of the employment medical advisory service within the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 134 staff in post in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service (EMAS). In addition, there were 21 staff in post performing headquarters functions for EMAS in HSE's medical services headquarters.

Job Creation

70. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will monitor the effectiveness of job creation programmes by category of sector in which the jobs are created, examining specifically those related to infrastructure.

Mr. Eggar: The Government do not run job-creation programmes as such. Our approach has been to develop an economic and labour market framework which encourages competition, flexibility and enterprise and thus frees business to create new jobs. The success of this policy is demonstrated by the fact that, at over 27 million, employment is now at its highest level ever, and has grown by more than 3·5 million since March 1983. Within this approach, my Department operates a range of programmes designed to help unemployed people back into work, through training, counselling and help with job search.

Home Workers

72. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of home workers employed within the Greater London area.

Mr. Eggar: A survey conducted in 1981 found about 37,500 homeworkers in the Greater London council area. No later estimates are currently available.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received on the 100-day rule and the provision of bed-and-breakfast accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A number of representations has been received from across the industry reflecting a wide range of views. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is fully aware of the tourism industry's concerns on this issue.

TVEI, Kirklees

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amount of money was made available, or planned, for the technical and vocational education initiative in 1989-90 and 1990-91 for Kirklees metropolitan council area.

Mr. Eggar: Kirklees was given £284,630 in 1989-90 for its TVEI preparatory project. The planned expenditure in its preparatory project in 1990-91 is £278,820.

Employment Training

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he proposes to make any changes in the financial arrangements for those undertaking employment training to place their children in nursery, creche or playcare.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 June 1990]: The former £50 limit on weekly payments to childminders has been abolished. Training and enterprise councils and training agency area offices have discretion over the means by which they ensure the provision of child care support for lone parents on employment training.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state in real terms the amount to be spent on employment training for each of the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The following table shows, in real terms, the amount spent on employment training in 1989-90 and the amount expected to be spent in 1990-91 to 1992-93.

Expenditure at constant (1988-89) prices

	£ million
[1]1989-90	1,030
[2]1990-91	1,034
[2]1991-92	993
[2]1992-93	976

[2] Planned spend.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training contracts with training providers for (a) YTS and (b) ET have not been renewed for the present financial year, listing in each case the name of the training provider, the reason for non-renewal and the number of training places involved for both YTS and ET.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Information in the format requested would be available only at disproportionate cost. The process of renegotiating YT and ET contracts for this year is nearly complete. The latest information is that of about 3,450 YT contracts to be renegotiated, 105 have not been renewed, and of about 1,300 ET contracts, 15 have not been renewed.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the privatised Skills Training Agency and its contribution to the tackling of long-term skill needs.

Mr. Nicholls: [holding answer 25 June 1990]: A key objective of the sale was to transfer as much of the Skills Training Agency to the private sector as was possible.

The Government are highly satisfied with the successful sale of 51 skill centres, together with other STA training services.

The terms agreed for the sales were designed to give purchasers a good prospect of long-term viability as training businesses. All purchasers have indicated their intention to develop skills training that meets market needs.

Retirement Pensions

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in light of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh Borough Council, what advice he is now offering to employers in respect of age eligibility for retirement pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The James case deals with concessions for people over state pension age. It does not extend to social security or occupational pension schemes.

DEFENCE

Radar

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the facilities provided at the proposed military radar base at St. David's, Dyfed, could be used as part of a guidance system for either the tactical air-to-surface missile or Tomahawk missiles.

Mr. Alan Clark: The over-the-horizon radar transmitter proposed for a two-year trial at St. David's airfield, Dyfed, will be a long-range, very early warning installation, and will not have the accuracy necessary for use in conjunction with TASM or Tomahawk missiles. There are therefore no plans to utilise the OTHR as part of a missile guidance system.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give consideration to using the former United States navy base at Benbradagh mountain at Dungiven, County Londonderry, as a site for the radar installation currently proposed for Brawdy, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The site at Dungiven is too far north to be a suitable location for the proposed two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom.

"Open Verdict"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "Open Verdict" by Tony Collins.

Mr. Neubert: The MOD library already possesses a copy of this work.

Holy Loch

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information he has on the planned retirement date for the Poseidon missile-equipped submarines currently deployed at Holy Loch;

(2) what discussions have been held between his Department and the United States authorities concerning United States Navy use of the Holy Loch base after the retiral of the Poseidon missile from United States navy service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 20 March 1990 at column 521.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional duties at the Holy Loch base will be performed by United States personnel to be accommodated in the new houses to be leased by the United States navy in the Dunoon-Sandbank areas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The United States Navy's requirement for additional housing is to alleviate a longstanding shortfall.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of military and civilian personnel assigned to the United States navy base at Holy Loch; and what changes are planned in these levels over the next three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately 2,000 personnel work at the Holy Loch facility. No significant changes in numbers are currently envisaged by the United States navy.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision is made for (a) firefighting, (b) nuclear emergencies and (c) maintenance support of submarines at the Holy Loch facility during periods of absence of the USS Simon Lake.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In periods of absence of the submarine tender, the United States navy has alternative arrangements to cover emergencies, of which Her Majesty's Government are aware. The provision of maintenance support for its submarines is solely a matter for the United States Government.

Air Defences

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current assessment of the threat to United Kingdom air defences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal potential threat to United Kingdom air defences is that posed by the medium bombers of the Soviet Air Force based in the western USSR.

This force has been—and continues to be—steadily modernised by the deployment of the supersonic Backfire, which is replacing the older Badger and Blinder.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current assessment of the need for (a) ground attack aircraft, and (b) air defence aircraft; and what was the assessment one year ago.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The assessed need for combat aircraft has been reflected in the plans described in successive statements on the defence estimates. We are currently reassessing our defence requirements as part of the "Options for Change" study.

Defence Review

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what communications have taken place with the defence industry regarding the economic and industrial implications of the study of options for change;

(2) what communications have taken place with the defence industry regarding future equipment requirements of the armed forces as part of the study of options for change.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am in constant touch with industry and the whole range of procurement matters is discussed. The issues which arise are being taken into account during the current exercise.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Quotas

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss quotas.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss quotas.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss quotas.

Mr. Curry: I and my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office will be representing the United Kingdom at the next Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 27 June. I expect to meet representatives of the fishing industry on that occasion.

Shellfish

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now consider introducing a scheme of compensation for losses incurred in the course of the recent shellfish health warnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 12 June, column 131.

"Chickengate"

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has yet completed his consideration of the conclusions reached in the book entitled "Chickengate", co-authored by the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) and Mr. Richard North.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 18 June, Official Report, column 471.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the results of the experiments with bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Maclean: The companies conducting field trials using BST will decide on the announcement of the result of their work.

Bees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the impact upon the spread of bee diseases of the decision to reduce the numbers and scope of bee inspectors.

Mr. Curry: There is no evidence to suggest that the change in policy for inspections by bees officers had led to any change in the incidence of bee diseases in the United Kingdom.

Live Animals (Transport)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to bring forward legislation or orders to improve the transportation of live animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We intend to amend our legislation regarding the transport of unfit animals. We shall seek to negotiate high welfare standards in the context of proposed EC measures on the protection of animals in transit.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the discussions on the directive relating to the controls operated by Her Majesty's Government on the export of live horses and ponies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Only one Community meeting has been held to discuss the Commission's proposals on protection of animals during transport. We will be pressing to retain our controls on the export of horses and ponies.

Food Distribution

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to encourage investment in fresh food distribution facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government give top priority to food safety and consumer protection as indicated by the Food Safety Bill. However, investment in particular sectors of the food industry is a matter for commercial judgment. The food industry can take advantage of DTI-funded aid schemes and other general Government measures towards this end, and may be eligible for EC-funded grant schemes designed to promote rational marketing and simple processing of primary produce.

Fur Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what foodstuffs are approved for consumption by mink and foxes.

Mr. Maclean: The safety and final quality of feed sold for feeding to fur livestock animals, including mink, are governed by the Agriculture Act 1970 and the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1988, as amended. Foxes are not included in the definition of livestock animals.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he is awaiting from the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells) on 19 April 1990, Official Report, Vol. 170, column 1543.

Consumer Panel

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his consumer panel last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: The last meeting of the consumer panel took place on 2 May 1990. It discussed a wide range of issues including water quality, food labelling, BSE, hygiene training for food handlers and food irradiation. The minutes of this meeting are publicly available.

Food Safety

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association to discuss food safety.

Mr. Maclean: On 3 April 1990 representatives of the Consumers Association attended the first of the periodic meetings set up by my right hon. Friend with representatives of consumer organisations; a further meeting is planned for 12 July.

Farmers' Incomes

Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Farmers Union to discuss farmers' incomes.

Mr. Curry: I frequently meet representatives of the National Farmers Union to discuss farm incomes and other issues.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Tyrrell committee on the question of the removal of bovine brains.

Mr. Gummer: As I indicated during the debate on bovine spongiform encephalopathy on 21 May, I asked the advisory committee on spongiform encephalopathies to consider slaughterhouse practices. I received verbal advice from the committee on 13 June that the recovery of head meat from bovine skulls should not be undertaken after the removal of the brain. I have accepted this advice and have issued appropriate guidance to local authorities. I shall, of course, take account of any further advice that the committee offers in formulating future action on slaughterhouse procedures.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures he has introduced to protect farmworkers who handle cattle placenta from the possibility of cross-infection with the agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) has recently produced an advisory note on bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) for farmers. This includes advice on calving animals suspected to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy, including the handling of placentae.

This advice has been discussed with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and reinforces the executive's advice on the procedures needed to minimise the risks of transmission of all infections from animals to man. The Health and Safety Executive is closely watching research developments in this field and will produce further advice as and when necessary.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what precautions are in force to protect workers in abattoirs who handle animal tissue deemed unfit for human consumption and bovine offals banned for human consumption from the possibility of cross-infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive's field staff is available to give advice on work activities to employers and employees when necessary on any health risks associated with cattle, their carcases and their products which may be infected with BSE. The HSE has produced a free leaflet entitled "BSE and carcase disposal" which sets out hygiene precautions that will protect workers from diseases of cattle known to affect man. It has also agreed guidance that has been published by the British Meat Manufacturers Association which is being distributed to all slaughterhouses, and meat preparation and butchery sectors.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possibility of the subcutaneous transference of the infective agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The risk to human health from such transmission is remote, but the Health and Safety

Executive has issued advice to guard against occupational exposure by cuts and abrasions. Experimental studies are in progress to determine the transmissibility of BSE to various host species by parenteral and oral routes of exposure.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculure, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the distribution of the total number of confirmed cases of BSE, by county, in the United Kingdom in the four weeks to 17 June.

Mr. Maclean: The information for Great Britain is as follows:

County	Number

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances cattle may be awarded a veterinary certificate stating they are free from BSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There is no test for BSE in the live animal, so no such certificate can be given.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ascertain whether BSE or a related condition is present in Holsteins of north American origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: BSE has been confirmed in most breeds, including Holsteins. I am not aware that any of these originated in north America. The epidemiological survey carried out into BSE discounts imported cattle as being the cause.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the infective agent responsible for BSE has been detected in cattle placenta; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No, but transmission experiments are in progress using placenta from BSE-affected cattle.

Cattle and Sheep Exports

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of the export from Britain of scrapie-infected sheep.

Mr. Maclean: It is up to importing countries to determine what conditions they wish to impose upon sheep exported from Great Britain.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which have banned imports from Britain of (a) live cattle and (b) live sheep, giving the date of the introduction of such ban in each case.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is set out in the table:

Country	Date
(a) Live cattle

Southwood Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to avoid a potential conflict of interest resulting from the presence of the Southwood committee of members operating in practice in the embryology research area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I am fully confident that the Southwood working party's recommendations were made after an objective assessment of all the scientific data available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those members of the Southwood committee who are expert in the scrapie family of diseases giving in each case their relevant qualifications.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 5 June, Official Report, column 497.

Tyrrell Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of the Tyrrell committee who have received any financial remuneration, other than as expenses as members of the committee, from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: One member of the Tyrrell committee, Dr. Richard Kimberlin, who is an independent consultant with over 30 years' experience in the field of spongiform encephalopathies, provides expert advice to my Department.

Nitrate Sensitive Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has made an assessment of the percentage of farmers in the 10 designated nitrate sensitive areas who will have to reduce their fertiliser use in order to qualify for payment under the nitrate sensitive area scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what reductions in the use of nitrate fertilisers he anticipates as a result of the introduction of 10 nitrate sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: One of 18 obligations within the basic payment scheme is a requirement to apply no more than the economic optimum amount of inorganic nitrogen fertiliser for any crop, not more than 25 kgN/ha below that optimum for winter wheat or barley, and not more than 50 kgN/ha below for oilseed rape. I would expect the latter reductions to result in lower applications for most participants with arable land. More definitive information will be provided through the evaluation of the pilot scheme.

Notifiable Diseases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances animal diseases for which there exist no practicable diagnostic tests are made notifiable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are a number of factors to be considered in determining whether a disease should be made notifiable, including any implications it may have for public and or animal health and whether it is amenable to diagnosis, either in the field or in the laboratory.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to extend the countryside premium for set-aside land to new areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 18 June, Official Report, volume 174, column 467.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply on 14 June, Official Report, column 464, concerning capital expenditure on road and rail facilities related to the channel tunnel, she will tabulate in the Official Report each of the principal items comprising the £2,000 million projected expenditure on these items, stating for each the sources of the capital expenditure incurred and the amounts when shared between different sources.

The Prime Minister: The £2 billion of public investment planned on roads and railways to the channel tunnel comprises the following:

	£ million (1989 prices)
Trunk roads
Completing and widening (part of) M20 from M25 to Folkestone and upgrading A20 to Dover	265
Upgrading M2/A2 route	115
Upgrading A27/A259 south coast route	330
		710
Local authority roads in Kent		75
British Rail investment
Intercapital passenger rolling stock	350
Waterloo international terminal	100
North Pole (west London) maintenance depot	75
Initial order of freight locomotives and track electrification	80
		[1]605
Infrastructure improvements for passenger services		[2]210
Freight Infrastructure		[3]145
Passenger rolling stock for services beyond London and related infrastructure improvements Ashford international station Night trains from London Further freight locomotives and wagons		[4]110-375
		1,855-2,120

[1] Already approved by Government.
[2] Only £45 million of this subject to Government approval.
[3] Government approval not required.
[4] Detailed proposals not yet submitted.

General Election (Observers)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received calling for impartial international observers from the United Nations or other organisations to observe during the period of the next general election in the United Kingdom to ensure that it is conducted and financed fairly.

The Prime Minister: None.

Spicer and Oppenheim

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what is the number and nature of occasions when Spicer and Oppenheim have advised her Government in the last two years; and what was the cost.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will transfer the responsibility of the Department of Health for the pharmaceutical industry to the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to do so.

Council of Europe

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister what changes have been made in the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) as a full member in place of my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill), and my hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) as a full member in place of my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson). I have also appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) as a substitute member.

These changes will take effect from the close of the meeting of the standing committee on Tuesday 3 July.

NHS Staff Review Body

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the chairmanship of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and the Professions Allied to Medicine.

The Prime Minister: Sir James Cleminson's period as chairman will come to an end when the review body completes its supplementary report on senior nurses. The Government are very grateful to him for the leadership, skill and dedication which he has shown as chairman since his appointment in 1986. I have appointed Mr. Michael Bett to succeed him.

Retired People

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on how the living standards, environment, quality of life and general prospects of (a) the retired in Britain, (b) others in the country and (c) their European counterparts have fared since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The improvement in living standards since 1979 is demonstrated by a number of indicators. For example, real household disposable income per head rose by 26 per cent. between 1979 and 1989. The retired have shared in this prosperity. The average increase in pensioners' total net incomes was 31 per cent. over and above inflation between 1979 and 1987, which is the latest date for which information is available.

Directly comparable data for other European countries are not available. However, real output per head in the United Kingdom has risen faster since 1979 than in many other Europan countries, including France and Germany.

The rising expectation of life, the fall in infant mortality and improvement in housing standards are set out, together with a range of other indicators, in "Social Trends" and "Regional Trends". Both publications also contain some comparisons with other European countries. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Roads

121. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of land in public ownership being used for the building of motorways and trunk roads over the next five years.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available in the form requested.

Weighbridges

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether weighbridges are now provided for all commercial vehicles entering the United Kingdom from the continent of Europe by sea.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has provided weighbridges with the agreement of the port authorities at most United Kingdom ferry ports to enable its traffic examiners to weigh incoming heavy goods vehicles. In addition, a trial has just been completed of automated weighing systems in five ports. In the light of a consultant's report on the trial which is expected shortly, we shall be considering whether to extend the installation of automated weighing systems to other ports. Preliminary negotiations have already taken place with some ports.

Rail Services

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in considering the approval of the construction of the new trains required to operate the through passenger services to the continent via the channel tunnel from the north of the country; when he expects these trains to be ordered; and what undertakings have been given that they will be completed in time for the service to commence from the opening of the tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail published its plans for services beyond London on 14 December and I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) on that date, Official Report, column 767. I understand that BR currently intends to submit its investment proposals for approval this summer, with a view to ordering the trains later this year and commencing services when the tunnel opens.

Young Drivers

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are any plans to restrict the types of cars that young people can drive on the basis of engine capacity.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans at present to impose such a restriction.

Motorways (Tourist Signs)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the destinations chosen for brown tourist signs on motorways.

Mr. Atkins: Tourist sign destinations are not chosen by the Department. They are applied for and authorised against published criteria. The following destinations have been authorised for inclusion on tourist signs on motorways in England by region:

Notes

(1) Words in brackets are not included on the signs themselves, but explain the location of the signs for the purpose of this list.

(2) Some destinations are combined on single signs.

(3) Alton Towers is shown on blue tourist signs in the North West, East Midlands and West Midland regions. These will be changed to brown signs in due course.

(4) Many tourist destinations are signed from trunk and "A" roads, for which there are no central records.

Luton Airport

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his officials were last in touch with Luton borough council about the prospective sale of Luton international airport to private sector owners; and what issues or problems were then discussed.

Mr. McLoughlin: I very much welcome the moves by Luton council to sell Luton airport to the private sector. My officials communicate regularly with officers of Luton borough council on a range of airport matters, including its possible sale. My hon. Friend will be aware that the council was recommended by its advisers to await the Civil Aviation Authority's advice to my right hon. Friend on airport and airspace capacity before holding detailed discussions with interested parties. Publication of the authority's advice is expected next month.

Road Accidents

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information his Department holds on the incidence of accidents on stretches of three-lane carriageways where the centre lane may be used by vehicles travelling in either direction;

(2) if he has any plans to phase out three-lane carriageways where the centre lane may be used by vehicles travelling in either direction.

Mr. Atkins: In England wide single carriageways marked in three lanes but without indication of priority —double white lines—were dropped from the Department's standards for new trunk roads about 20 years ago. Many stretches of such carriageway then in existence have since been phased out and re-marked as two lanes. A few sections remain where they are judged to be safe and appropriate to prevailing traffic conditions. Information about such sections of local roads is for local highway authorities. While road accident statistics record the number of lanes they do not distinguish between those three-lane roads with double white lines and those without. The position in Wales and Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland respectively.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all schools which had achieved grant-maintained status by 1 April 1990 showing for each (a) the total amount of public funding in 1990-91 with all allocations under different heads, (b) the number of pupils, the age range and the number of pupils in each year group and (c) the total funding for each school under its last year of local education authority funding.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table below shows the full-year equivalent amounts of annual maintenance grant—AMG —received by the first 20 grant-maintained schools last year. Provisional figures for 1990-91 have been set at a standard notional 6 per cent. above these amounts. Calculations of final AMG figures for 1990-91 are now being finalised as the Department receives information from relevant local education authorities about their spending plans for the year.

The 1989-90 figures below do, in turn, reflect a 6·6 per cent. increase over what we estimate to have been LEA direct spending levels on these schools in 1988-89. In addition to AMG, schools receive small special purpose grants, for example to mirror what is available to LEAs under the Government's education support grant scheme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average income level of each 1 per cent. of the population with the highest incomes up to the total of 20 per cent. of the population with the highest incomes.

Mr. Lilley: Available information is given in the table. Estimates for 1990-91 are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. Since some investment income from which tax is deducted at source is not reflected in the survey, these estimates are uncertain and more detailed estimates cannot therefore be given.

Average income of individuals liable to tax at 1990-91 levels of income

Group of individuals liable to tax[1]	Average income £ per annum
Top 1 per cent.	97,000
Top 5 per cent.	51,000
Top 10 per cent.	39,000
Top 20 per cent.	30,000

[1] Husband and wife counted separately.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what limit he can impose on the amounts that firms situated in enterprise zones may offset against any taxable benefit tied to that location in respect of their activities, or that of any of their subsidiaries making losses at locations outside that zone.

Mr. Lilley: The tax reliefs which are available to businesses in enterprise zones are governed by legislation and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no proposals for any change in the rules.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the number of people six to 12 months in arrears on their mortgage repayments.

Mr. Ryder: The latest available figures show that at end 1989 there were approximately 58,000 mortgage loans six to 12 months in arrears. This represents less than ½ per cent. of total owner-occupied dwellings in the United Kingdom.

Gilts

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans the next issue of gilts.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's funding policy is as set out in annex A to chapter 2 of the 1990-91 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". Gilt issues and purchases will be made as this policy dictates.

Dublin Docks

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to amend the designation of the Dublin docks area as a high-tax area for the purposes of the controlled foreign companies' legislation.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue maintains and publishes a list of countries, some of which are qualified in respect of particular provisions in their law, in which companies can operate without coming within the controlled foreign companies legislation. That list is kept under review and updated when necessary in the light of changes is the tax provisions of other countries.

Income

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the method by which he calculates personal real disposable income.

Mr. Lilley: Personal disposable income is calculated by deducting from total personal income before tax the sum of United Kingdom taxes on income, social security contributions, payments of the community charge, but not, in the past, payments of rates and transfers abroad. Real personal disposable income is derived by dividing personal disposable income by the consumers' expenditure deflator—the ratio of consumers' expenditure at current prices to consumers' expenditure revalued at constant prices. A description of the personal sector and of the methods of calculating the various compoenents of the personal disposable income calculation can be found in chapter 6, part A of the Central Statistical Office's "United Kingdom National Accounts: Sources and Methods".

Parallel Currencies

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has discussed his proposals for parallel currencies with (a) the President of the European Commission and (b) the president of the Bundesbank; whether he has any plans to do so before the intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said on 21 June in reply to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) at column 655, he will be discussing his proposals further with his colleagues in the European Community, over the coming weeks.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals for parallel currencies as outlined in his speech to the German Industry Forum.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 21 June, at column 655.

CIVIL SERVICE

Census

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what are the reasons for the Central Office of Information's decision to recruit a private advertising firm to undertake a publicity campaign to promote the April 1991 census; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The census offices have commissioned the Central Office of Information to assist them in a publicity campaign to create public awareness of the 1991 census. The Central Office of Information will be handling this work in the same way as it handles work for other Government Departments. The Central Office of Information will be appointing an advertising agency, as it does for all Government advertising campaigns.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Missions (Fax Machines)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which missions abroad are fitted with fax machines.

Mr. Sainsbury: Most of our posts overseas are fitted with facsimile machines. I refer the hon. Member to the current edition of the "HM Diplomatic Service Overseas Reference List", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, which provides facsimile numbers in each case.

Europe Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by Her Majesty's Government to Europe Day on 8 May.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister contributed a message to a volume prepared by the Jean Monnet Foundation to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Schuman plan.

The United Kingdom was represented at the ceremonies in Brussels for Europe Day on 8 May by Her Majesty's permanent representative to the European Communities.

China

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Minister of State's visit to China in July represents any change in the policy of no high level contacts with China; and if the visit's discussions will be limited to the question of Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: It has always been accepted by our European partners that we have a special need to maintain contact and gradually to rebuild good working relations with China over Hong Kong. My visit is in pursuance of that aim. Details of the programme remain to be settled, but it is intended that the discussions should cover Hong Kong and other issues of common concern.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions, if any, at international conferences or meetings within the last five years when Her Majesty's Government have formally rejected or objected to the territorial claim over the United Kingdom contained in the constitution of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a similar question on 20 June 1990. British delegates at all international conferences and meetings explicitly represent the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and this clearly demonstrates our position.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football Clubs

123. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what analysis he has made of the steps being taken by football clubs to implement the findings of the Taylor report.

Mr. John Patten: Analysis of responses to inquiries made last year of the police, fire authorities and local authorities, which are responsible for the issue of safety certificates, about implementation of the urgent recommendations of the interim report of the Hillsborough inquiry indicated that nearly all of them had then been implemented at football league grounds, as had many of the non-urgent recommendations. The majority of the safety recommendations of the final report which are aimed at football clubs comprise recommendations which were in the interim report, with the exception of those on all seated accommodation. We shall be looking to the Football Licensing Authority to check the progress of clubs towards the introduction of all-seated accommodation at football league grounds.

Scientific Expertise

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the representations of Sir David Napley that scientific and forensic expertise ought to be made available to defences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no direct representations from Sir David Napley on the availability of scientific and forensic expertise for the defence although we are aware of his recent newspaper article on the subject. The establishment of forensic science units independent of the Government is a matter for private initiative.

Dog Fighting

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions have been brought for dog fighting in England in each of the last five years; and by whom such prosecutions were brought;

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought for dog fighting in Wales in each of the last five years; and by whom such prosecutions were brought.

Mr. John Patten: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences relating to dog fights from other offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Firearms

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the number of specialist civilian firearms officers employed by police forces to supervise the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988; and what steps he is taking to promote their use.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No records are maintained of specialist civilian firearms officers employed to supervise the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 though returns made by provincial forces to Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary at the end of December 1989 indicated that 80 civilian staff were employed on firearms registration duties with a further 151 in support duties—part-time staff are counted on a two for one basis. The Metropolitan police have 24 such staff.

Home Office guidance on the use of civilian staff suggests that they can be used on clerical and administrative duties involved with firearms and other functions where there is no need for police powers.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the implementation of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 by different police forces; and what steps he is taking to promote a consistent approach across different forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from a number of different sources including Members of both Houses of Parliament, the shooting organisations and individual members of the public about the implementation of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. Administration of firearms controls is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. To help ensure consistency of practice in and between police forces, the Home Department has issued advice on the administration of all aspects of firearms legislation, including the new controls, in the publication "Firearms Law: Guidance to the Police". Copies of the document, which is available to the public, have been placed in the Library. The advice in the guidance is subject to review both by the Home Department and the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite public consultation on the introduction of daylight saving by initiating differential time zones between Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I do not consider that this would be a practical proposition.

Immigration Ministers

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the outcome of the meeting of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in Dublin on 14 and 15 June.

Mr. Waddington: A major theme of Trevi Ministers' discussions was the need to improve further co-operation against drug trafficking. We approved a paper examining the links between drug trafficking and other organised crime, and endorsed new arrangements for a co-ordinated response to requests for technical assistance including training from drug producer and transit countries. At my instigation, Trevi Ministers also agreed to an accelerated timetable for work on the proposal for a European drugs intelligence unit, and to examination of the need for such a unit to have effective links with other European countries including those in eastern Europe.

As Trevi Ministers, we also reviewed progress during the Irish Presidency on measures to develop police co-operation across the whole range of crime in the light of completion of the single European market after 1992. We approved a programme of action setting out a range of measures, a copy of which I am placing in the Library.

The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration, attended also by a Vice-President of the Commission, was the eighth in the series of such meetings held towards the end of each Presidency since 1986.

Ministers took stock of the work carried out in the ad hoc working group on immigration during the Irish Presidency and considered the future programme of work. The main conclusions which we reached are set out in a press release of which I am placing a copy in the Library.

I was pleased to join 10 of my Community colleagues in signing a convention on asylum which establishes criteria for determining which member state is responsible for examining a claim for asylum when more than one member state is involved. I am placing a copy of the convention in the Library, and it will also be laid before the House in the normal way.

Dogs

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce proposals for the control of dogs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have today published a consultation paper, "The Control of Dogs", to seek public reaction to proposals which my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary together with my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment wish to make. This paper co-ordinates a number of proposals aimed at tackling dog control problems directly and without the need for a national dog registration scheme.

Proposals to improve the control of dogs canvassed in the paper include a new offence of allowing a dog to be dangerously out of control; additional powers for local authorities and the police to seize and detain or destroy a dangerous dog; new powers for the courts to impose muzzling and other controls on dogs; additional controls which might apply only to certain breeds or types of dogs, or the banning of such dogs; a new offence of allowing a dog to stray persistently; and a fixed penalty system for enforcement of the collar and tag rules or other dog control provisions.

Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library. Comments on these proposals are requested by 15 November.

Race Relations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions (a) under the race relations provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 and (b) under the Malicious Communications Act there have been since their passing.

Mr. John Patten: Information is given in the table. The 1989 data will not be available until the autumn.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total of costs billed to health authorities by the Metropolitan police to cover emergency cover during the ambulance workers' dispute.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Metropolitan police have charged the South West Thames regional health authority £9·68 million for its assistance.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the murder rate per 1,000 of the population in the constituency of Basildon in 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is that there were 11 homicides recorded by the Essex police force in 1989, a rate of 0·008 per 1,000 population.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) charged with and (b) convicted of the killing of children in (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Basildon constituency in each year since 1965.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of persons indicted and convicted for homicide offences are published annually in Table 4·7 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The number of such cases where one or more victims was less than 16 years of age are given in the table for the years 1982-88. Information on homicides in the Basildon constituency is not available, but figures for the Essex police force area for the years 1982-88 are included; corresponding figures for the years 1965-1981 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Football Grounds

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department has issued to local authorities on their responsibilities for granting safety certificates for, and overseeing reductions in, standing accommodation at football grounds in England and Wales for the 1990-91 football season.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Home Office has given advice to local authorities in England and Wales on their responsibilities under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act in a number of circulars over the past 15 years. The safety standards which local authorities are currently advised to apply for both seated and standing accommodation are those recommended in the 1986 edition of the "Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds" produced by the Home Office and the Scottish Office, subject to certain changes recommended in Lord Justice Taylor's interim and final reports on the Hillsborough tragedy of which local authorities in England and Wales were advised in circulars on 4 August 1989 and 7 February 1990.

We are advised that it would not be appropriate to use safety certificates to require football grounds to reduce standing accommodation which meets accepted standards of safety or when specific powers are available in other legislation. The circular of 7 February 1990 therefore advised local authorities that they should not be used for this purpose. It is for the football clubs to respond to Lord Justice Taylor's recommendations on all-seated accommodation in the first instance. Powers under section 11 of the Football Spectators Act will be used in due course if it proves necessary to do so.

ENERGY

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessments under Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: Assessments under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been carried out by the Department of Energy at those premises where it is the major user. Where the Department is a minor occupier the responsibility for such assessments lies with the major occupier.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to seek the views of Parliament in the form of a debate before he makes any recommendations on the report of the inspector on the Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactor proposal.

Mr. Baldry: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out his intentions for handling the inspector's report in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 14 June at column 287.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge Rebates

122. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding eligibility for community charge rebates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department of Social Security is responsible for the community charge benefit scheme. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 23 May at column 208. In the one month since that reply the Department has received a further 526 items of correspondence about the community charge benefit scheme.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide what information he has about the level of investment income for pensioners, according to the level of their weekly pension income.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available information, from the 1987 family expenditure survey, is set out in the table.

Table[1]: Average investment income according to levels of weekly income from state pension and supplementary benefit[2]

RP and supplementary benefit £	Average savings/ investment income £
00·00 to 39·93[3]	13·45
40·00 to 59·99	15·24
60·00 plus	33·56

[2] It is not possible to identify the state retirement pension separately from supplementary benefit from the family expenditure survey.
[3] Income bands selected to provide representative sample sizes.

Blind People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure provision of social security benefits to blind people with additional costs.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 26 February at column 61.

Industrial Deafness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who were previously denied benefits under the five-year rule governing claims for industrial deafness benefit have re-applied since the ruling of the Law Lords in October 1989 on good cause grounds in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Scott: Eleven applications for review have been received from people in the Greenock and Port Glasgow area following the Court of Appeal ruling. Figures for Strathclyde and Scotland as a whole can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost in the current financial year to extend to transitional protection claimants the full annual uprating of income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost in additional income support has been estimated at about £35 million.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answers of 10 May, Official Report, column 191, and 30 April, Official Report, column 419, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The area is 17,383,684 sq ft.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Information is not available separately for the Departments of Health and Social Security. In the financial year 1989-90, the Departments combined invested £133,000 in energy efficiency measures. Further investment was made by the Property Services Agency, but the amount cannot be identified separately from the agency's overall expenditure on energy efficiency.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many tenants qualify for housing benefit in Ceredigion; what were the corresponding figures for the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 22 June 1990]: The information requested is in the table.

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Number of Local Authority and private tenants receiving housing benefit (rounded to the nearest 50)	4,600	3,750	3,500

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Legislation

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the short title of any legislative Act approved by European Community member states since 1 January in relation to which each state must take national implementing measures; and what action has been taken by each state in relation to each such measure.

Mr. Redwood: The table lists the directives relevant to completion of the single European market which have been formally adopted by the Council of Ministers since 1 January 1990. A period of grace, typically 18 months, is allowed for member states to transpose directives into national law. It is generally too early, therefore, to comment on what action member states will take to implement these directives. In addition, directives in other areas of application, most notably concerning health and safety at the workplace, have also been adopted during this period. A full list of these and other legislative acts—regulations, decisions and recommendations—is recorded in the Official Journal of the European Communities, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Directives relevant to completion of the single market adopted since 1 January 1990

Marketing of compound feedingstuffs
Amendment to Directive 87/102 concerning consumer credit
Bovine semen—amendment to Directive 88/407
Acceptance of pure-bred breeding pigs for breeding
Acceptance of hybrid breeding pigs for breeding
Production and trade in medicated feedingstuffs
Amendment to Directive 77/93 on protective measures against the introduction into member states of organisms harmful to plants or plant products.
Amendment to Directive 80/390 in respect of mutual recognition of public offer prospectuses and stock exchange listing particulars.
Third Directive concerning motor liability insurance
Maximum tar yield of cigarettes
Active implantable electromedical devices
Non-automatic weighing instruments.

Chinese Bicycles

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations have been undertaken within the EEC on the French Government plan to control the importation of bicycles of Chinese origin by quota; and if he will support similar measures to be extended to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: Member states have not yet been consulted about any plans by the French Government to restrict imports of bicycles from China. In seeking such action the French Government would have to submit a formal application to the Commission giving detailed evidence of the injury, or threat of injury, to domestic producers from the imports in question. My officials have received no requests from United Kingdom manufacturers for action to restrict imports into the United Kingdom of Chinese bicycles, but we will consider carefully any case with supporting evidence put forward by the industry.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the percentage increase in Chinese bicycle imports in the current year over 1989; and what action he is proposing to take to protect United Kingdom manufacturing interests.

Mr. Redwood: The percentage increase in imports of bicycles from China to the United Kingdom, for January to April 1990 over the same period for 1989 was 30·1 per cent. by volume. Imports of bicycles from China into the United Kingdom are covered by the EC's generalised system of preferences. My Department is in contact with United Kingdom bicycle manufacturers and will be meeting them shortly to discuss what action could be taken.

Securities Regulation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he will take with regard to the regulatory position in the light of the case of Dunsdale Securities; and if he has any plans to increase the powers of the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association.

Mr. Redwood: It is the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board to ensure that the regulatory framework established by its own rules and those of the self-regulating bodies, including FIMBRA, provides the appropriate level of protection for investors. The Secretary of State has responsibilities for general oversight of the regulatory system under the Financial Services Act, but not for its day-to-day operation.

Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on what matters were agreed at the European Community Consumer Affairs Council on 13 June.

Mr. Forth: The directive on package travel was adopted. There was agreement in principle that the European home and leisure accident surveillance system should be extended and that the programme should be adoped later in June. It was agreed that the rapid exchange of information system should be extended, the matter being remitted to the Committee of Permanent Representatives to consider further detailed procedures.

Consumer Credit Advertising

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he proposes to make changes in the consumer credit advertising regulations with regard to low start mortgage repayments;

(2) whether he proposes to make changes in the consumer credit advertising regulations with regard to home income plans.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I have no plans to do so, but I am always ready to consider reasoned suggestions for amending regulations.

National Front (Printers) Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he gave his approval to the company name National Front (Printers) Ltd. under section 26 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Applications for names requiring the Secretary of State's approval under section 26 of the Companies Act 1985 are considered using established criteria and within the framework of administrative law. There were no grounds on which the application could properly have been rejected.

End User Certificates

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he intends to take to prevent the abuse of end user certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Where there is evidence of attempts to provide misleading information about the end use of equipment which is the subject of an export licence application, the matter is carefully investigated.

WALES

Teachers (Welsh Language)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of teachers of Welsh language and literature required to implement the national curriculum for Welsh; and what proposals he has to make up any shortfall.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimates of the number of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum for Welsh are being prepared in the light of discussions with local education authorities, and using recent information on pupil numbers. It is clear that additional teachers of Welsh will be required as the national curriculum is introduced.

The need for additional teachers will be met through a mix of initial teacher training—ITT—and in-service training. With regard to ITT we have issued new criteria for the training of primary teachers which will require all initial teacher training institutions in Wales to provide opportunities for students to learn Welsh and improve their Welsh language skills while they are training; added Welsh to the list of secondary shortage subjects for which a bursary of £1,500 will be available in initial teacher training; and introduced the Welsh-medium supplement which could produce teachers capable of teaching Welsh in English medium primary schools if students fail to gain posts in Welsh medium schools.

In order to take advantage of the skills available within the existing teaching force we have provided funding to enable courses to be developed for serving primary and secondary teachers to prepare them to teach Welsh as a second language; and provided additional funding for LEA in-service training for Welsh—£900,000 has been made available this year.

The teaching as a career unit was established to promote teaching as a career. Its activity in Wales is sharply focused on the need to recruit additional propsective teachers of Welsh and Welsh-medium teachers. A total of £116,000 has been made available through education support grants for LEAs in Wales to support the development of measures to increase the recruitment of teachers in the shortage subjects including Welsh.

Teacher Training Courses

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many postgraduate students in Wales pursued initial teacher training courses in 1989; and how many benefited from his Department's initiative for meeting the shortfall in Welsh-medium teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 883 post graduate students commenced initial teacher training in 1989. Forty-two of these students are benefiting from the Welsh incentive supplement.

Teaching (Welsh-speaking Graduates)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend his initiative to train additional Welsh-medium teachers to graduate in Welsh language and literature in order to attract sufficient Welsh-speaking graduates into the teaching profession to implement the objectives of the national curriculum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh incentive supplement is aimed at encouraging students who need additional help to develop their language skills to train for Welsh-medium teaching. Additional work is required of these students. Graduates in Welsh would clearly not need additional help and thus there is no case for making the supplement available to this group.

Countryside Change (Survey)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contribution his Department is making to the survey on countryside change being conducted by the institute of Terrestrial Ecology at the University college of North Wales for the Natural Environmental Research Council.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. This is a Great Britain-wide survey funded by the Department of the Environment and the Natural Environment Research Council.

Computers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the school timetable on average Welsh school pupils spend using computers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Obstetrics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many junior doctors are employed in obstetrics on a whole-time equivalent basis in the national health service in Wales in the current year; and how many were employed in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ian Grist: The available information, which relates to staff in obstetrics and gynaecology, is as follows:

Junior doctors in post as at 30 September[1] (whole-time equivalents)

	Number
1984	109·6
1985	116·4
1986	111·7
1987	113·4
1988	122·0
[2]1989	127·2

[1] Senior registrar, registrar, senior house officers and house officers. Excluding locums.
[2] Provisional.

Elderly People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will list, by health authority, the number of beds available in continuing care for elderly people in the national health service in Wales;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure continuing care provision in the national health service for elderly people in Wales;

(3) whether he will list, by health authority, the number of beds in continuing care for elderly people which have been contracted out in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for local health authority management to decide the nature of the continuous care service it provides, in the light of local needs and circumstances and the overall level of provision.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated in the current financial year by his Department to support the implementation of the all-Wales strategy on mental illness (a) to each local authority in Wales, (b) to voluntary organisations in each local authority area and (c) to voluntary organisations in Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist: Provisional allocations have been made in respect of proposals put forward by each of the eight county joint planning teams as follows:

Clwyd	227,100
Dyfed	200,000
Gwent	245,300
Gwynedd	126,597
Mid Glamorgan	137,700
Powys	101,813
South Glamorgan	316,799
West Glamorgan	241,500

In many cases where a proposal involves participation by more than one agency, it has yet to be established how the funding will be apportioned. Some £96,000 has been allocated to the voluntary sector in respect of services being provided on an all-Wales basis.

School Nurses

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many secondary schools in each country in Wales are currently served by a school nurse based on the premises.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of school nurses based on individual secondary school premises is not collected centrally. The numbers of secondary schools served by a school nurse in each county in Wales is as follows:

Number of secondary schools served by a school nurse, 1988-89

	Number
Clwyd	30
Dyfed	16
Gwent	17
Gwynedd	5
Mid Glamorgan	13
Powys	3

	Number
South Glamorgan	25
WALES	135

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that a school nurse be provided at each secondary or high school in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for determination locally.

Rural Housing

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to issue planning guidance on land for low-cost housing in rural Wales.

Mr. Grist: There was an excellent and constructive response to the consultation which the Welsh Office carried out last year. Thirty-two local planning authorities and 16 other organisations wrote in reply to the Welsh Office letter and my right hon. Friend and I are grateful for the time and thought which they gave to the proposed planning guidance.

Most of the respondents supported the objectives of the guidance and agreed that in suitable places it would encourage the sale of land for low-cost housing at less than full residential value and hence reduce the cost of providing the accommodation itself. There were reservations about the degree of benefit, concern about possible adverse environmental effects of a large-scale growth of housing in rural communities and about the cost of servicing a proliferation of sites in villages, as well as many comments of detail.

My right hon. Friend has concluded that to complement existing policies for the provision of low-cost housing in rural areas planning guidance should be issued along the lines of the consultation paper. He recognises proper concerns about the environment and about design and will ensure that in the guidance the importance which he attaches to these will be emphasised. He will also take the opportunity to stress that the scale of provision which he envisages will not be great and certainly not such as to swamp any village with new houses or to put any community at risk because of overprovision of low-cost housing whose disposal is constrained to a low-priced local market. The guidance will be included in a comprehensive planning policy guidance note on land for housing.

Meanwhile the Secretary of State takes the view that in considering planning applications for dwellings in rural areas local planning authorities may accept as a material consideration the fact that watertight arrangements are in place which will ensure that the proposed dwellings are available only to provide affordable accommodation for local people. The local planning authority will of course also have to take into account the provisions of the development plan and all other material considerations. In so doing, they will be expected to have regard to the environmental impact of the proposal on the community and to the need for sympathetic design as well as to the extent of the local housing need which the proposal sets out to satisfy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Televising of the House

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those organisations and individuals who can receive the television pictures of the House of Commons chamber, those who have terminated their receivers since the beginning of the experiment and those who have applied for a signal but have been refused.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The list of organisations and individuals within the House and its outbuildings who receive a clean feed from the Chamber is as follows: Mr. Speaker; Mr. Speaker's Secretary; the Chairman of Ways and Means; the Votes and Proceedings Office the Supervisor of Broadcasting; and the Press Gallery, within which some broadcasting organisations have made their own separate arrangements. There are of course also monitors in each of the Division Lobbies.

In addition, I understand that some Government Departments have arranged through the Central Office of Information to take the clean feed, though this facility does not apply to Ministers' rooms in the House.

So far as organisations outside the House are concerned, all the main broadcasters within the United Kingdom,—the BBC, ITV, Channel 4, Sky TV and BSB —are entitled under the terms of the first report of Session 1988-89 of the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House to receive the clean feed. Westminster Cable TV has also been approved for this purpose. As regards foreign-based broadcasters, BBC and ITN make available on the daily Eurovision news exchange extracts from the clean feed of up to two minutes, while House of Commons Broadcasting Unit Ltd. has licensed WTN and Visnews to supply overseas customers with material from the House of Commons of not more than five minutes duration. In addition, House of Commons Broadcasting Unit Ltd. has licensed a large number of foreign broadcasters to take longer coverage, including:

Country	Broadcasting organisation
Australia	ABC Channel 9
Canada	CBC
Germany	ARD ZDF
Hong Kong	TVB News Asia TV
Ireland	RTE
Japan	NHK
United States	ABC CBS CNN C-Span NBC

House of Commons Broadcasting Unit Ltd. has also licensed the Press Association to provide newspapers with still photographs of the Chamber. These are made, using a freeze-frame technique, from a clean feed supplied for the purpose.

There are a further 26 organisations, mainly in broadcasting or the press, who are already authorised to take a clean sound feed and who, on the basis of a policy decision taken by the Select Committee, are also entitled, without the need to seek separate permission, to take a clean television feed if they wish. I understand that very few of these organisations have in fact exercised their right to receive the television feed, although precise information about their identity is not readily available since as indicated, they do not need the approval of the Select Committee to do so. The full list of 26 is as follows:

British Forces Broadcasting Service
Manx Radio
South African Broadcasting Corporation
National Public Radio (USA)
Radio stations affiliated to the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations
Scandinavian Broadcasting (Danish (DR), Finnish (YLE), Norwegian and Swedish radio and television)
Voice of America
Falkland Islands Broadcasting
Associated Press Ltd.
IBS News Ltd.
Radio Television Hong Kong
Radio Basildon
London Broadcasting Co. Ltd. (who are authorised to supply the feed to national newspapers)
Israel Broadcasting Authority
Norddeutscher Fundfunk Hamburg
Westdeutscher Rundfunk Koln
Deutsche Welle, Koln
Wall Street Journal London Bureau
Reuters Ltd.
Central Electricity Generating Board (CEGB)
Sound Productions (Overseas Promotions) Ltd.
TV Asahi
Christian Science Monitor
Telerate Europe/Gulf
Bank of England
New York Times London Bureau

I know of no case in which a person or organisation entitled to receive the clean feed has decided to stop doing so. Apart from the hon. Member, the only direct representation for the granting of a clean feed which the Select Committee has received and rejected was from the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), acting on behalf of his party.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Extradition

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a request has been made at any time to the Government of the Republic of Ireland to implement article 2 of the European convention on the suppression of terrorism with regard to extradition between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Cope: At the last meeting of the Inter-Governmental Conference on 19 April, Ministers of both Governments commissioned officials to undertake a review of arrangements for dealing with fugitive offenders. We will continue to pursue these matters through the conference.

Social Security

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to improve the budgetary allocation in respect of the social fund to each of the social security offices in South Down.

Mr. Needham: This year's allocations to social security offices took greater account of the level of demand for social fund payments in each area. A copy of a paper describing the allocation formula is available in the Library.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the budgetary allocation to each of the social security offices in South Down in each of the years (a) 11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, (b) 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, and (c) 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991.

Mr. Needham: The information requested can be obtained from the Library.

Public Bodies (Losses)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in statistical form the financial value of losses written off by each education and library board and each area health board in Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Cope: The information for the latest seven years available in each instance is as follows:

Education and Library Boards

Maternity Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on the integration of hospital-based maternity and community midwifery care; whether he proposes to issue guidelines to health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 June 1990]: In Northern Ireland there is an integrated hospital and community midwifery care service. The primary responsibility for deciding the most appropriate management arrangements which will ensure the continued provision of a high quality and cost-effective service rests with health and social services boards.

There are no proposals to issue any guidance.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many salmon were taken by commercial nets in the Foyle area by (a) drift nets, (b) draft nets, (c) fixed nets and (d) anglers in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show for each (a) police county and (b) police division, with breaks at each change of such administrative area, the number of deaths from terrorist action since 1 January 1969 until the latest available date, or as much of such information as is conveniently available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The following table details the total number of deaths due to the security situation in Northern Ireland since 1969. Figures have been compiled using current RUC divisional boundaries.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is in the following table. All of it was awarded on a customer-contractor basis.

£ million, cash

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he plans to take to encourage people entitled to transitional allowance and particularly pensioners to lodge claims both in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and whether he will consider an advertising campaign to that end.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office undertook an advertising campaign in the national press earlier this year and issued more than 150,000 leaflets explaining the scheme to local authorities and interested organisations. Additionally, most local authorities have made extensive efforts to encourage applications from pensioners and the disabled who may be eligible for increased relief under the scheme. We do not consider that any further action needs to be taken.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the percentage of those entitled to transitional allowances on the poll tax in 1989-90 who have actually claimed.

Mr. Rifkind: Ninety per cent. of those people estimated to be eligible for transitional relief should be identified automatically from local authorities' records. At this stage it is not possible to estimate the number of pensioners and the disabled who will receive increased relief for which application must be made.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were liable to pay the poll tax in (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1990-91.

Mr. Rifkind: Returns from community charges registration officers indicate that, as at 5 September 1989, a total of 3,904,189 people were liable to pay the personal community charge. Comparable figures are not yet available for 1990, but in setting their community charges earlier this year, local authorities assumed that 3,887,531 people would be liable to pay the personal community charge in 1990-91. These figures include students, who are liable for only 20 per cent. of the community charge, but exclude those liable for collective or standard community charges.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of second homes for each local authority, on the basis of information collected for the poll tax.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on second homes is not collected for the purpose of levying the community charges. The number of premises liable for the standard community charge for each district and islands council area as at 5 September 1989 is set out in the table.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital expenditure has been incurred on the building of new national health service laundries and the renovation of existing laundry facilities over the last two years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No new laundries have been built in the last two years. Expenditure by health boards on renovating and upgrading laundries has been within their delegated expenditure limits. Details of this expenditure are not held centrally.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital expenditure has been incurred by health boards on the purchase of new laundering and dry-cleaning equipment over the past two years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the capital expenditure incurred on the purchase of a new laundry and dry-cleaning machine and on the construction of new, and renovation of existing, laundry facilities over the past two years was for the creation of additional laundry capacity.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for individual health boards to determine what laundry facilities they require.

Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of housing starts and completions in (a) Inverclyde district, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in each quarter of 1988, 1989 and the first quarter of the current year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the following table. Figure for the period January to March 1990 are not yet available.

Dog Fighting

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have been brought for dog fighting in Scotland during each of the last five years; and by whom such prosecutions were brought.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on prosecutions for dog fighting are not separately identifiable in the Scottish Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences.

Elderly People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list, by health board, the number of beds available in continuing care for elderly people in the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average number of available staffed beds for long term care of elderly patients, by health board is as follows:

Average available staffed beds year ending 31 March 1990

Health board	Number
Argyll and Clyde	746
Ayrshire and Arran	610
Borders	192
Dumfries and Galloway	308
Fife	591
Forth Valley	515
Grampian	1,087

Highland	392
Lanarkshire	853
Lothian	1,087
Orkney	51
Shetland	89
Tayside	652
Western Isles	108
Scotland	8,880

In addition, there was for all Scotland an average of 5,914 available staffed beds for geriatric psychiatry.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list, by health board, the number of beds in continuing care for elderly people which have been contracted out in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average numbers of available staffed beds in joint user and contractual hospitals for the year ending 31 March 1989, the latest date for which information is centrally available, were as follows:

	Number
Argyll and Clyde	14
Greater Glasgow	24
Lanarkshire	54
Lothian	160
Scotland	252

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure continuing care provision in the NHS for elderly people in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of service provision is a matter for individual health boards taking account of local needs. The Government have endorsed the SHARPEN report "Scottish Health Authorities' Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties" which gives the highest priorities to services for old people with dementia, in hospitals and in the community, and to care in the community with particular reference to services for elderly people.

Glasgow High Court

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the future accommodation needs of the High Court in Glasgow.

Mr. Rifkind: Land has been purchased at the rear of the existing justiciary buildings, Glasgow, with a view to making provision for all the work of the High Court in Glasgow to be conducted on the Saltmarket site. Further preparatory work is in progress and court users and others will be consulted on the proposed provision in due course.

Redundancies

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all notified redundancies in Scotland of more than 300 employees since 1979 giving the employer, date of announcement and number of jobs lost.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Information cannot be provided in the precise form requested. The names of individual employers notifying redundancies to the Department of Employment are treated as commercial in confidence. Additionally, data on redundancies confirmed are unlikely to be complete, as employers are not obliged to advise the Department of Employment of the redundancies actually effected following notification. The remaining information sought is set out in the table.

Home Improvement Grants

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the amount of the financial allocation for the new system of home improvement grants for the financial year 1991-92 will be determined.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Government have no immediate plans to introduce a new system of improvement and repairs grants in Scotland. Resources for housing capital expenditure in 1991-92 will be allocated, as in previous years, on the basis of local authorities' relative needs and with reference to their capital programmes and housing plans.

Procurator Fiscal, Orkney

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings he anticipates will be made in the present financial year as a result of downgrading the post of procurator fiscal in Orkney from a full-time to a part-time appointment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The present arrangements for discharging the duties of the procurator fiscal, Orkney are expected to save £25,000 in the current financial year.

HEALTH

Community Care

124. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has made an estimate of the additional costs to be incurred by local authorities in 1991-92 due to the new legislation on community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 23 May at column 199.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Research and development by the Department of Health, all of which is managed on the customer-contractor principle, is funded through the research budgets for health and personal social services, procurement directorate, national health service information technology and building and engineering.

For 1988-89, the latest year for which out-turn figures are available, the total such expenditure was £15·8 million, forming 0·086 per cent. of total Department of Health expenditure.

Available information for earlier years has been published in the Cabinet Office Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development.

South London Hospital for Women

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he or officials in his Department have had, and with whom, on the future use to be made of the now closed South London hospital for women.

Mr. Dorrell: None. We understand that the West Lambeth health authority has plans to submit an approval in principle submission to the South East Thames regional health authority for a proposal to use the site to meet a variety of health needs in the area.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the basis on which financial help will be provided to health authorities after the establishment of hospital trusts in their areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All district health authorities will receive a revenue allocation with which to purchase services for their residents whether from NHS trusts, directly managed units or the private or voluntary sectors.

Minor Surgery

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what encouragement the Government are giving to general practitioners to undertake more minor surgery.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are keen to encourage more GPs to provide minor surgery, which is a service popular with patients. The GPs' new contract introduces for the first time specific remuneration for this work. GPs admitted to the minor surgery List will receive a sessional payment of £100 provided they perform at least five of the procedures listed in the regulations each quarter. A GP is allowed to claim no more than three sessional payments a quarter. Where a GP carries out minor surgery on behalf of a partnership or group practice he or she may claim a higher number of payments in a quarter up to a maximum of three times the number of partners or members of the group. These arrangements will provide a strong incentive to GPs to extend their skills, resulting in an enhanced service to their patients. In consequence, patients will be saved the inconvenience of attending out-patients departments.

Project 2000

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from the Royal College of Nursing on the implementation of Project 2000.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. We understand that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has recently received a letter concerning the implementation of Project 2000 from Christine Hancock, the General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing.

Lyme Disease

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Lyme disease were reported in the last 12 months.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1989, a total of 16 laboratory reports of Lyme disease in England and Wales were received by the public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre. The provisional number of reports received for the first five months of 1990 was five.

Births Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of babies born at Basildon hospital in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Dorrell: Births at particular hospitals have only been analysed by OPCS since 1989. However, records analysed by the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority give the following information.

Year	Number of births
1983	2,323

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 579, if he will detail the relevant monitoring arrangements to ensure that health authorities take account of all relevant expenditure when determining the cost of their in-house laundering and dry cleaning facilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ensure independent assessment those involved in compiling an in-house tender and service costing are expressly excluded from participation in the tender evaluation exercise. All costings are also open to scrutiny by the relevant district health authority, the regional health authority and to internal and external auditors.

Children (Social Services)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to collect the statistics necessary to estimate the number of children who are not receiving care from local authority social services and social workers in cases in which there is a statutory duty to provide such care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no present plans to do so. The regional offices of the social services inspectorate will continue to monitor the situation within their areas.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the waiting list initiative.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 18 January at columns 403-4.

NHS Manager

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of managers within the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Managers may be employed in a wide range of professions and disciplines in the National Health Service; there is no single definition on which a total figure could be based. About 900 general manager posts, and an estimated 8,000 at senior and middle manager level, are currently included in management pay arrangements.

Health Authorities

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will introduce measures to ensure all members of health authorities are directly elected; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Obstetrics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctors are employed in obstetrics on a whole-time equivalent basis in the National Health Service in each regional health authority in England in the current year; and how many were employed in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

Central Blood Laboratories Authority

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what negotiations are taking place, or scheduled to take place, with the United States firm, Baxters, in relation to the Central Blood Laboratories Authority operations at Elstree and Churchill hospital, Oxford; what are the terms of reference of the negotiations; when he expects them to be completed; and what plans he has to report publicly on the outcome.

Mr. Dorrell: The Central Blood Laboratories Authority conducts regular negotiations with other organisations in the plasma fractionation industry with a view to gaining access to methods and processes which might lead to more efficient utilisation of the plasma received from the National Blood Transfusion Service. Baxter Inc is one such company. These negotiations are commercially sensitive and remain confidential.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what account he took of the additional costs of PTB and A and C pay restructuring when deciding cash allocations to regional health authorities;

(2) whether the increased cost consequences of PTB and A and C pay restructuring are to be met from additional central funding or out of existing regional health authority and district health authority allocations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities should meet increases in prices and pay, including the costs of restructuring negotiated in the Whitley councils, from their cash allocations, income generation schemes and cost improvement programmes.

The PTB and A and C pay restructurings were negotiated in 1989. By the end of the two year period 1989-90 to 1990-91, the gross extra resources available to the National Health Service in England will have increased by over £4 billion or 20 per cent.

Corwin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken by the Committee on Safety of Medicines on the drug Corwin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir Michael McNair-Wilson) on 21 June at columns 677-78.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates there are of the number of prescriptions of Corwin to patients with severe heart conditions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 21 June at column 678. Prescriptions do not indicate the nature of severity of the patient's condition.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to re-evaluate the evidence about the heart drug Corwin and to reconsider its recommendations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The safety profile of Corwin has been closely monitored since its introduction onto the market in May 1988 by inclusion on the Committee on Safety of Medicine's (CSM) intensive monitoring scheme for all newly marketed products. The CSM has reviewed all the evidence related to the safety profile of the product on a number of occasions. Restrictions have been placed on the use of the product following re-consideration by CSM as recently as January 1990. Doctors were informed of these restrictions in a letter from ICI Pharmaceuticals, who market the product, and in CSM's bulletin "Current Problems" number 28, a copy of which is available in the Library. The use of Corwin is now to be initiated only in hospital after careful assessment of the patient who is to be regularly followed up. The CSM is satisfied that the product can be used safely if these recommendations are followed, but will continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Drug Safety

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give consideration to adopting in the United Kingdom the United States Food and Drug Administration's system of publishing summary basis of approval reports when a product licence is given to a pharmaceutical drug.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Commission of the European Community (EC) suggested publication of a summary basis of approvals in proposals for a future licensing system for licensing in the EC. Further proposals are expected from the Commission soon and we shall consider these carefully. Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 currently prohibits disclosure of information obtained for the purposes of the Act.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will request all pharmaceutical companies to inform the Committee on Safety of Medicines when they withdraw a licence application to the United States Food and Drug Administration for a drug which has a British licence and to give the reason for the withdrawal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are standard provisions attached to every product licence granted to a medicinal product in the United Kingdom. These provisions require the licence holder to inform the licensing authority of any information that casts doubt upon the continued validity of the data which was submitted for the purpose of the assessment of safety, quality and efficacy of any medicinal product to which the licence relates. Licence holders are also required to provide details of adverse reaction reports received worldwide by them. These statutory requirements provide sufficient safeguards to ensure that the licensing authority and the Committee on Safety of Medicines are informed of all relevant issues relating to a licensed medicinal product by the pharmaceutical company holding the licence.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make public all discussions in the Committee on Safety of Medicines on matters pertaining directly to patients' health.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The deliberations of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) are confidential. Information on potential problems with medicines is sent regularly to all prescribers by means of CSM's "Current Problems" bulletin; in the case of major drug safety hazards the professions are alerted by means of a letter from the Chairman. Other means of publicity may be used when necessary. Drug prescribing information and guidance is also available from a number of other sources, for example the British National Formulary, which the Department issues free to all doctors twice yearly.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation requiring the Committee on Safety of Medicines to consider whether or not a drug is more efficacious than other drugs already on the market before it grants a product licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to amend section 19(2) of the Medicines Act 1968 which requires the licensing authority to leave out of account any question of relative efficacy.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to request the Committee on Safety of Medicines, whenever there is a withdrawal of a licence application to the United States Food and Drug Administration for a drug which has a British licence, to re-evaluate the safety evidence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The licensing authority would consult the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) in the event of important new information being made available in relation to a medical product which was licensed in the United Kingdom. Withdrawal of a licence application made to the United States Food and Drug Administration could occur for a number of reasons. In the United Kingdom holders of product licences for medicinal products are required to inform the licensing authority of any information that casts doubt upon the continued validity of data which were submitted for the purpose of the assessment of safety, quality and efficacy of the licensed product. Licence holders are also required to provide details of adverse reaction reports received by them.

Elderly Patients

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the daily per capita food allowance is for elderly patients in continuing care in the NHS in England.

Mr. Dorrell: The decision as to the level of dietary requirements rests with each individual health authority.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to ensure continuing care provision in the NHS for elderly people in England;

(2) whether he will list by region the number of beds in continuing care for elderly people which have been contracted out in England;

(3) whether he will list, by region, the number of beds available in continuing care for elderly people in the NHS in England.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The Government consider continuous nursing care services to be an integral part of NHS provision for elderly people who require them. There are several ways in which the NHS may arrange the provision of long-term, or continuous nursing care, where it is needed: by provision of community nursing to the patient's own homes; a long stay geriatric ward; in some districts a NHS nurse managed unit; or by beds in private nursing homes paid for under contractual arrangement. It is for local health authority management to decide the nature of the continuous care service it provides, in the light of local needs and circumstances and the overall level of provision.

Hospitals (Health and Safety)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether specific additional funding will be available to meet the cost of implementing health and safety measures in hospitals as required by recent changes in the law.

Mr. Dorrell: Resources to enable health authorities to meet their responsibilities under health and safety legislation are included within existing financial allocations. The level of expenditure is for individual authorities to assess in the light of their own local circumstances.

Beverley Lewis

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has completed its consideration of the reports from the health and social services authorities and the coroner's report on the death of Beverley Lewis; and what further action he intends to take.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received and are carefully considering these reports, and shall soon be in a position to decide what further action would be appropriate.

Child Migrants Trust

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will attend the opening of the Child Migrants Trust office at 8 Kingston road, West Bridgford, Nottingham NG2 7AQ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have written to the Child Migrants Trust expressing my regret that due to a long-standing prior ministerial engagement to visit a hospital I am unable to attend the opening of the office on 29 June. I hope that the occasion will be enjoyable and that the opening will be an important stage in the work of the trust. The Government have made a grant of £20,000 to the trust to support that work.

Family Planning Services

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to improve the family planning service provided by (a) general practitioners, including women doctors and (b) health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 19 June 1990, column 508]: People should be free to choose their source of family planning advice. We look to all health authorities to provide a full range of family planning services to meet the particular needs and preferences of the local population and to strike a proper balance between services provided by specialist clinics and general practitioners. Ninety eight per cent. of general practitioners provide family planning services and advice. Women have increasingly turned to GPs for planning and advice so that now about two thirds of the 4 million people who make use of the service each year in England go to their general practitioners.

The letter to regional general managers referred to in my earlier reply, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, reaffirms previous guidance on family planning services. This particularly emphasised the need to give choice to encourage full take up, the need for separate, less formal, arrangements for young people and their wider health role for instance in cervical smear testing.

Spending on NHS family planning services has increased in recent years. Annual spending on NHS family planning services has risen from £37·7 million in 1979 to £90·3 million in 1987-88.

Children at Risk

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department intends to issue an explanatory circular to local authorities regarding the conduct of case conferences on children at risk, following the recent Court of Appeal ruling on disclosure of social work records.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The conduct of case conferences will be addressed in a revision of "Working Together", in the light of the Children Act, and in training materials commissioned from Nottingham university under the Depatment's central training initiative.

DEFENCE

Regiments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply of 14 June, Official Report, columns 326-27, concerning regiments; if he will give the numbers of people employed in or connected with each regiment listed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 April 1990, the total trained strength of the Army was 136,869. The number of Army personnel employed at each of the arms and services of the Regular Army on that date is as follows:

	Officers	Soldiers	Total
Staff Officers	787	—	787
Household Cavalry and Royal Armoured Corps	1,186	8,930	10,116
The Royal Regiment of Artillery	1,256	10,981	12,237
Corps of Royal Engineers	1,333	11,579	12,912
Royal Corps of Signals	1,073	9,787	10,860
Infantry	3,470	32,392	35,862
Army Air Corps	324	1,250	1,574
Royal Army Chaplains Department	154	—	154
Royal Corps of Transport	896	8,124	9,020
Royal Army Medical Corps	918	2,513	3,431
Royal Army Ordnance Corps	1,002	6,135	7,137
Corps of Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers	968	12,692	13,660
Corps of Royal Military Police	144	2,120	2,264
Royal Army Pay Corps	440	1,499	1,939
Royal Army Veterinary Corps	29	123	152
Small Arms School Corps	29	104	133
Military Provost Staff Corps	7	95	102
Royal Army Educational Corps	499	—	499
Royal Army Dental Corps	207	190	397
Royal Pioneer Corps	102	1,158	1,260
Intelligence Corps	272	905	1,177
Army Physical Training Corps	49	351	400
Army Catering Corps	164	3,985	4,149
Army Legal Corps	58	—	58
General Service Corps	3	—	3
Long Service List Soldiers	—	766	766
Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps	490	958	1,448
Women's Royal Army Corps	311	4,061	4,372

A complete breakdown could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Low Flying

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to research the relationship between the heights at which (i) RAF Tornados and (ii) Tornados operated by the Luftwaffe are regularly flown and the respective accident rates for these forces.

Mr. Neubert: None. The total number of accidents involving Tornados flown by either the RAF or the Luftwaffe would form too small a statistical sample to enable meaningful conclusions to be drawn.

However, after any RAF aircraft accident, a board of inquiry investigates the full circumstances (in which aircraft height may or may not be a relevant factor) and makes recommendations to minimise the risk of recurrence.

Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any representations from allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation favouring the cancellation of the deployment of the tactical air-to-surface missile and Tomahawk missiles on British soil.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received concerning the deployment of the tactical air-to-surface missile and Tomahawk missiles in the United Kingdom; and how many have been opposed to the deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the last year we have received about 20 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and members of the public concerning the deployment of United States TASM and Tomahawk missiles to the United Kingdom. Most of these letters have been related to CND propaganda campaigns opposing, among other things, the possible deployment of TASM to the United Kingdom.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the course of his inquiry into the atomic weapons establishment, Sir Francis Tombs was given access to commercially confidential information.

Mr. Neubert: No information which was classed as commercially confidential was given to Sir Francis (now Lord) Tombs in the course of his inquiry into the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards have been established to ensure that all the companies competing for the contract to manage the atomic weapons establishment had equal access to commercially useful information.

Mr. Neubert: All potential bidders for the management contract at the atomic weapons establishment were given a detailed invitation to tender document, attended a bidders conference and site tour and were given full opportunity to raise additional queries during an extensive pre-bid inquiry phase.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has decided to retain the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment after the introduction of private contractors.

Mr. Neubert: Safety will continue to be given the highest priority at the atomic weapons establishment after the introduction of a management contractor and the subsequent full contractorisation of the establishment. The safety division will become part of the contractorised establishment and will be supplemented by an additional layer of safety oversight from MOD.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet decided on the financial criteria that will be used to monitor the performance of the management contractors to be appointed at the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: The broad criteria against which the management contractor's performance is to be assessed were included in the invitation to tender for the interim contract phase which was issued to potential bidders on 6 April 1990. The detailed arrangements will be finalised during contract negotiation.

Sales Mission, Malaysia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the costs of the RAF mission to Malaysia to assist in the sale of Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 20 June 1990]: I assume that the hon. Member refers to the deployment of six RAF Tornadoes to Malaysia in March 1990. The purpose of this deployment was to participate in an integrated air defence system exercise under the auspices of the five power defence arrangement with Malaysia, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand. The opportunity was also taken to promote wider British interests in the region, including defence sales, through a number of visits and presentations. I regret that a total cost for this deployment to the far east is not available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort, but all costs were met from within existing RAF allocations apart from a contribution of £40,000 from United Kingdom industry in recognition of the defence sales benefits of elements of the deployment.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people participated in each of the last four years in London, Birmingham and Manchester in (a) employment training, and the earlier programmes it replaced, (b) the youth training scheme and (c) the enterprise allowance scheme;

(2) how much expenditure, excluding administrative costs, has been spent in each of the last four years in London, Birmingham and Manchester on (a) employment training, and the earlier programmes it replaced, (b) the youth training scheme and (c) the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when the Health and Safety Executive plan of work 1990-91 was due to be published; and whether there are any implications for resourcing issues;

(2) what representations he has received from (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the Health and Safety Commission on resourcing issues;

(3) what additional resources he intends to allocate for the current financial year to the Health and Safety Executive; and whether there are any conditions attached.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) and a number of commissioners on 31 May to discuss their plan of work for 1990-91 and beyond. He has approved the plan and it will be published shortly. I also refer to my answer on 26 June to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes).

In approving the plan of work the Secretary of State has discussed with HSC the resources required to put it into effect. He has agreed with the Commission that he will find the necessary resources from within his Department's provision for 1990-91.

Employment Service Offices

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many extra staff he proposes to employ at the Kidsgrove and Burslem offices as a result of the proposed reorganisation;

(2) what is his current and projected estimate of the number of people using the Biddulph jobcentre and unemployment office who will be affected by the proposed reorganisation of jobcentres and unemployment offices in Staffordshire and who will use alternative premises in Kidsgrove and Burslem as a result;

(3) how many redundancies will result from the proposed organisation of jobcentres and unemployment offices in Staffordshire;

(4) what is his estimate of the cost and projected cost to his Department of reimbursing travelling costs of those people currently attending the jobcentre and unemployment office in Biddulph to enable them to attend alternative premises in Kidsgrove and Burslem.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessments under Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Nicholls: In keeping with the requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations the Department has carried out a programme to identify the risks associated with all substances and processes which are found within its many workplaces. This has confirmed that the exposure to hazardous substances within the normal office environment is low enough not to represent a significant health risk. Where the hazard is greater steps have been taken to control the use of such substances or processes, or to eliminate their use.

Wage Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will rank by average (a) male wage rates and (b) female wage rates in each of the counties in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on wage rates is not available. However, information on the average earnings of full-time employees on adult rates by county in Great Britain is published in table 110 for males, and table 113 for females, of part E of the 1989 new earnings survey report, a copy of which is in the Library. Figures by county are not readily available for Northern Ireland.

Earnings

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in the real value of average male earnings since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult males increased by 28 per cent. in real terms between April 1979 and April 1989. The increase does not relate to the same individuals at the different dates.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what funds from his Department are currently available to support the provision of nursery, creche or playcare facilities in education establishments and elsewhere.

Mr. Nicholls: The Department does not provide any direct funding to support the provision of child care facilities, but training providers and employers are encouraged to help parents while their training is taking place. Training and enterprise councils will be able to contribute to help with child care from their local initiative funds. They will also have an important role in encouraging other organisations to help with child care. Lone parents on employment training are entitled to receive the costs of caring for their children under 16.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Funding

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to increase funding for the public employment service in Staffordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's Chief Executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badger Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's current programme of testing the efficacy of badger tuberculosis vaccine; and if such research has been affected by the research into BSE.

Mr. Maclean: Further work at the central veterinary laboratory will begin this July. Research into BSE and other priority projects has contributed to delays in this work.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the use of cattle offal in pig and poultry feed.

Mr. Maclean: I have received representations from various quarters on this issue.

Foodstuffs (Toxic Chemicals)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are applied to ascertain residue levels of toxic chemicals in imported foodstuffs from (a) eastern Europe, (b) the European Common Market and (c) the rest of the world: how many tests were carried out in each of the past five years and on what types of foods; and what changes he intends to make in this system.

Mr. Maclean: Imported foodstuffs are examined by Ministry and local government staff for residues of pesticides and veterinary medicines and for a wide range of potentially toxic substances such as heavy metals, natural toxins and environmental contaminants. Details of the tests and statistics relating to them are not at present held centrally, but information on the surveillance of food imports is included in reports of the Government's steering group on food surveillance, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Council directive 89/397/EEC on the official control of foodstuffs includes a requirement, from 1992, for some statistics on food law enforcement to be communicated to the Commission.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific research findings underlie the decision not to include United Kingdom beef sold in the United Kingdom in the new European Community provision relating to the certification of beef as being BSE-free.

Mr. Maclean: As far as boneless beef is concerned, the standards applied to meat for export will be the same as those for meat for the home market. As far as bone-in beef is concerned, I do not believe that there is any scientific justification for the Community measures.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the number of pathological tests carried out for BSE in each of the European Community countries.

Mr. Maclean: Cases of BSE have been confirmed in the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland. It became a notifiable disease throughout the European Community from 1 April 1990. I have no information about the number of examinations carried out.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions officials of his Department have been notified of suspected incidence of BSE in cattle which die or are slaughtered before being officially inspected.

Mr. Maclean: Precise information is not available, but the numbers are small.

Pesticides

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the average length of time currently taken to register new pesticides in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France and (c) West Germany.

Mr. Maclean: In the United Kingdom an application for registration of a new pesticide active ingredient has currently to wait approximately three and a half years before full evaluation can start. The time taken for evaluation will vary according to the nature of the ingredient and the quality of the application.

On 3 April 1990 my right hon. Friend the Minister announced several measures to accelerate the throughput of new active ingredients, including a 60 per cent. increase in the number of scientists working on registration in 1990-91.

I have no comparable information on registration times in France and West Germany.

Suckler Cow Premium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he intends to implement to increase the level of the suckler cow premium following the recent meeting of European Community Agriculture Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 15 June 1990.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for both safeguarding British interests and ensuring proper conservation in the light of the threat to cod and haddock stocks.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom already safeguarded its share under the common fisheries Policy of the North sea fishery available to the European Community having secured 47 per cent. of cod and 78 per cent. of haddock and for the second year running we have again in fact secured an 87 per cent. share of haddock.

The best means of protecting and conserving fish stocks are setting total allowable catches to allow the stock to recover to permit catches at higher levels and to ensure technical conservation measures are effective. Total allowable catches for North sea cod and haddock for 1990 have, therefore, been set at considerably reduced levels. In addition we introduced special measures for this year to reduce the fishing of North sea haddock by means of restricting day at sea or using highly selective gear with the aim of speeding the recovery of the stock.

Further, we have made proposals to the Community for measures to increase the selectivity of gear to reduce the catches of immature fish and at the forthcoming Fisheries Council my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) will be pressing hard for firm proposals from the Commission.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 25 and 26 June.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

The most important decision taken was that vaccination against foot and mouth disease, currently practised in eight member states, should be discontinued throughout the Community on 1 January 1992. The main protection against the disease will thereafter be provided by the slaughter of animals from infected herds as has been the case in the United Kingdom for many years. It is a major British achievement to secure Community acceptance of our policy in this area and the decision is a big step towards establishing the single market. The possibility that the health of animals in the United Kingdom could be put at risk from contact with animals vaccinated against foot and mouth disease and imported from other member states was previously one of the main obstacles to establishing the free movement of animals throughout the Community.

Agreement was reached in principle on a regulation defining the conditions which must be met by products marketed in the Community as "organic". This will protect and reassure consumers and help to ensure equal conditions of competition in this growing sector of the market. The United Kingdom has led the way in organic food production and much of the work concerning these methods of agriculture has been pioneered in this country. The setting up of the United Kingdom register of organic food standards has now borne fruit at a Community-wide level.

Other agreements reached included one to encourage the non-food uses of agricultural products linked to an extension of farmland to be set aside, and one on a revised regime for dried grapes, which will for the first time impose an absolute limit on expenditure in this sector.

In a discussion on animal welfare I stressed that the Council must move ahead rapidly to establish better Community rules.

Among other significant decisions on veterinary matters was one to establish procedures so that in future a greater proportion of expenditure undertaken to curb outbreaks of animal diseases, notably foot and mouth disease, will be met from Community funds. Another decision establishes the rules concerning veterinary checks on intra-Community trade in live animals.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 458, if he will break down the figure of £0·7 million between solid fuel and liquid fuel.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 June 1990]: Within the total of £700,000, less than £5,000 was attributable to solid fuel.

ENVIRONMENT

National Rivers Authority

7. Mr. Aspinwall: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress and performance of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Trippier: The National Rivers Authority has already demonstrated clearly its determination to be an effective guardian of the water environment. It has successfully prosecuted a number of polluters and many more have received formal warnings. The authority is carrying out a national survey of water quality this year; it is actively pursuing solutions to low river flows caused by over-abstraction; and it is co-operating with the water supply undertakers in making contingency plans to deal with drought. Across all its functions the NRA is energetically engaged in a number of reviews of key policy areas.

88. Mr. Paice: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the National Rivers Authority to discuss progress in improving river quality.

Mr. Trippier: I met the chairman of the National Rivers Authority on 1 May to discuss a range of issues relating to the water environment. I hope to do so again shortly in the context of considering the NRA's corporate plan.

Local Government Finance

17. Mr. Favell: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had any recent representations seeking replacement of the community charge with a tax on property values.

Mr. Portillo: I continue to receive a good number of representations on all aspects of local government finance. Some of them are in favour of a tax based on property values, but such a tax would exhibit all the unfairness of the rating system.

Mr. Blunkett: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the assumed rate of poll tax collection he is using in formulating his grant proposals for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend expects to make his proposals in respect of the local authority grant settlement for 1991-92 later this year.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to monitor the level of poll tax collection in England for 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 June 1990]: As with other aspects of the community charge my Department is monitoring closely the progress which authorities are making with collection. We have been in touch with a number of authorities and have included relevant questions in a quarterly statistical survey of all charging authorities to be made in July.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumptions he made on poll tax collection rates in formulating his grant settlement for 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The assumptions in respect of, among other things, any surplus or shortfall in the yield from community charges for 1990-91 are set out in footnote 2 on page 2 of the revenue support grant distribution report (England) which was approved by the House on 18 January 1990.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each charge-capped local authority the information he considered, other than that submitted by the authority itself or already held by his Department, in formulating his proposal for the level of their cap.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 June 1990]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, subject to the approval of Parliament, he intends that the poll tax cap for Lambeth should take legal effect in respect of the poll tax to be paid.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend will lay before the House of Commons a draft order setting out his decisions on the final cap of Lambeth once he has considered fully the arguments which the council has put forward in support of its case for a higher figure than the cap which he proposed. If the House approves the draft order my right hon. Friend will make it and a statutory notice confirming the final cap will be served on the council as soon as reasonably practicable thereafter. The authority then has 21 days to set a revised budget; a new community charge must be set as soon as reasonably practicable thereafter. Until a new charge has been set charge payers in Lambeth are liable to pay the charge originally set.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will update to 1990-91 the answer given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 2 February 1989, Official Report, columns 359-60, showing the distributional effect of the community charge in comparison with domestic rates;

(2) if he will update to 1990-91 the answer given to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 2 February 1989, Official Report, columns 359-60, showing the numbers of gainers and losers by family type and income band from the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures have been calculated on the same basis as those which were placed in the Library on 15 February showing the distributional impact of the community charge. Equivalent income has been calculated using the McClements scale factors.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that all student nurses, whether undertaking training on Project 2000 or on any other undergraduate nursing course, are eligible for 80 per cent. community charge relief for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Under the Personal Community Charge (Students) Regulations 1989 (S.I. 1989-443) all nurses training under Project 2000 and all pre-registration undergraduate nursing students are already elegible for the student relief from the personal community charge.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to arrange for patients who suffer from multiple sclerosis to be exempted from the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Resident hospital patients and those cared for in residential care homes, nursing homes or hostels are exempt from the personal community charge. In a small number of cases multiple sclerosis can cause severe intellectual deterioration. Most such sufferers are in residential care and are therefore exempt on those grounds; those who are still living in the community will be exempt on the grounds of severe mental impairment if they are entitled to a prescribed benefit and have been stated to be severely mentally impaired in a certificate of a registered medical practitioner.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has received a copy of "Coping with the Community Charge? The Preparations for Implementation" published by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux in April; and if he will make a statement on representations received from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Mr. Portillo: Copies of the report were received by my Department last April. My officials will shortly be meeting representatives of the national association to discuss its contents.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding Mr. and Mrs. Western of Beechdale, Nottingham, regarding lack of relief from the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I wrote to the hon. Member on 8 June.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will raise the amount of central Government grant for Nottingham city council.

Mr. Chope: Nottingham city council's grant was calculated on the same basis as for all other authorities. This basis was approved by the House on 18 January and we have no plans to make changes for the current year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department is issuing to general practitioners regarding the criteria used for assessing people as being eligible for exemption from the community charge on the grounds of brain damage.

Mr. Portillo: Guidelines to general practitioners on the criteria to be used in assessing eligibility for the exemption from the community charge on the grounds of severe mental impairment are issued by the Department of Health. Guidance was originally issued in a letter from the Department of Health, dated 3 November 1989; further guidance is to be issued shortly and this will be copied to charging authorities by my Department.

115. Sir Fergus Montgomery: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a person on average male earnings would pay in local income tax in 1990-91 in order to raise the same amount of revenue as the community charge on average in England.

Mr. Portillo: The level of local income tax payable by a person on average male earnings would depend on the tax allowances available to that person.

Illustrative figures placed in the Library on 4 April showed that, on average, the bill payable in England by a person with a taxable income of £12,800 would be £725.

112. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from county councils about their standard spending assessments.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike).

113. Sir Bernard Braine: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to local authorities on whether councillors who are refusing to pay their community charge are entitled to vote on decisions which affect their council's policy towards the pursuit of community charge defaulters.

Mr. Portillo: It is a criminal offence for a councillor, except in the circumstances specified in statute, to speak or vote on a matter in which he or she has a pecuniary interest. Paragraph 8 of the national code of local government conduct, which was approved by both Houses of Parliament, reminds councillors of this. If a councillor is in arrears on any payment due to the council, this can constitute pecuniary interest in questions relating to the collection of such arrears. Paragraph 31 of the code also advised councillors that they should avoid placing themselves in a position that could lead the public to think that they are receiving preferential treatment, for instance, by being in substantial arrears to the council.

105. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the community charge.

Mr. Portillo: I continue to receive a number of representations on a wide range of matters concerning the community charge.

106. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many people have refused to pay the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available centrally and there are very few cases of wilful refusal to pay.

107. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has recently calculated the cost to (a) a man on average male earnings and (b) a woman on average female earnings of a system of local government finance based on capital value rates with a local income tax element based on Kirklees council's 1990-91 budget.

Mr. Chope: No. Figures were placed in the Library on 4 April showing possible tax rates with a system of either capital value rates or local income tax based on local authorities' reported 1990-91 levels of income. From these, illustrative bills showing the effect of combining the two taxes can be calculated by taking the appropriate proportion of each.

103. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the average capital value rates bill in England in 1990-91 on a property worth (a) £50,000, (b) £75,000 and (c) £100,000 in order to raise the same amount of revenue as with the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Figures placed in the Library on 4 April show illustrative levels of capital value based rates in 1990-91 were such a system to be used to raise the same amount nationally as the community charge. The implied average bills in England for properties worth (a) £50,000, (b) £75,000 and (c) £100,000 are £528, £792 and £1,056 respectively.

100. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local government organisations in favour of replacing the community charge with a roof tax.

Mr. Portillo: None.

98. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he estimates will be the effect on the community charge in 1991 of the pay settlement for local government staff.

Mr. Portillo: The effect of the local authority pay settlement on community charges will depend on the extent to which authorities feel obliged to reduce the numbers employed to accommodate the settlement.

It is important that local authorities should make every effort to keep their expenditure under control so that community charges are set at a reasonable level.

91. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet local authority leaders to discuss the introduction of a roof tax in place of the community charge.

Mr. Portillo: No.

93. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the community charge legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government have already announced that they intend to bring forward legislation to amend the law on the standard community charge as it relates to caravans.

48. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what interested groups, including local authority organisations, he has invited to submit views on changes to the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

94. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what interested groups including local authority organisations he has invited to submit views on changes to the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: A large number of views on the community charge have been received, some solicited and others unsolicited.

40. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many suggested alternatives he has received for amending the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department continues to receive a good many representations and suggestions on all aspects of local government finance.

62. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he can take against councils who refuse to use their powers to pursue community charge defaulters.

Mr. Portillo: Financial propriety is a matter for the local authority's auditor. Under section 20 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 where a loss has been incurred or deficiency caused by the wilful misconduct of any person, the auditor shall in carrying out his audit certify that the amount of the loss or deficiency is due from that person and may recover that amount for the benefit of the authority. Where a loss has been incurred as a result of wilful misconduct, those responsible are liable to be surcharged for the amount involved. Where they are councillors, and the amount exceeds £2,000, they are automatically disqualified from being a councillor for five years.

84. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Britons living abroad registering to vote in the United Kingdom will be liable to pay the poll tax in the local government area where they register.

Mr. Chope: A person is subject to the personal community charge if he or she has his or her sole or main residence in England, Wales or Scotland and is not exempt. Anyone living abroad may be subject to the standard charge if they have a relevant freehold or leasehold interest in a domestic property where no one is solely or mainly resident regardless of whether that person is or is not on the electoral register.

69. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last examined the standard spending assessments allocated to local authorities for their capital programmes.

Mr. Chope: The basis of the capital financing standard spending assessment is set out in the revenue support grant distribution report (England) approved by the House on 18 January.

64. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his alternative proposals for the operation of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his alternative proposals for the operation of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to complete our review of the operation of the community charge in the next few weeks.

41. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department is considering any further modifications to the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We are reviewing the operation of the community charge to see whether any anomalies need to be addressed.

34. Mr. Charles Wardle: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are registered to pay the community charge; and how many ratepayers there were in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The latest information for England available to the Department shows that 35·98 million people were registered on 1 December 1989 as subject to a personal community charge, while on 1 April 1989 there were 18·92 million domestic hereditaments on the valuation list.

20. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his review of the poll tax has taken into consideration capacity to earn in relation to ability to pay.

Mr. Portillo: Ability to pay is already taken into account by the provision of community charge benefit which is expected to give about one in four charge payers a reduction of up to 80 per cent. of the full community charge.

National taxes finance the largest share of local government spending and the top 10 per cent. of households by income pay about 15 times as much towards the cost of local government services as the bottom 10 per cent.

22. Mr. David Shaw: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of the community charge.

36. Mr. Andrew Smith: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's review of the poll tax.

Mr. Portillo: We are continuing to review the operation of the community charge to see whether any anomalies need to be addressed.

Land Register

18. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the Land Register; and when he estimates that it will be closed down.

21. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the Land Register.

67. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the public Land Register; and when he expects to close it down.

82. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the Land Register.

109. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the Land Register.

118. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the Land Register.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On 30 September 1989, 82,400 acres were on the register. This is 25 per cent. less than at the end of 1985. We are currently considering the role of the register and whether further measures might be appropriate to reduce the amount of public sector vacant land.

89. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the land on the Land Register is also designated as derelict land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Entries on the register do not include this information. However, replies to my Department's derelict land survey, the results of which will be published shortly, indicated that in April 1988 some 14,000 acres of derelict land were on the register. The total amount of land registered was some 88,000 acres.

Uniform Business Rate

19. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to extend the transitional arrangements governing the introduction of the uniform business rate for smaller businesses to 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Local Government Finance Act 1988 empowers us to provide transitional arrangements for years beyond 1995. We shall certainly be prepared to use these powers to protect businesses facing large increases after the 1995 revalu tion, if this proves to be necessary.

102. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to replace the 100-day rule for liability to pay the uniform business rate for bed and breakfast operations.

Mr. Chope: We have received a considerable number of representations on this subject from all sides of the industry to which we are currently giving careful consideration. We have not yet reached a conclusion on what, if any, changes should be made.

Housing Finance

23. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Building Societies Association to discuss housing finance.

Mr. Chope: Ministers and officials from the Department of the Environment meet representatives of the Building Societies Association and of the Council of Mortgage Lenders, which represents a wide spectrum of mortgage lenders, including the vast majority of building societies, from time to time.

Disposal Notices

24. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many disposal notices he has issued under the 1980 Act during the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Four notices of proposed directions in relation to unused or underused public sector land and two directions, including one of those where a notice was issued within the period.

Avon County Council

25. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations concerning the effect on services he took into account in deciding the level of the community charge cap for Avon county council.

Mr. Portillo: Avon's final cap represents my right hon. Friend's view of what is achievable and appropriate in all the circumstances of the county council on the basis of the information before him. It is for Avon to decide what action to take to live within its cap.

Housing, Hackney

26. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit Hackney to discuss housing with local councillors.

Mr. Chope: No. The Department has regular contacts with the council and will be discussing its housing needs with it as part of the forthcoming housing investment programme round.

Radioactive Waste

27. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances disposal of radioactive material is permitted in local authority landfill sites.

Mr. Trippier: Radioactive waste may be disposed of only if an authorisation has been issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Authorisations are issued after careful assessment of the environmental impact of the proposed disposal. They impose strict conditions and activity limits which are designed to ensure that any dose of radiation to the general public is below the maximum permissible as recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Detailed information about disposal routes and practices for radioactive wastes, including disposals at local authority landfill sites, is contained in part II of the HMSO publication entitled "Radioactive Substances Act 1960—A guide to the administration of the Act", a copy of which is in the Library.

77. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to restrict further the discharge of radioactive liquids to the public sewerage system.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Discharges of radioactivity to the public sewerage system are already closely regulated under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (RSA60) by authorisations issued by Her Majety's inspectorate of pollution. These authorisations impose strict conditions and activity limits, set at levels which ensure proper protection from such disposals for members of the public, sewerage workers and the environment. I am satisfied that RSA60 provides a fully satisfactory regime for regulating radioactive waste disposals and I have no plans for further changes other than those proposed in part V of the Environmental Protection Bill currently before Parliament.

House Building, Hampshire

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communication he has had with Hampshire county council regarding house building in the county until the year 2001; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend wrote to the chairman of Hampshire county council's planning and transportation committee on 5 May. He welcomed the progress being made on the preparation of a draft countywide structure plan. He made clear his strong support for the work of the London and south-east regional planning conference and stressed the importance of the regional guidance for the south-east particularly in regard to the housing provision figures for the years 1991 to 2001 annexed to it. I understand that Hampshire county council will undertake formal public consultation on a draft plan later this year.

Private Rents

29. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to take action against private landlords who have not reduced the rent inclusive of rates following the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 8 February, Official Report, Vol. 166, column 756.

81. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning private tenants whose landlords have not reduced their rent by any rates element.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 23 May, Official Report, vol. 173, column 249.

Ozone Layer

30. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's negotiating position at the United Nations conference on the ozone layer in London on 27-29 June.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 25 June.

39. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the London conference on the ozone layer.

Mr. Trippier: The second meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer beings today in London. Some 100 countries are represented. Our aims are to achieve a significantly strengthened protocol and to persuade as many countries as possible to join it.

Right to Buy

31. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to the number of local authority tenants who have bought their homes under the right to buy legislation.

Mr. Chope: Some 950,000 tenants have bought their homes under the right to buy from local authorities in England since April 1979.

Cryptosporidiosis

32. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report from the drinking water inspectorate on the outbreak of cryptosporidiosis in parts of North Humberside.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The drinking water inspectorate has received a report from Yorkshire Water Services Ltd. on the outbreak. It awaits further information from the company and a report from the incident control group which comprises representatives of the health authority, local authorities, public health laboratory service, the communicable disease surveillance centre and Yorkshire Water Services Ltd. after considering this information the inspectorate will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Council Rents

33. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information on the average rate of rent increases for 1989-90 for council tenants.

Mr. Chope: The estimated average weekly rent for local authority dwellings in England at April 1989 is £20·70 and the provisional figure for April 1990 is £23·36, an increase of 12·9 per cent.

Association of County Councils

35. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Association of County Councils; and whether the charge-capping of some local authorities was discussed.

Mr. Chris Patten: I last met representatives of the Association of County Councils on 21 May, together with representatives of other associations. Charge capping was not discussed.

Housing Corporation Approvals

37. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new approvals will be made by the Housing Corporation in this financial year.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Corporation is currently discussing with housing associations which new schemes will receive approval this year, and will make an announcement in due course.

Local Government Efficiency

38. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards encouraging more efficient local government.

Mr. Portillo: More efficient local government is to everyone's benefit. The potential savings from improved efficiency could be used to reduce charges or to deliver better services at the same charge. The community charge and the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering will each encourage greater efficiency.

85. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet the Controller of the Audit Commission to dicuss the potential for efficiency savings in local government.

Mr. Portillo: I met the Controller on 18 June.

Audit Commission figures released on 13 June 1990 showed that at March 1990 auditors had identified recurrent value improvement opportunities totalling £1,328 million a year, of which £662 million had already been implemented.

It is the duty of the auditor of each local authority to be satisfied by examining the accounts and otherwise, that the authority has made proper arrangements for securing economy, efficiency and effectiveness in its use of resources.

78. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet local authority leaders to discuss the potential for efficiency savings in local government.

Mr. Portillo: This year, as in the past, meetings will be held with leaders of the local authority associations to discuss the revenue support grant settlement. The potential for efficiency savings in local government will be among the subjects under consideration.

World Indoor Games

42. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to meet representatives of Sheffield city council to discuss funding for the world indoor games.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at this date.

Eutrophication

43. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to tackle the problem of eutrophication in British waters.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Eutrophication is a problem in only a few British waters. It is tackled on a case-by-case basis which takes into account local conditions. The National Rivers Authority has the responsibility for setting the standards of effluents discharged into those waters. The most common method of control is the removal of phosphates at sewage treatment works. Other measures being taken which will reduce inputs of nutrients to our coastal waters are listed in the United Kingdom North sea action plan. The decision to ban dumping of sewage sludge at sea, and to treat all substantial sewage discharges to sea will further reduce nutrient inputs by between 10 per cent. and 20 per cent.

Forests

44. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to establish new community forests.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have authorised three such forests—at Tyne and Wear, south Staffordshire and east London—as pilots for this joint initiative by the Countryside and Forestry Commissions. In due course we shall consider their proposals relating to nine other candidate sites: north Bristol, Cardiff, Cleveland, Hull, west Manchester, east Merseyside, Neath-Port Talbot, Southampton-Portsmouth and South Yorkshire. However no decisions on extension of the programme have yet been made.

Water Charges

45. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning the working of the water infrastructure charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has received numerous representations about the new system of water and sewerage infrastructure charges. The detailed application of the charges is for individual water and sewerage companies, within the terms of their instruments of appointment. The Government believe that the new system provides a much fairer way of funding the provision of infrastructure capacity for new developments then the previous system whereby new customers were subsidised by existing ones.

Air Pollution, London

46. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on ozone levels in central London.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom ozone monitoring network includes a site in central London. Between January and June 1990, ozone levels measured at this site averaged 11 parts per billion (ppb). Over the same period, an hourly average of 75 ppb was exceeded on seven occasions, The World Health Organisation hourly guideline value is 75 to 100 ppb.

The Department has produced a "Layman's Guide to Low Level Ozone", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Integrated Pollution Control

47. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he hopes to see the practice of integrated pollution control, which is being pioneered in Britain, spread throughout Europe.

Mr. Trippier: I do indeed. Although the EC recognised the benefits of an integrated system of pollution control in the fourth action programme, Britain has gone further than any country in Europe to put such a system into practice on a national basis. Given the scope for pollution reduction offered by an integrated system of control, I hope that other member states and European Governments will follow our lead.

South Africa (Sport)

49. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering any change in policy by Her Majesty's Government towards sporting links with South Africa.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government consider that it would be premature to do so. Therefore, we remain fully committed to the Commonwealth statement on apartheid in sport, the Gleneagles agreement.

Empty Properties

51. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to take powers to require owners to utilise empty private properties.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. It is in owners' interest to make such properties available for renting, rather than keeping them empty, thanks to the changes to private renting legislation we made in the Housing Act 1988.

Stationery

52. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of his Department's notepaper is produced from mill off-cuts.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All the letterhead paper and ministerial notepaper used in the Department of the Environment is produced from mill off-cuts.

Housing Action Trusts

53. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing action trusts have been established under the provisions of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: None.

Housing Corporation

54. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Housing Corporation to discuss housing development.

97. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Housing Corporation to discuss housing development.

Mr. Chope: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning meets the Chairman of the Housing Corporation from time to time to discuss housing development and other matters.

58. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about funding for the Housing Corporation.

119. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the funding for the Housing Corporation for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Corporation's gross capital expenditure in 1989-90 was £935 million, and is planned to increase to £1,100 million in 1990-91, £1,563 million in 1991-92 and £1,736 million in 1992-93.

Housing Waiting Lists

55. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the local authority housing waiting lists.

Mr. Chope: The latest information available to the Department is for the number of households on housing waiting lists at April 1989, as reported by local authorities in their 1989 housing investment programme (HIP1) returns; the figures appear in column B51 of "HIP1 All Items Print (1989)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Council House Building

56. Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new council properties for rent he expects to be completed during 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Chope: In the first four months of 1990, 4,300 new council dwellings are provisionally estimated to have been completed. The Government do not forecast council housing output. Housing associations are becoming the main providers of new subsidised housing for rent.

Land Use

57. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is continuing to monitor the use of derelict or under-used land, once in public ownership, now transferred to private ownership under the privatisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The efficient use of their assets is a matter for the companies concerned.

Recycling

59. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to introduce recycling credits for waste collection authorities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government intend to place a duty on waste disposal authorities to pay recycling credits to waste collection authorities in respect of waste diverted from disposal facilities by recycling. If Parliament approves this proposal, comprehensive guidelines will be published to advise authorities on how the system should operate.

114. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received from local authorities regarding the idea of recycling credits for waste collection authorities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have received 136 written responses from local authorities and oral comments from 10 others. Most were in favour of the proposals.

83. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote the recycling of office grade paper.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is important to establish a reliable chain of collection and processing facilities. I was pleased to support the Friends of the Earth paper round project at its launch on 25 June; this project is receiving grant aid from my Department through UK 2000 to help to set itself up. The paper-making industry is expanding its manufacturing capacity and the Government are also giving a lead in specifying recycled paper wherever possible: my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, announced last week that the Department is prepared to pay a reasonable premium for recycled paper in order to encourage industry to increase volume production of such paper.

Planning

60. Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has held with the Council for the Protection of Rural England on planning issues in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning met the Council for the Protection of Rural England last month, following a meeting that my right hon. Friend had with it last October. The CPRE commented earlier this year on my Department's draft planning policy guidance note on "The Countryside and the Rural Economy", and recently sent my right hon. Friend a copy of its report on planning controls over agricultural dwellings. We are studying its comments along with others received.

120. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to publish the results of the consultations of outside opinion on proposals for prior to demolition planning applications in respect of dwelling houses;

(2) when he expects to publish the results of the consultations on proposals for pre-demolition planning applications in respect of dwelling houses, prior to site redevelopment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Responses to the Department's consultation paper "Planning Permission: Demolition of Houses" were invited by 25 June. Over 90 responses have been received so far. They are being analysed, but I cannot yet say when I shall be able to announce the Government's conclusions.

99. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce new planning legislation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I propose to introduce legislation when the parliamentary timetable permits.

87. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to review the planning procedures for rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department is finalising the planning policy guidance note on "The Countryside and the Rural Economy" in the light of the many comments received on the consultation draft, and continues to keep the operation of the planning system under review.

68. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent submissions he has received regarding future planning strategy for south-east England.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I continue to receive many submissions which touch upon future planning strategy for south-east England. I hope later this year to receive advice on the subject from the London and south-east regional planning conference, "SERPLAN".

Eastern Europe (Pollution)

61. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking in assisting eastern European countries to tackle environmental pollution.

Mr. Trippier: In a meeting of EC and eastern European Environment Ministers in Dublin on 16 June, at which I represented the United Kingdom, I made clear the United Kingdom's determination to play a full part in tackling the appalling environmental problems of eastern Europe. We are already active in the multilateral PHARE—Poland and Hungary Assistance for Economic Restructuring—programme co-ordinated by the European Commission. This has earmarked £216 million for restructuring the economies of Poland and Hungary, more than a sixth of it for the environment, and we have provided key experts for fact-finding missions. I am hopeful that a significant proportion of the £144 million allocated to extending the programme to other eastern European democracies will stimulate environmentally sound projects and investments.

In addition, my Department is working closely with the United Kingdom know-how fund. We have sent a local government mission to Poland and discussed co-operative action with the British water industry. We have invited representatives of industry, environmental groups, universities and the media to a seminar next month on all aspects of environmental help. I have also invited the Polish and Czech Environment Ministers to this country in the autumn after which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I hope to visit east Europe to see for ourselves what needs to be done.

Derelict Land

63. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to assist those local authorities which face the problem of increasing dereliction.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department maintains a vigorous programme of derelict land reclamation through the derelict land grant programme. We have provided £71·5 million for this purpose in 1990-91, and I anticipate that about 1,300 hectares of derelict land will be reclaimed. Delelict land is also reclaimed by the urban development corporations and through the operation of city grant, and the urban programme.

My Department's survey of derelict land in England in 1988 showed that the overall level of dereliction had in fact decreased by some 5,000 hectares since the last survey in 1982, although there are areas where the amount has increased. My Department will continue to target assistance at the worst areas of dereliction.

The measures for dealing with dereliction were reviewed last year, and we are currently considering responses to the consultation document, "A Review of Derelict Land Policy". We will be announcing policy changes later this year which will ensure that these measures continue to assist local authorities to tackle the reclamation of derelict land effectively.

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land in public ownership has been entered on the register of derelict land for each of the last five years for which records exist.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West (Mr. Hunt) as Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on 21 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), [Official Report, Volume 169, column 669].

75. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the rate at which land in public ownership currently on the register of derelict land is being disposed of.

92. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the speed of disposals of land from the register of derelict land.

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to improve the effectiveness of the register of derelict land.

Mr. Moynihan: As I stated to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 26 April, we are currently considering whether further measures might be appropriate to reduce the amount of public sector vacant land.

73. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much vacant land in public ownership is entered on the register of derelict land; and what was the acreage in each category of (a) the public sector, (b) statutory undertakers and (c) nationalised industries.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 21 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind), Official Report, Vol. 169, column 668-69.

70. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the register of derelict land; and what steps he is taking to reduce it.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) earlier today and to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 26 April.

River Pollution

65. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in cleaning up the rivers of the United Kingdom; and what standard has been achieved against the European Community average.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There has been an overall improvement in the quality of rivers since the first national survey carried out in 1958. The most recent river quality surveys, carried out in 1985 throughout the United Kingdom, showed that 95 per cent. of the United Kingdom's rivers were of good or fair quality. A review of river classification schemes across the European Community published in 1988 by the water research centre showed that the average figure in the EC for rivers of comparable quality was 75 per cent.; the review also indicated that no other member state bettered the United Kingdom's position.

74. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of United Kingdom rivers are of good or fair quality; and what information he has on the situation in the rest of Europe.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The river quality surveys carried out in 1985 throughout the United Kingdom showed that 95 per cent. of the United Kingdom's rivers were of good or fair quality. A review of river classifiction schemes across the European Community published in 1988 by the water research centre showed that the average figure in the EC for rivers of comparable quality was 75 per cent.; the review also indicated that no other member state bettered the United Kingdom's position.

Building Regulations

66. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is planning any alterations to the building regulations between the present time and 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A review of the Building Regulations 1985 is currently being undertaken. A number of consultation proposals has been issued, but alterations arising from these proposals are not likely to be made before the first half of 1991.

Housing Finance

71. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals under consideration for the reform of housing finance.

Mr. Chope: A major reform of housing finance was given effect by the Housing Act 1988 and the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and is now being implemented.

Agricultural Land

72. Mr. Hannam: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres currently in agricultural use are estimated as being needed to satisfy the housing requirements in the south and south-west of England in the next 10 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 21 March, Official Report, column 668.

Homelessness

76. Mr. Roy Hughes: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest available figure for homelessness; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In the 12 months to March 1990 English local authorities accepted responsibility for securing accommodation for 132,890 households under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts; in 1979 the figure was 57,200. However, because of a change in the reporting system between 1980 and 1982, the figure for 1979 is not strictly comparable with those for later years.

116. Mr. Cox: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which will deal with homelessness in London that he has met during the last three months.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have met the following voluntary organisations dealing with homelessness in London during the last three months: West End Co-ordinated Voluntary Services; Look Ahead Housing Association; St. Mungo's Housing Trust; the Salvation Army; Shelter; the Thomas Coram Foundation for Children the Shelter Housing Aid Centre; CHAR; Centrepoint (Soho); and Thames Reach.

111. Mr. Buckley: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement about the number of families becoming homeless through mortgage repossession.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 21 June 1990 to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, at column 642.

104. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the number of homeless households in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest estimates of households accepted as homeless in England appear in table 1(a) of "Local authorities' action under the homeless provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter 1990. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

European Football Competitions

79. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he had in Italy regarding the admission of English football teams into European competitions next season.

Mr. Moynihan: I made it clear to the president of the Italian Football Association, who is vice-president of UEFA, during my visit to Italy last month that it would be unwise of the Government to take a view or for UEFA to reach a decision on the return of English clubs to European competitions until we were able to assess the behaviour of English supporters both in the 1989-90 domestic season and at the World Cup finals.

EC Directives

80. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Britain's record on infraction proceedings arising from European Community environment directives; and what are the comparable figures for other Community countries.

Mr. Trippier: According to figures published for the first time this year by the European Commission, as at 31 December 1989 the number of current infraction proceedings against each member state on environmental matters was as follows:

	Number
Spain	57
Belgium	47
Greece	45
France	41
Italy	40
United Kingdom	31
Federal Republic of Germany	29
Netherlands	24
Ireland	21
Portugal	14
Luxembourg	12
Denmark	5

These figures cover all stages of proceedings for alleged failure to comply with treaty obligations, including letters of notice. A number of the cases recorded against the United Kingdom have since been terminated.

There are just two cases against the United Kingdom which have been brought by the Commission to the European Court of Justice, both of which have yet to be heard. According to the Commission, the comparable figures for other member states are as follows:

	Number
FRG	8
Belgium	7
France	7
Italy	7
Greece	3
Spain	3
Nethelands	2
Luxembourg	1
Denmark	0
Portugal	0

Climate Change

86. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his reponse to the findings of recent scientific research on the specific impact of human activity on climatic changes.

Mr. Trippier: The Prime Minister set out the Government's response to the report on the science of climate change produced by working group I of the Inter-Governmental Panel on Climate Change in her speech on 25 May 1990 at the opening of the Hadley centre for climate prediction and research.

Water Pollution

90. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his discussions with the other European Community Environment Ministers on the directive concerning the discharge of dangerous substances into water.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 12 June at columns 160-61.

Environmental Protection (Fiscal Measures)

95. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has made a recent assessment of the possible use of fiscal measures to improve protection of the environment.

Mr. Trippier: Fiscal measures are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Toxic Waste

96. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to seek to establish Europe-wide controls on the transport of toxic waste.

Mr. Trippier: Movement of hazardous waste involving EC member states is regulated by national law implementing the relevant EC directive. The Government have urged the Commission to bring forward proposals quickly to amend this directive to give effect to the global system of controls to be established under the Basle convention. The Government have also taken a lead in proposing measures to reduce transfrontier movements of waste to the environmentally justified minimum and as a result EC Environment Ministers agreed earlier this month to aim for self-sufficiency in waste disposal facilities.

Action For Cities Programme

101. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount the Government are currently spending on inner city regeneration under the action for cities programme.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 17 May, Official Report, column 503.

Rents to Mortgages Scheme

108. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the rents to mortgages scheme will include help for participants who might encounter difficulties with meeting the mortgage payments.

Mr. Chope: No such scheme has been announced for England.

Caravan Sites

110. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to review the workings of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no plans to review the workings of the legislation.

Urban Development Corporations

117. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the performance and progress of the urban development corporations.

Mr. Portillo: The 10 English urban development corporations are making good progress in regenerating their areas. They have secured £9 billion of private sector investment, created or attracted nearly 50,000 jobs and facilitated the completion of over 15,000 dwellings.

Local Government (Responsibilities)

Mr. David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the extra responsibilities placed by national Government on to local government except for education for each of the two years ended 5 April and his best estimate of the cost of compliance to local government.

Mr. Chope: The major new burdens, other than those relating to education, falling to local government in 1990-91 include: community charge collection, the implementation of the Children Act, new initiatives in waste disposal management, and the structural maintenance of bridges after existing EC derogation in respect of lorry weights ends in 1999.

The major new burden, other than those burdens relating to education, falling to local authorities in 1989-90 was preparation for the introduction of the community charge.

The best estimates of the costs of these burdens plus savings resulting from improvements in efficiency or the removal of responsibilities, such as the ending of the rating system, were taken into account, along with all the other relevant factors, when we made the settlements for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Waste Disposal Sites

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and current status of waste disposal sites in England by disposal authority, waste type, town, location of facility, and land size, or so much of such information as is available.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment does not hold a definitive list of waste disposal sites in England. Each disposal authority is required to maintain a register containing details of all disposal licences issued by the authority which are in force. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the authorities concerned.

European Badger

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what protective status the EEC accords to the European badger.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Beach Pollution

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the main measures taken since 1974 by his Department to combat pollution of beaches in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on recent progress.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The EEC bathing water directive was adopted in 1975. In December 1979 the present administration announced a list of 27 bathing waters to be monitored under the terms of the directive. Further bathing waters were added in 1985 and subsequent years. At present 440 bathing waters have been identified including all major seaside resorts. During the 1989 bathing season 76 per cent. met the directive's mandatory standards for coliform bacteria.

A £1·4 billion investment programme was announced last year to bring all bathing waters into compliance within 10 years. On 5 March my right hon. Friend announced, at column 452, a further £1·5 billion investment programme to ensure that all substantial discharges of sewage are treated before discharge to inland or coastal waters. Discussions are now being held with the water industry to work out the detailed implementation of this policy.

Measures are also being taken to reduce litter on beaches. The Environmental Protection Bill places a new duty on local authorities and some other landowners to do all that is practicable to keep their land, including beaches, clear of litter and refuse.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to hs reply to the hon. Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 23 May, Official Report, column 255, what consideration is being given in his Department's review of noise control to the noise created by low-flying military aircraft.

Mr. Trippier: Noise from defence establishments is formally excluded from the terms of reference of the noise review working party. However, the members of the working party are aware of the issues raised by low-flying military aircraft, and the Ministry of Defence was represented at the meeting at which aircraft noise as a whole was discussed.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Trippier: My Department's policy is to provide a safe working environment and safe methods of work that are without risk to the health and safety of its employees. Under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 (COSHH) my Department has assessed departmental working environments and found no instances of significant exposure to a hazardous substance.

The assessments will be reviewed on a continuing basis, and amended where there are any significant changes to work.

County Councils (Reserves)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the latest information available to him on the proposed changes in financial reserves held by English county councils during the 1990-91 financial year, and his estimate of the proportions of net revenue expenditure represented by such reserves at 31 March 1990 and 31 March 1991.

Mr. Chope: The available information derived from authorities' budget returns is given in the table. Negative values indicate drawings from reserves and positive values indicate the building up of reserves.

Boundary Commission Reports

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local government boundary commission reports he is currently considering, stating the date he received each and setting out reasons for any delay in making a decision.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [pursuant to his answer, 21 June 1990, Official Report, columns 638-39]: The reports under consideration are:

	Commission's report number	Date of receipt
Review of counties
Bedfordshire: boundaries with Buckinghamshire and Cambridgeshire	566	[1]14 November 1988
Berkshire: boundaries with Buckinghamshire, Hampshire, Oxfordshire and Surrey	558	[1]31 August 1988
Buckinghamshire: boundaries with Hertfordshire, Northamptonshire and Oxfordshire	571	[1]5 May 1989
Hampshire: boundaries with Dorset, West Sussex and Wiltshire	580	1 February 1990
Leicestershire: boundaries with Derbyshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire and Warwickshire	577	[1]9 October 1989
South Yorkshire: boundaries with Doncaster (North Yorkshire) and Bassetlaw (Nottinghamshire)	585	4 June 1990
Staffordshire: boundaries with Cheshire, Derbyshire, Hereford and Worcester, and Warwickshire	582	[1]12 February 1990
Surrey: boundary with Hampshire	578	19 January 1990
Reviews of parishes within districts/boroughs
Chorley	—	1 May 1990
Northampton	—	2 January 1990
Woodspring	—	12 February 1990

[1] Decision to be announced shortly.

By statute, a period of at least six weeks has to be allowed for representations to be made to the Secretary of State following the submission of proposals to him by the local government boundary commission. In practice, a longer period is given. In addition, pressure of other work on the staff concerned has meant that we have not been able to deal with all difficult cases as quickly as we would have wished.

Admission Charges

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in light of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh Borough Council, what advice he is now offering to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England in respect of concessionary admission charges for elderly people.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the Commission.

North Sea (Dumping)

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to speeding up the prohibition of the dumping of sewage and other waste in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I hope to publish shortly a guidance note on implementation in the United Kingdom of the decisions agreed at the Hague conference on the North sea on 7 and 8 March. The conference was concerned with all types of waste input to the sea, including the dumping from ships of treated sewage sludge and sewage discharges to coastal waters. On these matters the United Kingdom policy remains as set out in the answer given respectively by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 5 March and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 5 March.

Radioactive Waste Management

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he, or his Department, makes appointments to the panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council.

Mr. Trippier: My colleages the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales decide what appointments should be made to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the meetings of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council are open to the public.

Mr. Trippier: The meetings of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee are not open to members of the public. However, the committee publishes annual reports summarising the work it has undertaken throughout the year.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what vacancies are current or forthcoming on the panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council.

Mr. Trippier: There are no vacancies in the membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. The terms of office of eight members come to an end later this year.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the membership of the panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council; and if there is any provision for the representation of any environmental public interest groups on this panel or at meetings of the panel.

Mr. Trippier: The membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee is as set out in the latest annual report, with the one exception that Professor J. R. Greening has now retired. A copy of the annual report has been placed in the Library. The committee holds regular meetings with a wide range of public interest groups and takes their views into account in providing advice to Ministers.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding is available to facilitate public attendance at meetings of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council.

Mr. Trippier: No funds are available for this purpose as the meetings of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee are not open to the public.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the remit of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council.

Mr. Trippier: The remit of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee is set out in the first annual report of May 1980, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what public interest groups have representation on the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council; and whether such groups make suggestions to him for individuals to be nominated to take part in the work of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council.

Mr. Trippier: The membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee is set out in the annual reports, copies of which are placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend considers all suggestions for nominations to the committee, including those from public interest groups.

Tourist Resorts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for assisting local authorities which have a large influx of visitors during the summer months.

Mr. Chope: There is an allowance in the other services block standard spending assessment fot the costs related to tourism, based on the annual average number of nights that visitors stayed in a given local authority's area.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider a specific tourism grant for major holiday resorts to cover the additional costs associated with a large increase in population for parts of the year.

Mr. Chope: There is no need to establish a specific grant for this purpose. The costs which fall to local authorities as a result of seasonal influxes of tourists are already taken into account in the annual revenue support grant settlement.

South West Water

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the inspector who conducted the inquiry at the Old Postern, Dartington, on 18 June, into South West Water's application for a drought order on the River Avon, is given the details of the accidental discharge of titanium dioxide into the River Erme on 15 June and of the damage done to aquatic life; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The discharge of titanium dioxide into the River Erme on 15 June has no direct bearing on South West Water's application for a drought order affecting the River Avon, because the rivers are not linked. I understand from the National Rivers Authority that, although this discharge affected the appearance of the Erme, it did not affect aquatic life. The Secretary of State's decision on the drought order application will be issued as soon as possible.

Air Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the information held by the Department of the Environment press office about daily ozone pollution levels is available to members of the public; and whether he plans to further improve the availability of information from the national air pollution monitoring network to the public.

Mr. Trippier: As announced last August when the low-level ozone public information system was set up, information is available to any member of the public who contacts the DOE press office (telephone number 071 276 3000—public inquiries unit) during episodes of elevated ozone levels. The Department is constantly looking at ways to improve its services.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost to the Warrington and Runcorm development corporation of (a) redundancy money paid to staff joining business ventures employed by the corporation and (b) the provision of rent-free accommodation to business ventures employed by the corporation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In accordance with its contractual obligations the corporation made redundancy payments totalling £4·6 million to staff who joined business ventures. The fees paid to business ventures by the development corporation took account of their use of corporation premises.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long rent-free accommodation was provided by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to business ventures employed by them; and what was the loss of revenue to the corporation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The corporation ensured that the provision of accommodation to business ventures was reflected in the level of fees which it paid for their services. There was therefore no loss of revenue to the corporation. The length of time that busines ventures used corporation accommodation varied from 12 months to 30 months.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the redundancy payments made by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to each of their officials, together with their grades, who joined a business venture employed by them.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The information requested could be provided in the Form requested only at disproportionate cost. A total of £4·6 million was paid to 283 members of staff, an average of £16,300.

Toxic Algae

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the National Rivers Authority's task force on the problems of toxic blue-green algae, and the related deaths of sheep and dogs at Rutland Water, will be published.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The report is nearing completion and will be published as soon as possible.

Social Deprivation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the social deprivation index for local authorities for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 June 1990]: I have today placed a table in the Library showing for each charging authority the value of the all ages social index for 1990-91, described in annex A to the revenue support grant distibution report (England), together with its rank in England, and the equivalent figures for 1989-90, described under indicator C9 in the rate support grant report (England) 1989-90. The values of the indicators cannot be compared directly.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on changes in the size of the private rented housing market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) earlier today.

Norman Shaw North (Water Supply)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 296, if his Department has yet determined the source of the coli-aerogenes discovered in the water supply of the Norman Shaw North parliamentary building.

Mr. Chope: Since my answer of 14 June there have been further developments. The presence of coli-aerogenes was again detected in the supply, but because the chlorine level was above the minimum standard, the Parliamentary Works Office was advised that the supply did not have to be shut off. Both the system in the building and the mains have since been sterilised and the subsequent test results are good.

It is not easy to establish the source of this sort of contamination, but it seems that the problem did not orginate in the building but in the mains.

Written Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from (a) the higher rate of income tax and (b) the top 10 per cent. of income tax payers in 1986-87 and the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the projection for the current financial year.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

	Income tax liability at rates in excess of basic rate[1] £ billion	Total income tax liability of top 10 per cent. of income tax-payers £ billion
1986-87	2·8	[3]16·9
1987-88	3·7	[3]18·4
1990-91[2]	4·4	[4]24·9

[1] The figures are the additional tax liability resulting from the difference between each higher rate and the basic rate of tax.
[2] Estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 Survey of Personal Incomes and, are therefore, provisional.
[3] Counting a husband and wife as one income tax payer.
[4] Counting a husband and wife as separate income tax payers.

Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what means the Government intend to use to finance its borrowing requirement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's funding policy is as set out in annex A to chapter 2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1990-91".

Capital Inflows

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of short-term capital inflows in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information for 1988 and 1989 on the main categories of financial transaction in the capital account of the balance of payments is published by the Central Statistical Office in the press notice issued on 13 June—CSO (90) 80—a copy of which is in the Library. It is not particularly meaningful to distinguish between short-term and other capital flows.

European Monetary Proposals

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has assessed the expert and lay public reaction to his European monetary proposals announced on 21 June.

Mr. Major: I am studying reactions to my proposals and look forward to discussing these proposals further with my European Community colleagues in the coming weeks.

Petrol Duties

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised in excise duty on (a) unleaded and (b) leaded petrol (i) in the three months prior to 20 March and (ii) subsequently.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised in excise duty on (a) unleaded and (b) leaded petrol (i) in the three months prior to 20 March 1990 and (ii) subsequently.

Mr. Ryder: Data are not readily available for the exact periods prior to and after 20 March. For the period 15 December to 14 March, £417 million duty was collected on unleaded petrol and £1,128 million on leaded petrol. Provisional figures for the period 15 March to 14 May show that £347 million duty was collected on unleaded petrol and £847 million on leaded petrol.

European Currency

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals for a common European currency.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 21 June, Official Report, column 655.

Output Statistics

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest information on the output per hour worked in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Japan.

Mr. Ryder: Output per hour worked in the United Kingdom in 1986, the latest year for which data are available, is estimated to have been about 50 per cent. higher than in Japan.

Personal Income

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in real personal disposable income during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: During the first quarter of 1990 aggregate real personal disposable income was 5 per cent. higher than in the corresponding period in 1989.

Inflation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the level of the retail prices index and (b) the underlying rate of inflation in June 1989 and at the current time.

Mr. Ryder: The annual rate of increase of the retail prices index was 9·7 per cent. in May 1990. The underlying rate of inflation, as measured by the retail prices index excluding mortgage interest payments and rates-community charge, was 7 per cent. The corresponding inflation rates in June 1989 were 8·3 per cent. and 5·8 per cent. respectively.

Interest rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the effects of interest rates on Welsh economic performance.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received in 1990 from businesses about the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such letters.

Home Carers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the range of possibilities for tax relief for those who employ carers in the home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: All aspects of the tax system are kept under review.

Shareholders

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the latest estimate of the number of individuals owning shares.

Mr. Lilley: According to the latest survey carried out in January and February this year for the Treasury and the stock exchange, nearly 11 million individuals own shares.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the introduction by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of the serious misdeclaration penalty and default interest on value added tax.

Mr. Ryder: The working of the penalty for serious misdeclarations and the charging of interest on all underdeclarations will be closely monitored by Customs during the two years following their introduction on 1 April 1990 and reviewed in the first half of 1992.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals to use tax incentives to stimulate energy conservation work.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no present plans to do so.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of the Treasury in the latest available year.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Until now the Treasury's energy conservation role has been limited to running internal publicity campaigns on energy efficiency and day-to-day energy management. Costs have been de minimis. However, the hon. Member will be interested to know that as refurbishment of the Department's buildings takes place, such works will incorporate substantial energy conservation measures.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what further candidates for agency status have been announced in the last two months.

Mr. Luce: Three further candidates for executive agency status have been announced in the last two months: Chessington computer centre in the Treasury; the fisheries enforcement services in the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland; and the estates directorate in the Department of Health. This brings the total number of announced agency candidates to 26, in addition to the 31 established agencies.

THE ARTS

Training Institutes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what support his Department is giving to institutions training actors, actresses and other artistes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Some training for the stage is provided in higher education institutions funded by the Department of Education and Science through the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, and by further education colleges funded by local education authorities. In addition to this general support, the DES makes a direct grant to the Royal Ballet School and the Arts Council funds the National Opera Studio, which provides advanced training for singers. Most professional training for actors and dancers is however provided by independent establishments whose students may receive discretionary awards from their local education authorities.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Under the guidance of the Cabinet Office, staff are encouraged to follow simple but effective no-cost measures to help reduce energy wastage. Major investments to improve energy efficiency are the responsibility of Property Holdings and the departments which are the major occupiers of the two buildings in which my office is located.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements were made or conditions agreed with the Governments of the United States of America and the People's Republic of China which enabled Dr. Fang Li Zhi and his wife to leave the United States embassy in Beijing and enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Following agreement between the United States and Chinese Governments that Dr. Fang should be allowed to leave Peking, Dr. Fang and his wife have been given leave to enter the United Kingdom for an initial period of six months, which can be extended. No special conditions apply to this arrangement. Dr. Fang is a distinguished astrophysicist and intends to pursue his academic work for a time here. We warmly welcome the Chinese Government's decision to allow Dr. Fang and his wife to leave, and are glad that we have been able to contribute to a positive solution to this long-standing problem.

Ivory (Hong Kong)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ask the Hong Kong authorities to destroy all current stocks of confiscated ivory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: No. This is a matter for the Hong Kong authorities. There is no obligation under CITES regulations to destroy stocks of confiscated ivory.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current total of confiscated ivory now held by the Hong Kong authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 21 June in which I stated that the current total of confiscated ivory held by the Hong Kong authorities was 2·4 tonnes. There has been no change since then.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why India and Canada are included as countries of export of seized ivory in his reply of 5 June, Official Report, column 472, but are not listed in his reply of 8 May, Official Report, column 25, as being countries of export of ivory seized by the Hong Kong authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: We are making further inquiries with the Hong Kong authorities. I shall give the hon. Member a substantive answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 5 June, Official Report, column 472, what are the countries of destination for the 702·5 kg of ivory seized in transit by the Hong Kong authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: According to the accompanying shipping documents, the intended destination was Macau.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds the Hong Kong authorities seized 15·5 kg of mammoth ivory imported by Lee Chor Mui from Japan, as detailed in his reply of 8 May, Official Report, column 25.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: The mammoth ivory imported by Lee Chor Mui was seized for further investigation because customs officers initially suspected that it might be elephant ivory. Once the ivory had been examined and confirmed to be mammoth ivory, which is not controlled under CITES, it was returned to Lee Chor Mui.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why no reference was made in his reply of 5 June, Official Report, column 472, to the 15·5 kg of mammoth ivory seized from Lee Chor Mui.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 June 1990]: No reference was made in my reply of 5 June to the mammoth ivory seized from Lee Chor Mui because imports of mammoth ivory cannot be identified from Hong Kong Government's trade statistics.

Moreover, as the ivory in question was not elephant ivory, it did not appear in the import statistics compiled by the CITES management authority.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Trips (Seat Belts)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to make the fitting and wearing of seat belts compulsory in minibuses and coaches used for school trips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The responsibility for this matter rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, who is pursuing possible action.

Musical Education

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to protect the level of opportunities for musical education in the light of the current proposals to merge the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music.

Mr. Jackson: The committee which conducted the review of the London music conservatoires was appointed by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. The latter has now published the committee's report and invited comment on it by the end of September. It will then be for the council to decide what action to take in the light of the report and of the responses to the consultation on it. My right hon. Friend looks forward to hearing what conclusions the council comes to in due course.

It is clear from its terms of reference that in appointing this committee the council had in mind the need "to maximise the efficiency and effectiveness of the provision of music education" in its sector and is seeking to discover how the three London music conservatoires within its aegis

"may be organised so as to train young performing musicians to the highest national and international standard".

Copies of the committee's report have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

School Buses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to education authorities concerning child safety on school buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend works closely with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on these matters. Two documents have been issued recently. First, "Children and Roads: a Safer Way", which was sent last month to all local education authorities and heads of all schools, sets out the Government's proposals for reducing the number of child casualties on our roads, and includes a section on safer bus travel. Secondly, there is the Department of Transport's consultative document of 6 June, incorporating proposed regulations for distinctive signs on school buses and related safety measures, which has been issued to a large number of interested organisations for comment by 31 August.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many children travel to school each day by school bus in each education authority area.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is not collected centrally in England.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to education authorities concerning the criteria to be applied in determining whether a child qualifies to travel to and from school by school bus.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities in England must decide the arrangements they consider necessary to transport pupils to and from school in the light of local circumstances and of the relevant legislation. In 1981, the Department sent a circular letter to education authorities in England giving general guidance on school transport issues. The advice it contains remains current. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Physical Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the membership of the national curriculum working party on physical education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement in the near future.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities which are now operating a system of local financial management for further educaton colleges.

Mr. Jackson: The following local education authorities in England are operating a system of local finanical management for further education colleges.

WALES

Rural Disadvantage

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amounts of social policy expenditure have been allocated by his Department, and its agencies, to combat rural disadvantage.

Mr. Grist: Expenditure is not classified in the way implied by the hon. Gentleman's question. However, by way of example, well over £3 million is being spent by the Welsh Development Agency each year to fund its various rural development measures including the allocation of £1 million a year for the next five years for the development of rural initiatives and venture enterprises—DRIVE. This is expected to generate a further £15 million to £20 million of private sector investment. Tai Cymru aims to allocate £25 million towards the provision of housing in rural areas in Wales in this financial year, which should generate around £7·5 million of private finance. In addition the gross budget for the Development Board for Rural Wales is £19·918 million for 1990-91. The formulae used for the allocation of resources to local authorities and to district health authorities both contain certain elements which recognise the particular needs of rural areas.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. David Hunt: All of the expenditure will have been based on the customer-contractor principle, and the information is shown in the table:

	Total departmental expenditure on R&D £ million	Proportion of departmental budget per cent.
1979-80	1·1	0·15
1980-81	1·1	0·13
1981-82	1·6	0·17
1982-83	1·6	0·14
1983-84	1·3	0·11
1984-85	1·6	0·13
1985-86	2·6	0·20
1986-87	3·5	0·24
1987-88	1·9	0·12
1988-89	2·0	0·12

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what capital expenditure has been incurred by health boards on the purchase of new laundering and dry cleaning equipment over the past two years.

Mr. Grist: Capital expenditure incurred by health authorities on the purchase of laundry and dry cleaning equipment over the last two years for which information is currently available is as follows:

1987-88	136,243
1988-89	701,796

Source: Health authorities annual accounts.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what capital expenditure has been incurred on the building of new national health service laundries and the renovation of existing laundry facilities over the last two years;

(2) what proportion of the capital expenditure incurred on the purchase of a new laundry and dry cleaning machine and on the construction of new, and renovation of existing, laundry facilities over the past two years was for the creation of additional laundry capacity.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Maternity Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many obstetric beds are available now in Wales, how many were available in each of the past five years; and what are the equivalent figures for each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Details of obstetric beds in district health authorities in Wales for 1988-89, the latest available, and previous years are published in "Hospital Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to allocate resources to support the role of voluntary organisations at a local and national level in Wales in the implementation of the all-Wales strategy for mental illness.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already allocated resources to voluntary organisations at both national and local level for a variety of purposes connected with the mental illness strategy.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all working papers, implementation documents, departmental circulars and other publications, whether in draft or final form, that have been issued by his Department to date arising from the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, "Working for Patients", "Caring for People" and associated Government initiatives.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the comprehensive reply I gave him on 14 March 1990. An updated list of Welsh Office and Department of Health material arising from the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and related White Papers will shortly be placed in the Vote Office and Libraries.

DHAs (Capital Assets)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give full details of the requirements he has placed on district health authorities in Wales in respect of drawing up a register of their capital assets.

Mr. Grist: District health authorities in Wales were asked to compile capital asset registers by 31 March 1990. The registers contain details of those assets managed or owned by each authority, including land and buildings, which individually have a value of £1,000 or above or in the case of groups of related assets with individual values of less than £1,000 exceed £250 and are collectively worth more than £1,000. The format of asset registers has not been prescribed but they should contain as a minimum:

1. Asset identification and description.
2. Asset location.
3. Date of acquisition.
4. Method of acquisition.
5. Initial capital expenditure.
6. Expected replacement cost.
7. Expected date of replacement (or end of life).

Authorities may, however, wish to include additional information for their own asset management purposes. A comprehensive asset register will enable managers to undertake effective management and utilisation of capital assets as well as providing the basis for capital charging.

No standard computerised recording system has been prescribed for maintaining and updating asset registers, but most authorities in Wales are using variants of the works information and management system—WIMS.

Market Research

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all market research surveys (a) commissioned by his Department or (b) paid for by his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Project 2000

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) for what purpose the resources originally earmarked for Project 2000 for nurse training in Wales, but which will not now be used for that purpose, will be redirected;

(2) what was the original total financial sum earmarked for the implementation of Project 2000 for nurse training in Wales; and what is the latest figure for this purpose.

Mr. Grist: The only provision which has been earmarked for the implementation costs of Project 2000 are the resources which have been made available for the current financial year which total £1,493,000. Funding requirements for future years will be subject to the decisions which my right hon. Friend will take on the distribution of his block allocation following this year's public expenditure review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the original total number of nurses who would be trained each year in Wales under Project 2000; and what is the revised figure.

Mr. Grist: The estimated intake of nurses who would have trained in the first year of an all-Wales introduction of Project 2000 courses is as follows:

	Number
North Wales	240
West Wales	359
South-East Wales	590-630

The decision to phase implementation will stagger these numbers. Traditional nurse training courses will continue to be run to meet the manpower requirements of health authorities until Project 2000 is fully introduced in Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Exchange Rates

Q6. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received concerning exchange rate policy.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations.

Human Rights

Q129. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on her policy regarding intervention in respect of abuses of human rights in Commonwealth countries.

The Prime Minister: Where Commonwealth countries' practice on human rights has given cause for concern, we have made representations as necessary.

Official Visits

Q145. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Rugby or Kenilworth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Q154. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Leith.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Q179. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister when she next proposes to make an official visit to Disneyland, United States of America.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit California.

Q210. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a skill centre.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

German Unification

Q156. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions she has held with Chancellor Kohl and other heads of European Community states regarding the representation of Germany, following unification, in the European Parliament; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The implications for the EC of German unification were discussed at the European Council on 25 and 26 June. It is our aim to achieve integration into the EC of the territory of the former GDR without change to the structure of the Community's institutions.

Homelessness, London

Q184. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to meet organisations representing the homeless in London.

The Prime Minister: I have no such plans. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and his ministerial colleagues have regular meetings with voluntary groups working with the homeless, and with local authorities in London and their associations.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when she plans to visit the European Court of Justice.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the European Court of Justice.

Local Authorities

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many official visits she has paid to local authorities since May 1979;

(2) how many meetings she has had with the leaders of the local authority associations since May 1979;

(3) on how many occasions leaders of the local authority associations have been invited to official hospitality functions at No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: I have met numerous local authority representatives since May 1979, in the course of visiting their counties, towns and rural districts.

Litter

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister when she intends to implement her policy to introduce a £1,000 fine for dropping litter.

The Prime Minister: The maximum fine for dropping and leaving litter will be raised from its present maximum of £400 to £1,000 later this year, two months after Royal Assent of the Environmental Protection Bill. At the same time local authorities will be empowered to introduce schemes involving fixed penalties of £10.

Legislation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether there is any continuing review of existing legislation to determine whether the law in Scotland and in Northern Ireland should, as far as possible, be the same as in England and Wales (a) overall and (b) in relation to penalties for offences which are covered by different pieces of legislation in the different legal jurisdictions of the United Kingdom;

(2) whether any automatic review of changes in legislation made in respect of England and Wales is made in order to consider whether the law in Scotland and in Northern Ireland should adopt the England and Wales position.

The Prime Minister: When preparing any individual piece of legislation in Scotland or Northern Ireland, related legislation is taken into account.

Engagements

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Governor of Hong Kong.

TRANSPORT

Coaches and Lorries

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what statistics are collected on tyre failures on coaches and heavy goods vehicles;

(2) what information his Department has on trends in the number of tyre failures on coaches and heavy goods vehicles on motorways and major roads.

Mr. Atkins: The vehicle inspectorate has statistics on those tyre failures on coaches and goods vehicles which it obtains from its own accident investigations and from police and other sources where a safety defect is suspected.

Since many tyre failures can occur without serious consequences or accident, these are not always brought to my Department's attention. Our statistics therefore are unable to reflect the actual field situation or failure trends. However, the statistics show that tyre failure was a contributory factor in less than one in every 250 accidents investigated.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Atkins: The expenditure on research and development by the Department of Transport is set out in the table, together with the proportion this represents of the Department's total expenditure in the financial years 1979-80 to 1988-89. All research commissioned by the Department is based on the customer-contractor principle.

Outturn prices

Financial year	R and D expenditure £ million	Percentage of total DTp expenditure
1979-80	17·8	3·0
1980-81	21·1	3·0
1981-82	27·5	3·0
1982-83	25·9	2·4
1983-84	[1]27·8	2·8
1984-85	32·7	2·7
1985-86	[2]25·0	2·1
1986-87	24·6	1·9
1987-88	26·4	1·9
1988-89	27·0	1·9

[1] In July 1983, responsibility for air and marine transport was transferred to DTp.

[2] In 1985-86, BR and LRT assumed full responsibility for their own R and D expenditure. Government financial support continued to be provided through the general revenue grants to BR and LRT; but the research elements cannot be separately identified.

Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what technical problems remain to be overcome in the planning and design of the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Atkins: The design of junctions at Offerton road (A627) and Buxton road (A6), and extensive diversions of statutory undertakers' apparatus along the line of the route are among issues to be resolved.

British Rail (Freight)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Railfreight Users Group concerning the adequacy of preparations by British Rail for freight facilities.

Mr. Freeman: The recently formed Railfreight Users Group has been in touch with us and with British Rail. BR has offered the group an early meeting to discuss its concerns.

Birkham Wood

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he made of the environmental implications before deciding to route a bypass through Birkham wood; and if he will now re-examine the designated route so as to minimise further the environmental damage.

Mr. Atkins: The road proposals affecting Birkham wood (Harrogate-Knaresborough southern bypass) have been promoted by North Yorkshire county council. Public local inquiries were held in 1989 to consider the proposals and the inspector has reported to the Secretary of State. At these inquiries evidence on the environmental implications of the route of the bypass through the wood was presented by the Nature Conservancy Council and others. This evidence was summarised in the inspector's report together with the county council's response.

An interim decision letter was issued on behalf of the Secretary of State on 23 November 1989 which was concerned with a technical defect in the compulsory purchase order. Once this issue has been resolved the Secretary of State will come to a decision in respect of the orders.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much public money is expected to be spent on road improvements connected with the construction of the channel tunnel, up to the end of 1993.

Mr. Atkins: The trunk road infrastructure to serve cross-channel traffic using either the ports or the channel tunnel, when built, has been put in place progressively over a good many years.

In addition to the network now in use, we have currently under construction or in preparation 31 schemes, valued at approximately £588 million at November 1987 prices, to complete or improve the major direct trunk routes concerned; of these, we expect that eight schemes to the value of approximately £268 million will have been provided by the end of 1993.

Kent county council has a special package of 10 channel tunnel-related local road schemes, valued at approximately £75 million, which my Department is committed to supporting with transport supplementary grant. I understand that all but one of these schemes are expected to be provided by the end of 1993.

MV Marine

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action that he proposes to take following the publication of the report of the inquiry into the loss of the MV Marine by the Bahamian Government.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received the report and it is being studied by members of my Department, and it would be inappropriate to comment on the matter at this time.

Railways (Noise)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the names or grades of the members of his working party to study noise levels on railway routes with special reference to the channel tunnel high-speed link and other connecting routes.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my predecessor to my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) on 23 March 1990 at column 777, which gave both the terms of reference of the committee and its composition.

Street Works Legislation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to bring forward a Bill to reform present public utilities street works legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government accept that the arrangements for utility street works are in need of reform and intend to bring forward new legislation to implement the main recommendations of the Horne report "Roads and the Utilities". A Bill based on proposals contained in the consultation papers issued by the Department of Transport last year will be introduced as soon as a suitable opportunity can be found.

Radio Navigation System

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has regarding the current attitude of the Danish authorities towards participation in a civil Loran C marine radio navigation system to cover north-west Europe and the north Atlantic and to the siting of a transmitter station in the Faroes;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 25 April, Official Report, column 195, to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price), what estimate his Department has made of the cost to the fishing industry in the United Kingdom of the proposed change from the Decca navigation system to the Loran C system; and what proposals he is considering to assist the industry to meet the costs of the changeover;

(3) with which countries his Department has discussed the proposal for an international civil Loran C system of marine radio navigation aid to cover north-west Europe and the north Atlantic; and what progress has been made in these discussions;

(4) what representations he has received from the fishing industry regarding his proposals on the length of transitional period required to convert from the existing Decca navigation system to the Loran C radio navigation system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Discussions on the proposed north-west European Loran C system have been undertaken with Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Ireland, the Netherlands and Norway. Discussions are still proceeding, both on technical issues and on the draft of an international agreement. The Danish authorities have not yet reached a final decision on their participation. A Loran C transmitter already exists in the Faroes. The United Kingdom's continued participation is dependent on a satisfactory agreement being reached within an acceptable time scale.

I have received no representations from the fishing industry about the transitional period since my right hon. Friend's announcement in April. This envisaged a period of over three years' joint operation of the Decca and Loran C systems before closure of the Decca service in 1997. The fishing industry had earlier urged the longest possible transition, ideally up to five years.

I accept there would be additional costs to users where it proved necessary to replace Decca receivers prematurely. No conclusive forecast can be made of such costs, which depend on a variety of individual circumstances, including the age of receivers and the operating environment. Since six years' notice would be given of the ending of the Decca service, a significant proportion of receivers would be replaced in this period in the normal course of events, whether through wear and tear or more attractive technology. I have no proposals for financial assistance to users to meet the costs of change.

Clyde Port Authority

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation he has undertaken of the trading or other performance of the Clyde port authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: None.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current payments made to the (a) chairman, (b) deputy chairman, (c) board workers and (d) managing director of Clyde port authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: According to the authority's accounts for 1989, the annual remuneration received by the chairman was £10,000 and the other non-executive members received £3,500. The highest-paid executive on the board received £48,587 and the two other executive members received between £30,000 and £40,000.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce harmful emissions from road vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has been active for many years in developing standards to tackle unacceptable vehicle fumes and noise and to secure a move from leaded to unleaded fuel. We have played a key role in securing agreement in the European Community to higher emissions and noise standards, and we have also taken the lead in making improved vehicle construction standards a priority so as to further improve safety.

I welcome the interest and co-operation of manufacturers in seeking to develop more environmentally friendly vehicles. However, if they are to continue to reach the standards built into their initial design, vehicles need to be properly maintained and properly tuned. Garages already offer this service to their customers. I have concluded there is a good case for adding a simple emissions check to the MOT test for all petrol-driven cars and light vans, starting next year. My Department is today issuing a consultation paper outlining what is proposed and seeking views. In future, the existing MOT test would include a tuning check. In the same way as the other items in the test, motorists would need to ensure their vehicle met the test requirements if it were to continue on the road.

It is estimated that this proposal should improve fuel consumption and hence carbon dioxide emissions by about 4 per cent. averaged over the 16·5 million cars and light vans in the MOT scheme, with substantially larger benefits to carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions. The net extra cost to motorists should be modest, given compensating benefits through reduced fuel bills. Like everyone else, the motorist will also enjoy the non-financial benefits from lower levels of pollution.

We shall also be looking at ways of increasing checks and testing techniques for emissions from heavy goods vehicles and buses, and are working with European colleagues on effective standards for testing vehicles with catalytic converters.

Select Registration Scheme

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current timetable for the start of the select registration scheme.

Mr. Atkins: The select registration scheme will start on 1 October 1990 with the H letter. Buyers of new vehicles after that date will be able to purchase an entitlement to any registration mark from the numerical range 1 to 20, for almost all possible three-letter combinations. The sales scheme will be widely publicised and I have placed copies of the Department's information leaflet in the Library.

M1 (Lane Closure)

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on the name of the haulage contractor and the goods that were being conveyed on 25 June which caused the closure of two lanes of the M1;

(2) if he will call for a report on whether the emergency services were affected by the closure of two lanes of the M1 on 25 June during the movement of the wide load vehicle; what prior notification they were given; and by whom;

(3) who took the decision to permit two lanes of the M1 to be closed on 25 June for a wide load vehicle; and on what date and time the broadcasting authorities were informed;

(4) if he will make it his policy not to permit the closure of two lanes, in daytime, on the motorways for wide load transportation; and if he will make a statement;

(5) which section within his Department handles the arrangements for the movement of wide load vehicles on motorways; upon what criteria decisions are based; and who co-ordinates the details;

(6) what discussions took place between his Department and the police authorities prior to the closure of two lanes of the M1 on 25 June for an abnormally wide load vehicle.

Mr. Atkins: The abnormal load in question was a large transformer being transported from Goole docks to Ratcliffe power station in Nottinghamshire. The move was urgent, being necessitated by an electrical breakdown at the power station. In order to reduce the length of the road journey, the transformer was moved from its storage place at Kingsnorth power station on the Thames, by sea to Goole, from where it had to complete its journey by road. The total weight of the transformer and trailer was 377 tonnes, its width was 5·6m and it height 5·25m. The haulier was Abnormal Load Engineering and the move was carried out on behalf of PowerGen.

The police were notified at least three days before the move took place and they escorted the vehicles throughout the journey. The local radio stations and the Automobile Association were informed prior to the move. The emergency services were not affected, so far as I am aware. Had they been, the police were on hand to render assistance. I do not consider it necessary to call for a special report in this instance.

Movements of this nature have to be authorised in advance by officials in my Department by delegated authority from the Secretary of State. Before authorisation is granted, the necessity for the move is determined and a suitable route is worked out between my officials, all the police forces and all the highway and bridge authorities concerned. This route is issued to the haulier and all the relevant authorities and must be followed in detail. When the route has been agreed and issued, the special order authorising the move is made and circulated. In this case the route had already been worked out, as is often the case for routes from port to power station, so it was necessary only to obtain confirmation from all concerned that it was still suitable. The order was then signed and issued on 22 June by the special order section in the vehicle standards and engineering division of my Department.

The actual timing of a move such as this is determined by the police. They have the local knowledge to decide the best timing for minimising danger to other road users. In general, they consider that it is less dangerous to encounter a large, slow-moving vehicle in daylight, but they do appreciate that congestion is likely to be worse in the daytime and I understand that they are currently reviewing this policy. I do not consider it appropriate to interfere in this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Quality Award

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 386, on a national quality award, if he will outline his reasons for the reply given .

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To encourage firms to improve quality we provide support for consultancy under the enterprise initiative and advice under the "Managing into the '90s" programme. Other activities are undertaken by a variety of outside organisations, including the British Quality Association, which runs its own British quality awards scheme aimed at heightening awareness of the importance of quality. We do not believe that it is necessary for the Government to create an additional award scheme.

Foundries

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom foundries closed in 1989; and how many are still in production.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Business Statistics Office's figures for the number of foundries which were in production in 1989 will not be available until towards the end of this year. The comparable figure for 1988 was published in table 8 of the Central Statistical Office "Business Monitor" report on the census of production 1988—PA311.

Industry Act 1980

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last made use of his powers under section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980.

Mr. Ridley: As reported to Parliament, in the summer supplementary estimates on class V vote 1, on 14 July 1988 my predecessor used his powers under section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980 to purchase a security in Rover Group plc for £547 million, following the agreement reached with British Aerospace plc, and approved by the European Commission, for the sale of the Government shareholding in Rover Group plc.

Details of my predecessor's use of section 3 of the Industry Act 1980 are given in reports under section 3(4) of that Act which have been placed in the Library today. I regret that, due to an administrative error, the reports were not laid before the House earlier.

HEALTH

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of the awards given to voluntary organisations under section 64 procedures for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 into (a) awards for project funding and (b) core funding grants.

Mr. Dorrell: Our general scheme of grants under section 64 provides core grants to national voluntary organisations to assist with their administration costs; project grants to support discrete projects which are experimental or innovative; and a small number of capital grants. A breakdown of grants awarded in 1988-89 and 1989-90 has been placed in the Library.

Mentally Ill Adolescents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will visit the adolescent unit for the mentally ill in Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so.

Community Health Councils

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on procedures for funding community health councils.

Mr. Dorrell: Regional health authorities, RHAs, as establishing authorities for community health councils, CHCs, have a duty to pay CHCs' expenses which the RHAs consider the CHCs have reasonably incurred. How they go about doing so is for each RHA to decide.

NHS Doctors

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage change in the number of doctors within the national health service per 100,000 of population since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The requested information is given in the table.

Hospital and community health service medical staff and general medical practitioners in England

	1979	1988
Doctors	61,554·0	70,995·0
Population	46,396·1	47,536·3
Doctors per 100,000	132·7	149·3
Percentage change 1979-88	—	12·6

Figures include permanent paid and honorary staff but exclude hospital practitioners and clinical assistants.

Disabled People (Legislation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 without delay.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to implement the remaining sections of the Disabled Persons Act (Services, Consultation and Representation) 1986 within the next two years.

Mr. Dorrell: Decisions cannot be taken on the implementation of these sections of the Act until we have established their resource and service implications. We are still awaiting cost estimates from the local authority associations.

Stepping Hill Hospital, Stockport

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff, broken down into category, were employed at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport on (a) 1 June 1979 and (b) 1 June 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of Stockport health authority for the details.

Maternity Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many obstetrics beds are available now in each regional health authority in England; and how many were available in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest information on numbers of beds available daily in maternity wards for each year from 1983 is contained in "Summary of bed availability, England 1988/89" a copy of which is in the Library. Information is no longer collected centrally on bed availability by clinical specialty.

Public Works

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken by his Department to advise regional or district health authorities of the requirements of EC public works directive 89/440/EEC.

Mr. Dorrell: A copy of the works directive which was adopted by the EC in July 1989 was sent to regional health authorities on 22 February 1990. Preliminary guidance indicating the main changes to the earlier works directive was issued to regional and district health authorities on 30 March. Detailed guidance was issued to regional and district health authorities under cover of an executive letter (EL(90)MB/114) on 6 June; copies are available in the Library.

Project 2000

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the original sum of money earmarked for the implementation of Project 2000 in England; and what is the latest estimated figure for his purpose.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The implementation of Project 2000 in England is to be phased in over a number of years. A total of £38 million has been earmarked and made available for 1989-90 and 1990-91. This will mean that between 1990 and April 1991 the number of Project 2000 places available will have doubled to 20,000—40 per cent. of all nurse training places. Additional funding will be made available in future years against the background of other competing needs.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the European Community directive on nurse training, due to be implemented by October 1991, will be achieved in the light of delays in the target dates relating to Project 2000; and if he will make resources available to meet the 40 weeks of theory training required by the directive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Implementation of EC directive 89/595/EEC amending EC directive 77/453/EEC is a matter for the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, which is the competent authority of the nursing professions in the United Kingdom. We have never set a target date for full implementation of Project 2000 in England.

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to prevent a conflict of interest arising from district health authority staff preparing contracts with a self-governing trust which may subsequently employ them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for health authorities to ensure that conflicts of interest between the purchasing and providing roles do not occur and to determine any mechanisms to prevent this from happening.

Hearing Aids

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time for fitting hearing aids to national health service patients with hearing difficulties by the Hearing Aid Centre; and what was the waiting time five years ago.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is being done to reduce the waiting time for national health service patients needing a hearing aid fitted by the Hearing Aid Centre.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is funding a pilot scheme, to start later this year, which is aimed at reducing waiting times for hearing aid services. Details of the scheme are contained in a consultation paper issued by the Department in April. A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library.

ENERGY

Government Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the Government conventions on publicity and advertising have been revised, in view of his new responsibilities for co-ordinating the development of the presentation of Government policies.

Mr. Wakeham: The conventions on Government publicity and advertising have been revised to reflect the changes in ministerial responsibility. There is no change in the substance of the conventions. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mrs. Chalker: Identifiable expenditure on research in the diplomatic and aid wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is shown in the tables. The diplomatic wing's research expenditure accounts for up to 0·5 per cent. of its departmental running costs. Comparable figures for years prior to 1984-85 are not available. A small additional amount of research was commissioned outside the FCO. For the ODA, research expenditure now normally accounts for over 2·5 per cent. of total departmental expenditure. It is now ODA's policy to commission research on a customer-contractor basis with specified aims and objectives, as exemplified by the new renewable natural resources research strategy. For neither wing is information available on the proportion of research undertaken on a customer-contractor basis.

(I) Diplomatic wing: Expenditure on research 1984-85 to 1988-89

	£ million
1984-85	1·8
1985-86	2·0
1986-87	2·1
1987-88	2·3
1988-89	2·5

(ii) Aid wing: Expenditure on research 1979-89

Year	£'000	as percent of total ODA expenditure
1979	19,996	2·1
1980	22,001	2·3
1981	22,257	1·9
1982	23,042	2·1
1983	27,610	2·4
1984	26,057	2·0
1985	27,874	2·1
1986	31,143	2·5
1987	38,073	2·9
1988	49,482	3·0
[1]1989	45,995	2·6

[1] 1989 figures are provisional.

Aid Targets

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has anything to add to the oral reply given by the Minister for Overseas Development on 18 June, Official Report, column 680, on meeting gross national product, official development assistance targets.

Mrs. Chalker: I much regret that my reply to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) contained an inadvertent error. I meant to say "we aim to meet those targets".
As hon. and right hon. Members may be already aware, whereas we have met the 1 per cent. of GNP target for total flows in six out of the last 10 years, we have not met the 0·15 per cent. of GNP target for official development assistance to the least-developed countries.

ENVIRONMENT

Global Warming

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to investigate the use of the sea as a carbon sink to mitigate the effects upon global warming of carbon dioxide releases.

Mr. Trippier: Intensive research is being carried out both nationally and internationally to understand the role of the oceans in the carbon cycle. The United Kingdom is contributing to this through the Natural Environment Research Council's biogeochemical ocean flux programme which is currently investigating the uptake of carbon dioxide by plankton in the north Atlantic.

Climate Change

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what papers were presented by civil servants from his Department or consultants to his Department at the meeting of the United Nations intergovernmental panel on climate change on 18 to 20 May.

Mr. Trippier: We are not aware of any IPCC meeting on the dates specified.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to allow teachers to pay the community charge on behalf of those from overseas countries with whom they are involved in exchange schemes.

Mr. Chope: It does not need any special permission to allow this to happen.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether all those aged 18 years and over who are in full-time secondary education are wholly exempt from the community charge;

(2) whether those leaving full-time secondary education with conditional or unconditional offers of places at institutions of higher or further education are regarded (a) as students for the purposes of the community charge between their dates of leaving secondary education and their date of starting higher or further education, or (b) as adults eligible for community charge benefit during this period;

(3) whether the liability of those aged 18 years and over who were in full-time secondary education to pay the community charge commences from the date of their leaving their secondary schools.

Mr. Portillo: The majority of those who leave secondary education at the age of 18 will be covered by the exemption from the personal community charge for those in respect of whom child benefit is paid, or would be paid but for the fact the person is in care, and may continue to be exempt for some time after their courses have ended. Those aged under 20 years of age and who are undertaking a qualifying course of education, other than as a result of a post or employment held, are exempt until the end of the course or until they reach their 20th birthday, whichever is the earlier. Qualifying courses for the purposes of this exemption are defined by the Personal Community Charge (Qualifying Courses of Education) Regulations 1990—S.I. 1990/712—which exclude courses of higher education. Entitlement to the 20 per cent. payable by students starts when a person is enrolled on a full-time course of education, as defined for the purposes of the community charge, and has begun to attend it. In the intervening period a person will be registered for the full personal community charge but may be eligible for community charge benefit of up to 80 per cent. of the charge set.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district council in Kent, in respect of ward weighted density and the all ages social index, the values of indicators defined in annex A to the revenue support grant distribution report (England), and the amounts produced for each district council by applying the weights set out in paragraph 3.36(a) of that report, to those values.

Mr. Portillo: The values of the indicators and the amounts produced by applying the relevant weights are set out in the table.

	Ward weighted density		All ages social index
	Indicator value	Weight times indicator £ million	Indicator value	Weight times indicator £ million
Kent
Ashford	2·14351	1·057	−2·6277	−1·187

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to amend the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989, regulation 62, so that the three-month period of grace dates from 1 April 1990 rather than from any earlier date.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am reviewing the operation of the standard charge. Many people whose property was empty and unfurnished before 1 April 1990 will have benefited from either not having to pay any rates at all or paying lower unoccupied property rates.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider the standard spending assessment for Brighton and other holiday and conference resorts using the additional information which is becoming available on the extra burdens they face.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have made it clear that I am willing to consider any fresh evidence on SSAs with a view to making future changes if that should prove necessary. Any information provided by Brighton or any other local authority in this context will be given full consideration.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the authorities which benefited in their standard spending assessment and revenue grant allocation from a consideration of the impact of daily population increases.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him to this same question on 4 April, Official Report, column 666.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the specific and supplementary grants to be paid to local authorities in 1990-91 showing in each case (a) the name of the grant, (b) the purpose of the grant, (c) the sponsoring Department, (d) the amount of grant, (e) the method of calculation of individual authorities' entitlements, including the percentage of expenditure grant-aided and any conditions attached to the grant, (f) when the principles and operation of the grant were last reviewed, and the conclusions of those reviews, (g) whether the grant is included within aggregate external finance and (h) whether the grant is for capital and/or revenue expenditure.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to chapter 21 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990/91 to 1992/93"—Cm 1021—tables 21.4.3, 21.4.4. and 21.4.5 which, respectively, list revenue grants within and without aggregate external finance, and capital grants. The various departmental chapters provide details on the principles and operation of individual grants. If he has particular concerns I am sure the Departments concerned will be pleased to help.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional assistance was given in calculating standard spending assessment and grant to Westminster city council on account of its daily population figure; and if he will set out the criteria used on arriving at that sum.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to him on 4 April of this year when he asked a very similar question.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was the total level of local government spending in each of the last five years including the current year.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1990]: The information is as follows. New definitions of local government spending were introduced in 1990-91 and comparable information for years prior to 1989-90 is not available. For years 1986-87 to 1989-90 (budgets) expenditure is defined as total expenditure gross of specific and supplementary grants and for 1989-90 (provisional outturn) and 1990-91 expenditure is defined as revenue expenditure, the measure equivalent to total standard spending.

Local government expenditure

	£ million
1986-87	26,629
1987-88	28,943
1988-89	31,334
1989-90[1,3]	34,317
1989-90[2,4]	32,100
1990-91[3]	36,600

[1] Including an adjustment for polytechnics (not in the local authority sector in 1989-90) to make the series up to and including 1989-90 comparable.
[2] After adjusting for system changes to make the 1989-90 provisional outturn estimates comparable to 1990-91 budgets.
[3] Budget.
[4] Provisional outturn.

Local Services (Tendering)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the response by local authorities to circular 7/90 regarding tender documents for public supply and works contracts.

Mr. Portillo: Circular 7/90 reminds local authorities in greater detail of their obligations under the treaty of Rome and the EC works and supplies contract directives, set out in DOE circulars 59/73 and 6/89, and imposes no new or added responsibilities or burdens.

The Department has had a small number of telephone inquiries from local authorities on the application of tender specifications to particular contracts.

Inland Revenue Office, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to date of the refurbishment and new construction work currently being carried out at the Inland Revenue office in Cumbernauld.

Mr. Chope: The refurbishment work, which started in December 1988, has so far cost £2·5 million. There is no new construction.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the report, "Strategic Roll-Forward Submission 1991-92", prepared by PE International plc, concerning the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier: This report is a management document commissioned to assist the NCC in preparing its proposed forward plans. It is not suitable for publication. In line with past practice, the Nature Conservancy Council's corporate plan for 1990-91 will be published later this summer.

Local Authorities (Company Interests)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation of part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989: local authority interests in companies.

Mr. Portillo: In view of various points which have arisen on the drafts of the orders which we circulated for comment, we have concluded that it would be right to postpone the coming into force of those orders from 1 July 1990. I shall set a new date as soon as possible.

Bulk Materials (Transport)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his current policy in respect of imposing conditions in planning permissions which restrict the dispatch of bulk materials to rail transport, in circumstances where the volume to be dispatched from the site may be large, the number of destinations is few and the environmental damage to communities affected by the road transport of the material is likely to be insignificant.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Government's policy on the imposition of conditions on the grant of planning permission is that they should be imposed only where they are necessary; relevant to planning; relevant to the development to be permitted; enforceable; precise; and reasonable in all other respects. A key test is whether planning permission would have to be refused if the condition were not to be imposed. A condition may be invalid if it is unduly restrictive. Whether it may be appropriate to impose a condition to restrict the mode of transport of bulk materials to and from a site will depend upon the particular circumstances of an individual case, and is a matter for the local planning authority in the first instance.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Costs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give details of the costs out of public funds ordered by the courts in each of the years from 1986 to 1990.

The Attorney-General: Courts may order costs out of public funds in two circumstances. In civil proceedings where one of the parties is legally aided, the court can award costs against the legal aid fund in favour of a successful non-legally aided party. In criminal proceedings the court can order the costs of a defendant or a private prosecutor to be paid from central funds. The information requested is collected on a financial year basis and for the years in question is as follows:

£ million

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Costs of successful non-legally aided parties	0·280	0·227	0·446	0·524
Costs from Central Funds:
Orders made in Magistrates Courts	11·050	3·082	3·825	[1]—
Orders made in Crown Court and higher courts	30·522	4·380	4·047	4·751
Total	41·852	7·689	8·318	5·275

[1] This information is not yet available.

Solicitors (Professional Negligence)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to in which European countries solicitors and barristers or their equivalent are liable to be sued for professional negligence.

The Attorney-General: The Government do not hold information about the liability for professional negligence of lawyers practising in other European countries.

Land Registry

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Attorney-General when Her Majesty's Land Registry is to be established as an executive agency.

The Attorney-General: Further to my answer to my hon. Friend on 5 April 1990 at column 725, I am pleased to confirm that the Lord Chancellor will establish the Land Registry as an executive agency on Monday 2 July 1990. I have arranged for the Land Registry's framework document to be placed in the Library. Performance indicators for the Land Registry are set out in the framework document.

The Land Registry has made significant progress in recent times in improving its productivity and its quality of service, both in terms of speed and accuracy. The performance targets set for the registry will require it to continue this improvement. The key productivity target is to reduce unit costs in real terms by 6 per cent. over the three financial years from 1 April 1991. Over the same period, the average length of time to finalise post-completion applications, which in December 1988 stood at 15·5 weeks is to be reduced to five weeks. The handling of pre-completion applications, which are more time-sensitive as they are part of the conveyancing process, will also be expedited with the proportion of applications dealt with within four days being increased from 90 per cent. at present to 92 per cent. in 1994. Targets have also been set increasing the already high percentage of error-free handling of applications.

An open competition is currently being held for the selection of a person to be appointed as chief land registrar and chief executive of the agency to succeed the current chief land registrar, John Pryer CB, following his forthcoming retirement.

SCOTLAND

Foodstuffs (Toxic Chemicals)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what tests are applied to ascertain residue levels of toxic chemicals in imported foodstuffs from (a) eastern Europe, (b) the European Common Market and (c) the rest of the world; how many tests were carried out in each of the past five years and on what types of foods; and what changes he intends to make in this system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Imported foodstuffs are examined for a wide range of potentially toxic substances such as heavy metals, natural toxins and environmental contaminants. Information on the surveillance of food imports is included in reports of the Government's steering group on food surveillance, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. District and islands councils in Scotland undertake testing of imported food as enforcement authorities but related statistics are not held centrally.

Rural Solicitors

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has held with the Law Society of Scotland or representatives of faculties of solicitors on the future of rural practices since 12 June.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been a number of informal discussions with the Law Society of Scotland about the Government's conveyancing proposals.

Student Grants

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to Strathclyde regional council concerning the payment of grants to students undertaking courses provided by other education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: None. My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for providing financial support for students attending full-time degree and equivalent level courses. Financial support for students attending other full-time and all part-time courses is the responsibility of the education authorities under their bursaries arrangements. These bursaries are awarded to students at the discretion of the education authorities and I have no power to intervene.

Elderly People

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the amount an elderly couple needs to spend every week on food to maintain a healthy diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. Given variations in individuals' dietary requirements and the cost of food it is not feasible to make such an assessment.

Scottish Consumer Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the relationship of his Department to the Scottish Consumer Council; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Direct responsibility between the Government and the Scottish Consumer Council rests with the Department of Trade and Industry.

My colleagues and I do, however, meet the council from time to time to discuss matters of common interest, and welcome its comments on relevant aspects of Government policy.

Nursery Education

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Government intend to make the provision of nursery education in Scotland compulsory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government have no plans to impose a duty on education authorities to provide nursery education. Authorities are best placed to decide the extent of pre-school provision appropriate for their area having regard to local circumstances and competing priorities.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will inform local authorities about the introduction of the method of compensating applicants who did not qualify for poll tax rebate in the year 1989-90 because they had capital between £8,000 and £16,000; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Detailed draft proposals were sent to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities for comment on 14 June. I hope to receive the convention's response shortly so that regulations can be laid before the House.

Council Rents

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average council rent level as a percentage of (a) average male earnings, (b) average female earnings and (c) the national insurance retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple in each of the years since 1984 for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Average council rent[1] expressed as a percentage of

	Average male earnings[2]	Average female earnings[2]	Retirement pension for single person[3]	Retirement pension for married couple[3]
1984-85	5·9	9·4	30·7	19·2
1985-86	6·1	9·7	32·3	20·3
1986-87	6·5	10·0	33·6	21·0
1987-88	6·8	10·4	36·9	23·1
1988-89	6·9	10·6	39·4	24·6
1989-90	7·5	11·1	43·1	26·9
1990-91	n/a	n/a	44·6	27·8

[1] Average standard unrebated local authority rent in Scotland.
[2] Average earnings of full-time employees in Scotland on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence, as recorded in April of each year.
[3] Basic national insurance pension payable in April of each year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to consult with the first individual to be electronically tagged on the efficacy of the scheme: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: As part of the evaluation of the trials of electronic monitoring a sample of those monitored have already been interviewed about their experiences and views. The results of the evaluation will be published, but the defendants interviewed will not be identified.

Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the trend in the number of suicides among prisoners on remand over the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives the figures for the number of suicides by remand prisoners during the last 10 years:

	Number
1980	12
1981	7
1982	8
1983	9
1984	12
1985	14
1986	12
1987	27
1988	19
[1]1989	15
[1 2]1990	1

[1] Inquests have yet to be held on one other inmate on remand who died in 1989 and on nine inmates on remand who have died this year and whose deaths are thought to have been suicides.
[2] To 25 June 1990.

Suicides (Police Custody)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the trend in the number of suicides in police custody over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of persons who committed suicide while in police custody has been published, since 1980, in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. The information is as follows:

	Number
1980	6
1981	4
1982	8
1983	5
1984	3
1985	2
1986	3
1987	2
1988	5
1989	5

Information prior to 1980 is not available.

Security, Palace of Westminster

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans exist to replace regular Metropolitan police officers employed in the House of Parliament by security officers;

(2) what are the educational qualifications demanded of Metropolitan police security officers employed in the Houses of Parliament;

(3) what is the average length of service of the Metropolitan police security officers employed in the Houses of Parliament;

(4) what is the level of pay of the Metropolitan police security officers employed in the Houses of Parliament, including starting salary and average earnings;

(5) what is the length of the training period of the Metropolitan police security officers employed in the Houses of Parliament;

(6) how many Metropolitan police security officers have been employed in the Houses of Parliament in each year since their introduction; and how many are presently employed;

(7) what plans exist to increase the numbers of Metropolitan police security officers employed in the Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: While my right hon. and learned Friend formally approves changes in the number of posts at the Palace of Westminster, security arrangements are primarily matters for the Palace authorities, who take their decisions on the basis of advice provided by the Metropolitan police.

I understand that an inspection of the security force at the Palace of Westminster was carried out by the Metropolitan police at the beginning of the year to assess the changes needed as a result of the opening of the Norman Shaw complex. They recommended changes, including civilianisation of seven police posts, which, if accepted, would increase the number of police officers by three and the number of security officers by 22. The proposals are being considered by the Joint Committee on Security.

The Metropolitan police took over responsibility for security officers at the Palace of Westminster in October 1977. The total number of security officers employed at the end of each calendar year since that date is as follows:

	Number
1977	93
1978	95
1979	105
1980	110
1981	113
1982	112
1983	104
1984	102
1985	114
1986	131
1987	129
1988	134
1989	[1]183

[1] Includes Norman Shaw building.

A total of 180 security officers are currently employed at the Palace of Westminster.

Information relating to the average length of service of Metropolitan police security officers could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Although there are no rigid requirements for educational qualifications, security officers employed at the Palace undergo a recruitment process which looks for good communication skills, reliability and common sense.

On joining, all security officers undergo a six-week intensive training course which covers first aid, basic law, powers of arrest, fire appliance training, House regulations and passes. New officers then work alongside experienced officers for a further six weeks. Additional courses covering explosives, car searches and respirator training are also arranged.

The starting salary of a security officer is £9,594 per annum. This is inclusive of shift allowance but exclusive of overtime and premium payments for work on Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays. After six months a security officer becomes eligible for promotion and the starting salary for the higher grade is £11,381 per annum. Information about average earnings could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Criminal Offences, Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) charged and (b) convicted of (i) public order offences and (ii) offences against the person in the Basildon area for each of the last seven years.

Mr. John Patten: Information for the Basildon area is not available, but the table gives information for Billericay petty sessional division and Chelmsford Crown court for 1986, 1987 and 1988. Comparable data for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The 1989 data will not be available until autumn 1990.

[3] Including those committed to the Crown Court for trial.

Chief Police Officers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving police officers of Association of Chief Police Officers rank joined the service under the graduate entry scheme, or otherwise benefited from the special course at Bramshill; how many possess university degrees; how many achieved them through the Bramshill scholarship scheme; and how many hold other qualifications relevant to their responsibilities as chief officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The graduate entry scheme was introduced in 1968 to attract recruits with higher educational qualifications to the police service and give them the opportunity of accelerated promotion through the Bramshill special course. Most serving members of the Association of Chief Police Officers had joined the police service before this date, but two officers now of assistant chief constable rank were recruited to the service under this scheme. A further 80 officers of ACPO rank were selected for and attended the special course through the service's internal competition.

The information held centrally is not comprehensive, and I shall write to my hon. Friend once I have been able to review and update all senior officers' personal records. In the meantime, the information currently available shows that 103 of the 241 members of the Association of Chief Police Officers hold degrees. (Our records do not distinguish between degrees awarded by universities, polytechnics and other institutions). Of these 103 officers, 50 gained their degrees through the Bramshill scholarship scheme. Nineteen current members of ACPO are companions, members or fellows of the British Institute of Management. Nineteen hold other management qualifications (such as the diploma in management studies and certificate in personnel management) or have completed senior management courses such as the top management programme at the civil service college or the Royal College of Defence Studies course. There is some overlap between these groups.

Stone Roses Concert

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were injured at the Stone Roses concert at Spike island, Widnes, on 3 June; how many of the injured were treated in hospital; and how many were detained in hospital.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that, in addition to those people (number unknown) who received minimal first aid treatment at the concert itself, two people, who sustained injuries when attempting to get into the event without tickets by climbing over a high fence, were taken to hospital, treated and discharged the same day.

Immigration

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of non-United Kingdom spouses of United Kingdom citizens resident in Hong Kong will have their United Kingdom residential qualifications for naturalisation waived or modified under schedule 1, paragraph 4(d) of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Paragraph 4(d) of schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981 enables the Secretary of State, if he thinks fit in the special circumstances of a particular case, to waive the three-year United Kingdom residence requirement for naturalisation in respect of the spouse of a British citizen serving abroad in Crown or designated service for which he was recruited in the United Kingdom.

In practice we would not normally expect to waive the United Kingdom residence requirement unless the marriage had subsisted for three years; the spouse was unable to meet the United Kingdom residence requirements for the foreseeable future; and the employing organisation was able to show that naturalising the spouse would be in the interests of the organisation and its service to United Kingdom interests.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is to be taken on the applications of Mrs. Aswat Jan and Atlas Khan to enter the United Kingdom, referred to him on 26 November last by our post in Islamabad Refs: K157032 and K147580; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The entry clearance officer in Islamabad has now been authorised to issue entry clearance to Mrs. Aswat Jan. Atlas Khan's application is being considered under the terms of the concession announced by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary on 14 June 1989 at columns 461-62. A decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had any communication with representatives of the Metropolitan police force in connection with the number of homeless young persons being arrested and convicted under the Vagrancy Act 1824.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Decisions about the deployment of resources to tackle crime are an operational matter for the Commissioner. However, we are conducting a study together with the Metropolitan police to establish recent trends in arrests and how the police might be helped to identify accommodation and other services to which homeless people can be referred.

Channel 5

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of the number of video recorders likely to require retuning to achieve Channel 5 output; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We estimate that something over 750,000 video cassette recorders will need to be retuned or modified in order to prevent interference between the VCR output and the Channel 5 broadcast signal. The Broadcasting Bill provides that the cost of this work should be met by the Channel 5 licensee.

Telecommunications Act 1984

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of prosecutions under any section of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. John Patten: The information available centrally, which may be incomplete, indicates that there were 630 prosecutions in 1988 under the Telecommunications Act 1984.

The 1989 data will not be available until the autumn.

Forensic Science

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to increase the level of funding of the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory and for the Home Office laboratory at Aldermaston in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the current level of staffing at the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory; and what was the level (a) five and (b) 10 years ago;

(3) what has been the number of individual cases handled annually by the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory for each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commissioner has told me that the number of cases handled by the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1985	27,720
1986	32,406
1987	27,985
1988	19,040
1989	18,053

On 27 June 1990 the strength of the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory was 288. On 31 December 1980 and 31 December 1985 the respective strengths were 271 and 251.

No decisions have yet been taken on the levels of funding for 1991-92 for either the Metropolitan police or the forensic science service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Processors

8. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance his Department has given to fish processors to meet new EEC hygiene regulations.

Mr. Curry: Financial assistance is, and will continue to be, available under relevant European Community schemes to help fish processors and others improve their facilities.

Common Agricultural Policy

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his counterparts in the Council of Ministers to discuss reforming the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I last met my Community colleagues in the Agriculture Council earlier this week, when a number of specific reforms to the CAP were discussed.

Information Guides

13. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new guides giving farmers information on the help and advice available from his Department he has published in the last six months.

Mr. Curry: We have recently published a revised and updated version of "At the Farmer's Service". Copies of the booklet have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Dairy Sector

15. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Gummer: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board and with other industry leaders to discuss the dairy sector.

Food (Health Dangers)

16. Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those foods which his Department has been advised to be a danger to health.

Mr. Maclean: I can think of no food that someone or other has not suggested is harmful. Nevertheless, my Department has not actually been advised that any type of foods is intrinsically a danger to health providing it has been properly handled and prepared. From time to time it is necessary for central Government or local government to issue warnings in relation to particular brands or batches of foodstuffs, and to take associated action. The chief medical officer has also given advice about the precautions to be taken when preparing and eating certain foods, and about the consumption of certain foods by particular vulnerable groups.

Food (Temperature Controls)

17. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the temperature control standards of the British food industry.

Mr. Maclean: I understand my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health is intending shortly to lay before Parliament the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulation, which will introduce temperature control standards for certain foods throughout the food chain including manufacture, distribution and retail sale.

Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce

18. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who, under the terms of the framework agreement for the agricultural intervention board agency, will decide on the future location of the board's premises.

Mr. Curry: The future location of the agency will be decided by Agriculture Ministers after considering recommendations submitted to them by the board of the agency.

Food Safety

19. Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what weight he gives to scientific research in determining the development of his Department's approach towards food safety.

Mr. Maclean: All the Government's measures towards greater food safety are based on the best available expert scientific advice, as we made clear in the White Paper "Food Safety—Protecting the Consumer". In addition to professional advice available within my Ministry and other Government Departments, objective, independent advice is provided by a number of committees including the Food Advisory Committee, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, the Veterinary Products Committee, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes, the Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the steering group on food surveillance—which works through 10 working parties each of which carries out detailed work in specialist fields. We announced on 12 June that we shall be adding to these committees by creating a new advisory committee and a steering group on the microbiological safety of food, a development recommended by the Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food chaired by Sir Mark Richmond.

The full scope of the extensive research and development programme on food safety can be gauged from the "Food Sense" booklet on the Government's food surveillance programme, issued at the beginning of this year. There are now 28 food surveillance papers available and the most recent, on "Programmes to Monitor Radioactivity in Food", contains some 48 pages setting out the major programme in this one area alone. A further paper in this series is to be issued shortly. Besides the Government laboratories involved, industry, research associations, academic institutions, consultants and professional organisations all contribute to the work on food surveillance. In addition to its role in providing advice to the Government and the basis it provides for effective legislative control and the harmonisation of trade in food and food raw materials, the programme is also becoming increasingly recognised at an international level as an important source of information and advice.

National Farmers Union

20. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what was discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss a wide range of topics.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

21. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on BSE and British beef.

Mr. Gummer: I can do no better than quote the Department of Health's chief medical officer, who said that beef can be eaten safely by everyone. This view has been endorsed by Europe's top scientists.

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss BSE.

40. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss BSE.

51. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss BSE.

Mr. Gummer: I met the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission on 8 June to discuss BSE.

30. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the effect on exports from and imports into Britain of the BSE scare.

Mr. Gummer: As yet it is too early to draw any firm conclusions on the effect of the BSE scare on exports from and imports into the United Kingdom.

31. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his discussions with European Community Agriculture Ministers about BSE.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made to the House on 7 June.

37. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the incidence of BSE in other countries.

Mr. Gummer: BSE has been reported in the United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland and Oman, where two animals previously exported from Britain were later confirmed as having the disease.

41. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to take further action to control the spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have already introduced comprehensive measures to deal with BSE. However, should scientific advice indicate that further action is called for, I will not hesitate to act.

44. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on progress concerning the incidence of BSE, its notification and elimination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not expected that there will be significant decline until 1993, after which numbers should fall until its subsequent disappearance.

54. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a further statement on Government measures relating to bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have introduced comprehensive measures, based on the very best scientific advice, to tackle all aspects of BSE.

59. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received regarding BSE.

Mr. Gummer: I have received representations about BSE from consumer, producer and other interests.

68. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the damage to the industry resulting from the bovine spongiform encephalopathy scare.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to isolate the effects of BSE. Clean cattle marketings in England and Wales in the week ending 16 June were higher than those in the week before the import bans were imposed by France and other member states, and prices were also slightly up. Increased support buying of beef under the European Community intervention arrangements coupled with the lifting of the import bans imposed by certain member states should help to sustain the market.

72. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further representations he has received from the presidents of the farmers unions of Wales on BSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have received representations about BSE from various quarters, including the National Farmers Union of Wales.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implication of the Wilding committee's recommendation that basic research should be confined to specialist research institutions for the conducting of research into BSE at the central veterinary laboratory at Weybridge.

Mr. Maclean: I assume that the hon. Member's question relates to the report of the Wildy committee.

The Department funds strategic and applied R and D into animal diseases and I am satisfied that the central veterinary laboratory at Weybridge has the necessary specialist expertise to carry out such research into BSE. The Ministry will continue to commission research at the CVL in an effort to understand, control and eradicate this disease. Basic research is of course currently being funded by the Department of Education and Science at the AFRC's Institute of Animal Health.

Food Advisory Committee

22. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Food Advisory Committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I last met the committee's chairman on 7 December 1989 when matters of general interest were discussed.

The committee meets regularly every six weeks and is currently undertaking a major review of food labelling. As a result of recent committee advice I have introduced new regulations prohibiting the use of potassium bromate as a flour improver from 1 April this year; published and sought comments on the committee's report on old compositional orders and will consider the responses before reaching decisions; and I am currently preparing proposals for legislation on colours following my acceptance of the committee's recommendations for stricter controls.

The committee's agendas are published in advance of each meeting.

Radioactive Fallout

23. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about restrictions on sheep sales in the United Kingdom due to radioactive fallout.

Mr. Curry: Movement and slaughter restrictions continue to apply to sheep from those upland areas of Cumbria, north Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland most affected by radioactive fallout following the 1986 Chernobyl accident. A mark and release scheme is in operation under which every animal from the restricted area is live-monitored prior to marketing, thereby guaranteeing full protection to consumers in all circumstances. It is not possible to say how much longer restrictions will need to stay in force. They will be lifted as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the safety of the food chain. All monitoring results are regularly published and copies are placed in the Library of the House.

Aujeszky's Disease

24. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the discussions held at the European Community Agriculture Council meeting on 25 and 26 June regarding Aujeszky's disease.

Mr. Curry: At the meeting of the Agriculture Council on 25 and 26 June, Aujeszky's disease was discussed in the context of a proposal for Community rules governing trade in porcine semen.

I made it clear that we would not accept provisions which would jeopardise our hard-won freedom from the disease and I am therefore pleased to report that the directive which was eventually adopted contains the necessary safeguards.

Consumer Panel

26. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his consumer panel last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley).

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the consumer panel last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: The last meeting of the consumer panel took place on 2 May 1990. It discussed a wide range of issues including water quality, food labelling, BSE, hygiene training for food handlers and food irradiation. The minutes of this meeting are publicly available and have been placed in the Library of the House.

Milk Production

27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was milk production in 1989 and in each of the two previous years.

Mr. Maclean: United Kingdom milk production was as follows:

Year	Quantity (million litres)
1989	14,477
1988	14,684
1987	15,039

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received recently about the future of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mr. Curry: Many of the representations I receive about ADAS express the view that the very valuable services which it provides to the industry should continue.

Food Inspection

29. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to change the present arrangements concerning food inspection which lie within his responsibilities.

Mr. Maclean: My hon. Friend the Minister of State stated in another place on 5 December 1989 that the powers in clause 5(4) of the Food Safety Bill to vary the division of responsibility for food law enforcement would be used to continue broadly the existing split of responsibilities in England and Wales.

Agriculture (Fixed Capital)

32. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total annual investment in fixed capital in agriculture during each of the last five years.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 19 April at columns 973-74.

Factory Farming

33. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to further regulate factory farming.

Mr. Maclean: I have just laid before this House for approval regulations that will apply to all farm animals. These regulations will implement recommendations by the Farm Animal Welfare Council and include measures to improve compliance with the welfare codes, to make certain provisions in the codes mandatory, and to require ventilation systems in intensive units to have alarms and back-up systems in the event of a failure.

I am continuing to press in the European Community for harmonisation of welfare standards at the highest possible level for all farm livestock species.

Sea Defences

35. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the financial arrangements for sea defences.

Mr. Curry: Under the Land Drainage Act 1976 drainage bodies (the National Rivers Authority, local authorities and internal drainage boards) have powers to carry out flood and sea defence works. Grants are available from my Department towards the cost of schemes which are technically sound, economically worth while and environmentally sympathetic. Basic rates range from 15 per cent. to 55 per cent., while sea and tidal defence schemes attract a supplement of 20 per cent.

Following the 1988 and 1989 public expenditure surveys, increased Government funding totalling £29·3 million was announced over the period 1989-90 to 1992-93. The greater part of this additional provision is being targeted towards urgent sea defence works on the east coast and elsewhere, and to works which will protect people and property.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent measures have been taken by his Department to help improve Britain's coastal defences.

Mr. Curry: My Department maintains a close liaison with the National Rivers Authority and local councils responsible for the promotion of coastal defence work to ensure that the state of the nation's defences is continually monitored. To assist with the promotion of such defence works, increased Government funding totalling £29·3 million was announced following the 1988 and 1989 public expenditure surveys over the period 1989-90 to 1992-93. This increased funding is being mainly targeted towards the improvement of defences on the coastline and for the protection of people and property.

Sheep Dips

36. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the continued use of organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: All organophosphorous sheep dip products are subject to the licensing requirements of the Medicines Act 1968. A review of these products is currently under way as part of a wider review to ensure that all licensed veterinary medicines meet modern standards of safety, quality and efficacy. The review is expected to be completed early in 1992. My Department is also currently considering the guidance available on the disposal of sheep dips to see how this can be improved.

Farm Pollution

38. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the uptake in the last 12 months of schemes designed to deal with on-farm pollution.

Mr. Curry: In the 1989-90 financial year, 8,082 United Kingdom farmers notified the agriculture Departments of their intention to claim grant to help meet the cost of equipment to handle, treat and store farm waste under the farm and conservation grant scheme, and £20·41 million was paid for such grants under the scheme and its predecessor the agriculture improvement scheme.

Food Exports

39. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the prospects for British food exports.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are firmly committed to improving the prospects for British food exports. Earlier this year my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced further funding of Food From Britain. More recently he announced the appointment of Mr. Paul Judge, a successful and highly respected food industry entrepreneur, as chairman of that organisation. I now look to the industry to make full use of the resources and expertise of Food From Britain.

Beef

42. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prospects for the United Kingdom beef industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The European Community market support arrangements contain provision for special intervention measures which apply at times of particular market weakness. Under these arrangements, over 5,500 tonnes of beef have been accepted for purchase in the United Kingdom. This increased support buying coupled with the lifting of the import bans imposed by certain member states should help to sustain the beef market.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether normal shipments of beef have now been resumed to European countries.

Mr. Gummer: Following the 6 June Council of Agriculture Ministers shipments of beef have been resumed to all European Community countries. Austria has imposed import restrictions which we and the Commission are attempting to have lifted as soon as possible.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his current scientific advice continues to show that beef is safe to eat.

Mr. Gummer: Yes.

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to introduce any further measures to restore confidence in beef production and consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Our action on BSE will continue to be based on the best scientific evidence available. As the chief medical officer has said, British beef can be eaten safely by everyone. The special intervention arrangements now operating in the United Kingdom together with the lifting of the import bans imposed by certain countries should help to sustain the market.

Agricultural Land

43. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to protect agricultural land.

Mr. Curry: I assume the hon. Member is referring to development involving agricultural land. Responsibility for day-to-day planning control, including the consideration and determination of applications for planning permission, rests with the appropriate planning authority in the first instance. The Government issue guidance to local authorities on development involving agricultural land, which is contained in Department of the Environment (Welsh Office) circular 16/87 (25/87) issued on 8 May 1987. Copies of the circular are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to release more agricultural land for purposes other than agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: The use of land for most purposes other than agriculture is controlled by the town and country planning system. Responsibility for day-to-day planning matters, including proposals for development involving agricultural land, rests with local planning authorities in the first instance. Other non-agricultural uses of land are a matter for individual landowners' decision.

Beef Prices

45. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss beef prices.

69. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss beef prices.

Mr. Gummer: I am in regular contact with the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission about matters relating to the livestock and livestock products industries, including beef prices. I last met the chairman on 8 June following the special Agriculture Council on 6-7 June.

Consumer Protection

46. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association to discuss the protection of consumers.

53. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association to discuss food safety.

Mr. Maclean: On 3 April 1990 representatives of the Consumers Association attended the first of the periodic meetings set up by my right hon. Friend with representatives of consumer organisations; a further meeting is planned for 12 July.

Meat and Livestock Commission

47. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I last met the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission on 8 June, following the special Agriculture Council on 6 and 7 June, to discuss the implementation of the new certification arrangements for exports of beef.

14. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss exports of meat.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission on 8 June to discuss the new certification arrangements for exports of beef.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

48. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he is awaiting from the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells) on 19 April 1990 at column 1543.

61. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to abolish the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Fishing Industry

49. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the fishing industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 17 May landings of all species by United Kingdom vessels in the United Kingdom for 1989 were worth some £389 million compared with £396 million in 1988. While fishing opportunities and earnings for North sea cod and haddock in 1990 have been reduced, the estimated value of landings so far this year based on the latest available information is at least similar to that at the same time last year.

54. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations to discuss catches.

Mr. Curry: I last met my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) together with representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations, on 14 June, when a number of issues including catches were discussed.

Research

56. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest developments in horticultural research.

64. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution his Department is currently making towards agricultural research.

Mr. Curry: My Department continues to make a substantial contribution towards research of relevance to agriculture, horticulture and protection of the rural environment. This year (1990-91) alone we plan to spend some £80 million, out of a total R and D budget of some £121 million. Details of my Department's activities, including a full list of MAFF-funded research projects in agriculture and food, were made available at the MAFF conference, "Effective R and D: a partnership for the 1990s", on 4 June. I am placing copies of these publications in the Library of the House.

In addition, my Department maintains close links with the other agricultural Departments, research councils and associations and other bodies on the development of research programmes in this country.

57. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on recent developments in the structure of horticultural research.

Mr. Curry: I am delighted at the recent launch of the British Society for Horticultural Research. We now have a single, unified organisation capable of taking horticultural R and D well into the next century.

Advisory Services

58. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which advisory and other services provided to farmers and fishermen are charged for in England.

Mr. Curry: My Department provides the following chargeable services to farmers and fishermen:

Advisory work undertaken by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service (with the exception of advice on animal welfare, conservation and rural diversification which continues to be free of charge).
Milk and dairies inspections.
Licensing premises for the keeping of mink for fur-bearing purposes.
Testing, registration and approval of laboratories under the Poultry Flocks, Hatcheries and Protein Processing (Fees) Order 1990.
Testing cattle for foot and mouth disease prior to export to the United States of America.
Export inspection of poultry and hatching eggs.
Artificial insemination licences and approvals.
Waste food licensing.
Pig health scheme.
Poultry health scheme.
Sheep and goat health scheme.
Cattle health scheme.
Deer health scheme.
Approval of markets, assembly plants, pre-export private quarantine and isolation premises.
Export of birds, poultry and hatching eggs—inspection by whole-time veterinary officers.
Seed potatoes classification scheme. Plant health propagation scheme.
Plant health export certification and export nursery approval scheme.
Plant health import licences. Certain statistical data on the fishing industry. Shellfish export certificates.
Analytical, consultancy, training and R and D services provided by the fish technology laboratory.

Food (Consumer Spending)

60. Mr. Squire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to commission research into the factors which influence consumer spending on food.

Mr. Maclean: My Department monitors consumer (household) expenditure on food through the national food survey. The results are published in the reports of the National Food Survey Committee and analyses are made into the variation in expenditure by type and size and income of household, by age of housewife, housing tenure and by region. The coverage and scale of the survey is being expanded.

Set-aside Scheme

65. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague).

Consumers and Farmers (Meetings)

66. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times since 1 January he has met (a) farmers' representatives and (b) consumers' representatives.

Mr. Gummer: Since 1 January 1990, I have met representatives of farming unions seven times and representatives of consumers three times. The three meetings with consumers' representatives included one, at my request, at which 15 consumer organisations were represented. My hon. Friends the Parliamentary Secretaries have met with representatives of consumer and farming organisations on a further 15 occasions.

Policy Decisions

70. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that policy decisions are based on sound scientific knowledge and advice.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the new arrangements for research funded by his Department.

Mr. Gummer: New procedures for the commissioning and assessment of research and development by the Ministry were formally introduced with effect from 1 April 1990. These will ensure that policy requirements are brought to bear more directly on the research that MAFF funds and, equally, that the research funded by MAFF has a direct impact on policy formation, as well as securing the best value for money in terms of both scientific quality and relevance to the Ministry's aims.

Cereals

71. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the largest green pound discrepancy for cereals in the periods 1974 to 1979 and 1980 to 1989; and what was the largest devaluation achieved.

Mr. Curry: The largest green pound discrepancies for the cereals sector in the periods referred to by my hon. Friend, as measured by the percentage monetary compensatory amount (MCA), were 45·0 per cent. in November 1976 and 32·8 per cent. in February 1987.

The largest devaluation of the green pound for cereals was 9·75 per cent. in August 1979.

Agricultural Subsidies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost per head of the subsidies given to British farmers as against the prices which would prevail in a free market in world agricultural produce.

Mr. Maclean: The estimate requested would be possible only by making a large number of assumptions about the extent of support policy adjustment worldwide, the impact of this on production, consumption and exchange rates and the extent to which these factors would influence world prices. No such estimates are available for the United Kingdom. The Government fully support the agreed long-term objectives of the GATT Uruguay round negotiation, namely substantial, progressive reductions in agricultural support and protection: this would reduce the cost of agricultural support borne by consumers and taxpayers.

Live Exports

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that after 1992 calves exported live will not be housed subsequently in veal crates.

Mr. Maclean: Discussions are continuing in the European Community on Commission proposals for welfare standards for calves. I am pressing for the Community to adopt the present United Kingdom requirement for veal calf pen widths and for the EC legislation to be implemened at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures he is proposing to ensure that current minimum standards in the care of live animals for export will be maintained after 1992.

Mr. Maclean: We will be pressing for measures which fully safeguard animal welfare in negotiations on the Commission proposals for a Council regulation on the protection of animals during transport.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures he is proposing to ensure that live animals, exported after 1992, are killed in slaughterhouses which match current United Kingdom standards.

Mr. Maclean: The EC Commission is preparing proposals for new rules on the welfare of animals at the time of slaughter. I shall be seeking to ensure that the standards which we consider to be necessary are applied thoughout the Community.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what efforts he is making to establish protection for live animals after 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations have been proceeding on Commission proposals for the protection of pigs and calves and at the Agriculture Council on 25 and 26 June I pressed for the earliest possible introduction of this legislation. I am also pressing for further comprehensive welfare safeguards to be introduced on a Community basis.

Caseous Lymphadentitis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 21 June, Official Report, column 652, whether the goats imported from Germany that were found to have caseous lymphadentitis were inspected by veterinarians for diseases other than foot and mouth, during their period of post-import quarantine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Animals in post-import quarantine are examined by official veterinarians on a number of occasions, including within 72 hours of the end of the quarantine period, for signs of notifiable disease. If, during the course of quarantine signs of other diseases are noted, a report must be made to the state veterinary service, and the owner of the quarantine premises can arrange for veterinary treatment as appropriate.

Animal Feed (Ingredients)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to introduce regulations under the Agriculture Act 1970 to require the declaration of the ingredients of animal feedstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is in fact a prime mover in the work that is going forward to produce regulations for the whole of the EC on ingredient listing. I have very recently pressed the Agriculture Commissioner for rapid progress on this.

Zoo Animals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 25 June, Official Report, column 28, how many animals in zoos have died of spongiform encephalopathies; if he will list the species involved, the zoos concerned and the date detected in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Spongiform encephalopathies have been confirmed in five antelope in British zoos:

— a nyala, died June 1986
— a gemsbok, died June 1987
— an Arabian oryx, died March 1989
— a greater kudu, died August 1989
— an eland, died December 1989

A scientific paper published in 1980 reported the occurrence between 1974 and 1979 of chronic wasting disease, a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy, in 63 mule deer, one black-tailed deer and one mule deer crossed white-tailed deer in two wildlife parks in the United States of America. A paper published in 1982 reported the occurrence of the disease in six Rocky mountain elk in the same two wildlife parks.

A spongiform encephalopathy was confirmed in four white tigers which died or were killed in Bristol zoo between 1970 and 1977. Experimental inoculations of brain material from the tigers gave no indication that the disease is transmissible.

Surplus Food

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the invitation to organisations to participate in the 1990 surplus food scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I announced to the House on 19 March that the surplus food scheme would be continued for a further year. Following that announcement, the press coverage that attended it and the individual invitations issued by my Department, we have been able to designate 420 organisations to distribute approximately 3,800 tonnes of butter and 3,000 tonnes of beef to the most needy citizens of the United Kingdom.

I have deliberately designated more organisations than in previous years in order to meet the criticism that there was "patchiness" in the availability of food across the country. But as the quantities are limited, it must be understood that the assistance must, necessarily, be spread more thinly as a result.

The charitable and voluntary organisations wishing to participate asked for far more than is available under the scheme. I have therefore had to share the butter and beef as fairly as possible between them, by allocating to each organisation an amount proportional to the number of needy people it will reach. I have given special priority in allocating this food to organisations providing prepared meals and to those serving the homeless and destitute.

I am placing a list of all the organisations I have designated to participate in this year's scheme in the Library of the House and my officials will now be writing to all organisations that applied.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 27 June.

Mr. Curry: I represented the United Kingdom at the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Luxembourg on 27 June 1990 together with my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office.

There was a substantial discussion of the EC technical conservation arrangements. The Council agreed on the urgent need for action in the North sea. I stressed particularly the need to improve the selectivity of gear so that catches of immature North sea haddock and cod are reduced. As agreed at last December's Council, the Commission is to make proposals by the end of July; and the Council agreed to take decisions on these at the earliest possible opportunity.

We also secured some valuable new fishing opportunities. The EC has gained increased west Greenland cod; and the Council agreed that this should be allocated according to the principle of relative stability, bringing our fleet 1,410 tonnes. In addition, in the light of scientific evidence, the Council agreed to increase the Irish sea sole TAC, bringing us an extra 170 tonnes, including a swap with the Netherlands.

In response to strong Irish concerns, the Council agreed to adjust the staging of the EC catch of western horse mackerel. We safeguarded the position of our fishermen by ensuring that the tonnage put aside for the last four months of the year is more than the catch in the same period last year.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the Health and Safety Commission's financial bid for the financial year 1990-91; and how much it received.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government met the Health and Safety Commission's bid for 1990-91 in full and the financial provision is set out in the supply estimates published in March 1990.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the grant in aid given to the Health and Safety Executive for each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Grant in aid provided for the Health and Safety Commission is as follows:

Financial year	Grant in aid £000s
1979-80	55,757
1980-81	70,970
1981-82	80,816
1982-83	81,335
1983-84	87,993
1984-85	90,298
1985-86	93,283
1986-87	94,334
1987-88	94,235
1988-89	97,390
1989-90	102,974
1990-91	116,557

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the dates of his last three meetings with the members of the Health and Safety Commission; and what was the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has had two meetings with members of the Health and Safety Commission since becoming Secretary of State. He met the chairman of the commission on 31 January for a wide-ranging discussion on the work of the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive. He also met the chairman with five members of the commission on 31 May when they discussed the commission's plan of work for 1990-91 and beyond.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for each standard region and for Great Britain as a whole, how much expenditure, excluding administration costs, at cash and constant prices, was spent in each year since 1979 on (a) employment training, and the earlier programmes it replaced, (b) the youth training scheme, earlier youth opportunities programme, and (c) the enterprise allowance scheme;

(2) for each Training Agency, formerly MSC, area and for Great Britain as a whole, how much expenditure, excluding administration costs, at cash and constant prices, was spent in each year since 1979 on (a) employment training, and the earlier programmes it replaced, (b) the youth training scheme, earlier youth opportunities programme, and (c) the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table shows expenditure for Great Britain at cash and constant 1989-90 prices, excluding administration costs, in each year since 1983-84, on (a) employment training, (b) youth training scheme and (c) enterprise allowance scheme.

It is not possible separately to identify administration costs in earlier years. A breakdown at levels lower than Great Britain is not available. Constant prices were calculated by use of the GDP deflator index from the Chancellor's "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published March 1990.

£ million

	Employment training		Youth training scheme		Enterprise allowance scheme
	Cash	Constant	Cash	Constant	Cash	Constant

1989-90	1,120·8	1,120·8	976·0	976·0	170·9	170·9

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region, and for Great Britain, for each month since July 1989, the number of employment training special group starts, separately for skill shortage recruits, labour market returners and single parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Safety Procedures (Departmental Guidance)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance is offered by his Department to industrial companies wishing to implement safety procedures set out in the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has committed substantial resources to ensuring industry's awareness and understanding of the requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations. Over 4½ million free information leaflets have been distributed and detailed national guidance has been published including six approved codes of practice, a guide to assessment for employers and an open learning course.

In addition, HSE inspectors have contributed to discussions, lectures, seminars and conferences on the regulations and offered guidance during the course of their visits to employers' premises. HSE has been working closely with industry organisations and employers to develop guidance for their members. There has also been a national publicity campaign and extensive use of local TV, radio and the press.

New Businesses

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses have registered for value added tax in (a) Derbyshire and (b) the east midlands in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available information is for 1988 and is given in the table. Early indications for 1989 from data collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are that in the United Kingdom as a whole, there was a net increase of 1,500 a week on average, compared with 1,200 a week in 1988.

	Derbyshire	East Midlands
Registrations	3,100	15,200
Deregistrations	2,400	11,100
Net Change (per cent.)	3·3	4·0

Wages Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which classes of retail employers are covered by wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: Employers engaged in the retail sale of items listed in schedule 2 to the Retail Trades Wages Council (Non-Food) (Abolition and Establishment) Order 1979 (Statutory Instrument No. 863 1979) and the Retail Trades Wages Council (Food and Allied Trades) (Abolition and Establishment) Order 1979 (Statutory Instrument No. 862 1979) are covered by the retail non-food and retail food wages councils respectively. Copies of the statutory instruments have been placed in the Library.

Disablement Advisory Service

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to modify or alter the services offered by the Disablement Advisory Service within the next two years.

Mr. Nicholls: The service offered by the Disablement Advisory Service has been considered in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has just undertaken. We shall be publishing the consultative document giving the results of the review in the next few days.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each of the disablement advisory offices covering the district of West Yorkshire (a) the current action case load, (b) the case load for the preceding two years and (c) the current annual budget.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bus Privatisation

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to privatise Ulster Bus and City Bus.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give an estimate of the current number of homeless in Northern Ireland; and, of those, how many suffer from (a) alcoholism or drug dependency, (b) AIDS and (c) mental illness.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No.

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the long-term plans for dealing with educational, medical and social needs of children who suffer from cerebral palsy.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The Government will continue to provide a wide range of services and facilities for children with cerebral palsy and other motor disorders. In addition, the United Kingdom is negotiating access to a planned new international institute for conductive education in Hungary and the role of that technique in complementing existing services in Northern Ireland will be considered when those negotiations are concluded.

Anaesthetist, Downpatrick

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a decision will be taken about the appointment of a third anaesthetist to the Down group of hospitals in Downpatrick.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The Eastern health and social services board has yet to decide whether the third anaesthetist post at the Down group of hospitals should be filled on a permanent basis. The matter will be considered by the board's policy and care review committee on 5 July 1990.

Summer School, Dungannon

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will meet the officers of the Buddy Bear committee to discuss requirements for the summer school to be held in Dungannon.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The Buddy Bear Trust has already provided me with details of its proposed summer school but, given the Government's overall policy on the introduction of conductive education into this country and the continuing need for evaluation of the technique, I have concluded that it would not be appropriate to provide financial assistance for this from public funds.

I understand that the trust is also developing detailed proposals for a permanent institute for conductive education in Northern Ireland and I will carefully consider those proposals when they are made available.

Dental Services

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures have been taken or are planned with the introduction of a capitation scheme within the Government dental services to take account of the particular dental care needs of children in Northern Ireland with regard to levels of dental disease, deprivation factors and age profile of population.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 June 1990]: It is not intended to introduce any specific measures particular to Northern Ireland. Additional payments to dentists, in the form of a one-off entry payment and an increase in the capitation fee, are made for children with excessive dental decay.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each year from 1978 the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, expressing the figures in (a) cash terms, (b) 1978-79 money terms and (c) units of consumption for electricity in kilowatt hours, gas in therms, liquid fuel in litres and solid fuel in tonnes.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The information requested for the years prior to 1983-84 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. From 1983-84 onwards the energy consumption and costs for the Northern Ireland Government Office estate, broken down by fuel, are as follows:

	Electricity	Oil	Gas
1983-84
Consumption	25·5m KWh	4·25m L	72K th

DEFENCE

Astra (Ammunition Supplies)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates when, and persons with whom, his Department was in communication concerning the possible granting of contracts for the supply of ammunition to Her Majesty's forces by the Astra company; and what representations he has received since then from Astra concerning assurances allegedly given at that time.

Mr. Alan Clark: As part of their normal duties, many persons employed in my Department have been involved on numerous occasions in discussion with Astra regarding the supply of ammunition. My Department has no record of representations about alleged assurances.

Security

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with his American counterpart concerning the development of the security posture called "special operations and low-intensity conflict" for western Europe and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's northern flank.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Neubert: Research expenditure by the Ministry of Defence, net and inclusive of VAT, was as follows:

Year	£ million	Percentage of defence budget
1982-83	305	2·2
1983-84	358	2·2
1984-85	393	2·3
1985-86	399	2·2
1986-87	408	2·2
1987-88	396	2·1
1988-89	386	2·0

Comparable figures are not available for years before 1982-83. Customer/supplier arrangements apply throughout MOD-funded research.

Christmas Island

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, 13 June, column 243, he will set out the total financial compensation paid to the United Kingdom by the United States of America for the clean-up of the Christmas Island test site following the 1962 Operation Dominic tests to which he refers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Operation Dominic tests were all high air bursts off Christmas Island, and did not result in significant contamination of the island; no special clean-up operations by the United Kingdom were, therefore, necessary as a result of these tests.

RAF Stanmore Park (Explosion)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make an urgent statement on the explosion which occurred at RAF Stanmore Park on Thursday 21 June at 9.35 am.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At approximately 8.15 am on 21 June a sports holdall was found by a civilian worker on the ground inside the perimeter fence at RAF Stanmore Park adjacent to a civilian workshop. The area was immediately cordoned off and evacuated.

A bomb disposal team had begun clearance operations with the civil police when the holdall exploded at approximately 9.30 am. There were no injuries, but a nearby workshop was damaged.

The police investigation is continuing.

Airbus

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any unsolicited proposal has been received from Airbus Industrie, or either of its partners, for adaptation of airbus civil aircraft for maritime reconnaissance or other weapons-carrying role.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Boeing AWACS

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department intends to purchase Boeing 707 aircraft to provide on-going training for aircrew of Royal Air Force Boeing AWACS aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Low Flying

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the ratio of low-altitude military flights as part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercises in the United Kingdom to those in the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, Canada, the United States of America, Belgium and Turkey in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Neubert: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to limit the speed of aircraft involved in low-flying military exercises to 420 knots maximum.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to ban low-altitude military flights over nuclear plants, hospitals, schools, places of worship, public buildings or factories.

Mr. Neubert: Standing instructions already prohibit military aircraft from overflying nuclear installations at low level. Other cases where protection is sought from overflights by military aircraft at low level are considered on their individual merits and there are no plans to change this position.

International Military Services

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether International Military Services has an office in Iran.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 12 January 1988 at column 199. The position remains the same.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether International Military Services has had any communication with the Libyan Government at any time in the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am assured by the company that it has not communicated with the Libyan Government at any time in the last 10 years.

Options for Change

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 25 June, if he will state the exact number of staff within the Ministry of Defence who have been involved at various times in certain aspects of the options for change work in addition to their normal duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number has varied considerably as more staff have been drawn into the work and consulted on particular aspects of it and as the level of activity has fluctuated. It is not, therefore, possible to give a precise figure.

Iran

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether Rolls-Royce has sold Olympus and Proteus engines to the Iranian navy at any time in the last 10 years;

(2) whether spare parts for Chieftain tanks have been supplied to the Iranian Government at any time in the last 10 years;

(3) whether Plessey has sold the Iranian Government air defence radars at any time in the past 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to give details of defence equipment sales to specific countries. In respect of Iran, however, the guidelines on defence exports to that country announced by my right hon. and learned Friend, the then Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 450, have been rigorously applied since the date of their promulgation in December 1984.

Libya

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last 10 years contracts have been agreed for the supply of non-lethal military equipment to Libya.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to give details of defence equipment exports to specific countries. The United Kingdom has, however, had an embargo on all new defence sales to Libya since May 1984.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any Libyan military officers have received any training in this country, at any time in the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of Libyan junior naval officers attended basic training courses between 1980 and 1984 but all such training ceased after diplomatic relations were broken off in 1984.

Soviet Union

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current assessment of the nature of the military threat from the Soviet Union; and what assessment of the potential military threat from that country has taken place as a result of the study of options for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We welcome the major political changes in the Soviet Union and the shift in emphasis of Soviet military doctrine to defensive objectives. None-the-less, even after the implementation of a CFE agreement, the Soviet Union will remain the largest single military power in Europe. The changing circumstances in Europe are, of course, central to our examinations of options for change.

Radar

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the independent environmental impact assessment being undertaken by W. S. Atkins in connection with the proposed radar installation on St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: The cost of the independent environmental impact assessment for St. David's airfield is commercial-in-confidence. It is not the policy of my Department to disclose such information.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Retirement Pension

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in the light of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh borough council, what changes he intends to propose in existing legislation to ensure equality of treatment between men and women in respect of the state retirement pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The James case was concerned with concessions to people by reference to their age. It has no effect on the law on social security, and therefore there is no need to amend that law in the light of this judgment.

Computer Facilities

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what initiatives his Department is taking to develop its computer facilities in the north-west.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department continues to develop and improve its computer facilities in the north-west to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of our major programme for the computerisation of the social security benefits system. This includes an initiative to develop computer facilities for the new benefits for disabled people which are described in "The Way Ahead" (Cm 917).

Disabled People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the benefit structure for disabled people with costs other than those relating to mobility and attendance.

Mr. Scott: The existing benefits structure already recognises that disabled people have extra costs. The OPCS surveys found that attendance allowance and mobility allowance are well directed towards the most common of the more costly disabilities. Equally important, these benefits provide help to people with other disabilities which are frequently combined with locomotion or self-care disabilities. The new disability allowance will build on that framework by offering a relatively simple and readily understood benefit to both severely and moderately disabled people.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the structure of benefits for disabled people and their carers.

Mr. Scott: Our proposals to improve the balance and structure of social security benefits for disabled people and their carers are set out in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm 917), laid before the House on 10 January. In 1993-94 the changes will add some £300 million to the £8·3 billion we are already spending on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people and their carers.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Social Security became a separate Department in 1988. Research and development by DSS, all of which is managed on the customer-contractor principle, is financed through the social security research budget. For 1989-90, the total expenditure on research and development was £937,000. Information on the overall DSS budget for 1989-90 is not yet available. For 1988-89, the total research and development expenditure was £636,000, forming 0·0013 per cent. of the overall DSS budget.

Information for earlier years has been published in the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the extra cost at 1990-91 benefit rates of increasing the personal allowance for couples dependent on income support to twice the rate for a single person over the age of 25.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated cost for all income-related benefits would be £1,200 million.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-86-87 Family Expenditure Surveys and the 1988 Annual Statistical Enquiry of Income Support recipients.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the reply, Official Report 13 June, column 215, to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, if he will categorise the 248 claims for war pensions made by nuclear test veterans or their widows according to the medical condition which caused death or disablement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not immediately available, but it is being obtained. I will write to the right hon. Member in due course.

Personal Pension Plans

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether bodies representing consumers' interests have been included in the interested bodies which have been asked for their views on the existing regulations on the disclosure of information to members of occupational and pension schemes referred to in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 14 June, Official Report, column 331; and if he will list the interested bodies that have been asked for their views.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The bodies, including those representing consumers' interests, which have been asked for their views on the current regulations on disclosure of information are:

Occupational Pensions Board
Association of Consulting Actuaries
Institute of Actuaries
Faculty of Actuaries
Nationalised Industries Pension Group
Society of Pension Consultants
Confederation of British Industry
Trades Union Congress
Association of British Insurers
National Association of Pension Funds
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Scotland
Occupational Pensions Advisory Service
Association of Pension Lawyers

Fraud

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) of 21 June, column 709, if he will send the hon. Member for Oldham, West a copy of the report "Working Together."

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Pursuant to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) on 21 June, a copy of the report "Working Together" was placed in the Library on that date. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member separately.

Local Office, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current number of staff vacancies, identifying the number in each grade, at the DSS office in Cumbernauld.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Planning for future resource requirements is progressive and at 26 June 1990 there was only 0·5 local officer 1 vacancy to be filled. Arrangements have been made to fill this on 1 August 1990.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current staff establishment, identifying the number in each grade, at the DSS office in Cumbernauld.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On 26 June 1990, the staff in post at Cumbernauld integrated local office was:

	Number
Senior executive officer	1
Higher executive officer	6
Local officer 1	30
Local officer 2	53
Administrative assistant	16
Telephonist	1
Typist	3
Messenger	1
Total	111

In addition, eight casual administrative assistants are in post.

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons who have received loans from the social fund are making repayments at (a) above 15 per cent., (b) 15 per cent., (c) above 10 per cent. but less than 15 per cent., (d) 10 per cent., (e) above 5 per cent. but less than 10 per cent., (f) 5 per cent. and (g) less than 5 per cent. of the income support applicable amount.

Mr. Scott: At 30 April 1990, the latest date for which data are available, 103,055 social fund loans were being recovered. A detailed breakdown of the percentage rates at which loans are being refunded by individual applicants is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Charge

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the effect of a community charge levied at (a) £350 and (b) £450 on the replacement ratios, expressed as out-of-work spending power divided by in-work spending power, of unemployed people under 25 years, living with their parents, and offered jobs at (a) £80 a week, (b) £100 a week and (c) £120 a week, assuming work expenses averaging £10 a week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The information is listed in the table. It should be noted that the results in the table remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the November 1979 and April 1990 rates of benefit in cash, giving couple and single rates separately where appropriate, and showing the percentage change in real terms, using the RPI and Rossi indexes for (a) November 1979 to April 1990 and (b) November 1979 to September 1989 for (i) retirement pension, (ii) non-contributory retirement pension, (iii) unemployment benefit, (iv) sickness benefit, (v) maternity allowance, (vi) child benefit, (vii) one-parent benefit, (viii) industrial disablement benefit, (ix) industrial death benefit, (x) war disablement pension, (xi) war widow's pension, (xii) attendance allowance, higher and lower rate, (xiii) invalid care allowance, (xiv) severe disablement allowance, (xv) mobility allowance and (xvi) supplementary benefit and income support personal allowance for (1) those aged 16 and 17 years, (2) those aged 18 to 24 years and (3) persons aged over 25 years;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the (a) November 1979 and (b) April 1990 rates of benefit in cash, giving couple and single rates separately where appropriate, and showing (1) the percentage change in real terms, using the retail prices index and Rossi indexes as appropriate for the period November 1979 to September 1989, (2) the percentage change in real terms, using the retail prices index and Rossi indexes as appropriate for the period November 1979 to April 1990, (3) the percentage change in relation to the increase in male average earnings in the period November 1979 to September 1989, and (4) the percentage change in relation to the increase in male average earnings in the period November 1979 to April 1990 for (i) retirement pension, (ii) non-contributory retirement pension, (iii) unemployment benefit, (iv) sickness benefit, (v) maternity allowance, (vi) child benefit, (vii) one-parent benefit, (viii) industrial disablement benefit, (ix) industrial death benefit, (x) war disablement pension, (xi) war widow's pension, (xii) attendance allowance, higher and lower rate, (xiii) invalid care allowance, (xiv) severe disablement allowance, (xv) mobility allowance and (xvi) supplementary benefit/income support personal allowance for (a) 16 to 17 years old, (b) 18 to 24 years old and (c) persons aged 25 years plus.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 June 1990]: I regret that it is not possible, on the basis of the information contained in the question, to provide the information requested in relation to the supplementary benefit and income support schemes. Nor, since September 1989 was not an uprating date, would it be appropriate to provide an analysis related to that date of the change in the value of the benefits listed.

The table therefore provides figures on the same basis as in the answer to a comparable question from the hon. Member which I gave on 20 December 1989, updated to April 1990. As I pointed out at that time, comparisons over the period in question are complicated by the change in 1983 from uprating partly based on forecasts of future inflation to upratings based on known movements in the retail prices index to the latest available date. Moreover, in November 1979 long-term benefit rates were increased by 2 per cent. more than forecast inflation to make up for the fact that the forecast underlying the 1978 uprating had proved 2 per cent. lower than the actual growth in earnings of 13·3 per cent. between November 1977 and November 1978. The table gives the figures requested in relation to both 1978 and 1979. The retail prices index has been used as this is the appropriate index for those benefits listed in the table. It also shows the change in the average real value of benefit between the uprating years November 1978 to November 1979, and April 1989 to April 1990.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the question regarding the value of benefits in 1979 and 1990 tabled for answer on 15 June.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have replied to the hon. Member's question today.

Family Credit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Department of Social Security employees are in receipt of family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The number of employees in receipt of family credit is 570, including those cases where the family credit is received by the partner of an employee.

Written Answers to Questions

EMPLOYMENT

Port of London Authority

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the legal costs to date incurred by the Port of London Authority in resisting the industrial tribunal case brought by dismissed Tilbury dock workers.

Mr. Nicholls: We do not hold such information. The cost of any legal representation at an industrial tribunal is a matter for the parties concerned.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has discussed with the Port of London Authority its refusal to recognise or bargain collectively with any trade union in respect of its employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed these matters with the Port of London Authority. The Government believe that the question of trade union recognition is best left to the parties concerned.

Disabled People

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to complete his Department's review of services for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The review of the Employment Department's employment and training services for people with disabilities has now been completed, and we have today published a consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities".

The 1980s saw new approaches to promoting good practice to employers, to developing assessment, counselling, training and rehabilitation for people with disabilities, and to help for people with severe disabilities. In the document we examine how the resources available can be used to full effect in the 1990s, taking account of the major research report "Employment and Handicap" which is also published today and provides a better picture of the position of people with disabilities in the labour market.

In the document plans are announced:

— To make more effective the help offered to clients with disabilities in our non-specialist programmes and to improve the management and training of our specialist services;

— To improve the effectiveness of our assessment and rehabilitation services;

— To strengthen the promotion of good practice to employers.

Comments are invited on:

— What contributions to delivering services the voluntary sector and private sector organisations might make;

— Proposals to rebalance help to people with severe disabilities, over time, towards placements with employers;

— The current quota scheme, and other possible forms of legislation;

— The shape of advisory machinery to my Department.

I will reach decisions after careful consideration of the responses received during the consultative period, which ends on 31 December.

National Dock Labour Board

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of the National Dock Labour Board.

Mr. Howard: The National Dock Labour Board having wound up its affairs, and in conformity with my powers under section 2(5) of the Dock Work Act 1989, the board will be dissolved on 30 June 1990.

Skill Centres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if contracts have been completed with the Lakin consortium regarding the transfer of skill centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The sale of the four training businesses to the consortium headed by Mr. Lakin were completed on Friday 11 May 1990.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Parental Choice

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to extend parental choice in the allocation of school places.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As a result of the Education Act 1980, the great majority of parents already get the school they want for their child. The more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act will further increase parental choice by securing that schools must admit pupils on demand up to the limit of their physical capacity. These provisions take effect in secondary schools in September this year. No decision has yet been taken on when more open enrolment should be extended to primary schools; the issue is currently under consideration in the Department.

Teachers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on how many qualified teachers in England and Wales are not currently working within the profession.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The total number of out-of-service teachers was 404,000 on 31 March 1986.

The table summarises the main information.

The distribution of qualified "Out of Service" teachers by age, sex, training and last teaching sector on 31 March 1986

This group includes those who were in service outside the maintained sector, or in part-time service within this sector.

School Building Grants

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the closing dates for submission by (a) local education authorities in respect of county and voluntary aided and controlled schools and (b) grant-maintained schools, of bids for capital allocations for grants for school buildings; and on what dates he expects to make his announcements on these bids.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities in England have been asked to submit their capital expenditure plans for county, voluntary controlled and voluntary aided schools to the Department no later than 15 September 1990. My right hon. Friend expects to be able to announce annual capital guidelines and allocations for capital expenditure on education in 1991-92 to local education authorities, by governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools in December.

The Department will write to grant-maintained schools inviting bids for capital work in 1991-92 later in the summer, giving a closing date a couple of months later. The intention is to announce allocations around the new year.

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools, Deptford

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1), pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 627, whether that part of the current value of the Haberdashers' Aske's schools in Deptford attributable to past public investment in the premises for which he has previously decided no repayment to public funds shall be required under section 14 of the Education Act 1944 will be deducted in determining the amount of private sponsorship for the proposed Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college represented by those premises or any proposed lease of them for the city technology college;

(2) what part of the current value of the sites and premises of the Haberdashers' Aske's Schools in Deptford is attributable to past public capital investment in those schools; and what information he has as to the valuation made by the Inner London education authority of that amount.

Mrs. Rumbold: ILEA expenditure on capital works for the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham boys' and girls' schools was assessed by them as £5·645 million at 1989-90 prices. The value of the sites of the schools is independent of expenditure on premises; no precise estimate can be made of the proportion of the value of the premises attributed to past building work. The trustees of the Robert Aske's Foundation own the sites and premises of the schools and may transfer a leasehold interest to the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college trust. The value of the lease, with any other sums, will be deemed to be the trust's share of initial capital expenditure on the city technology college.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Reservoirs

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider the construction of another reservoir in the south-eastern section of Northern Ireland to deal with increasing demand.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: Yes.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Fires

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if the Transport and Road Research Laboratory has undertaken research into the possible relationship between vehicles fitted with fuel injection systems and post-accident fires; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has received from chief constables of police on the incidence of post-accident fires in motor vehicles fitted with fuel injection systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory is currently conducting research into rear impacts and the associated fire risk of disruption to the fuel system. The research also covers electrically sourced fires which have previously been identified as one of the major causes of vehicle fires.

Further research is being considered to establish other causes of vehicle fires, of which fuel injection would be one of many factors to be taken into account.

Following discussions with my Department, the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders has already recommended to its members to fit devices to isolate high-pressure fuel injuection pumps in the event of a collision, so as to reduce the fire risk from this source. It is also investigating the causes of under-bonnet fires.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on seeking the total removal of land-based short-range nuclear weapons from Europe at the forthcoming arms negotiations dealing with these weapons.

The Prime Minister: Arms control remains an integral part of alliance security policy; NATO has therefore made it clear that it endorses the United States intention to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on short-range nuclear forces after the conclusion of a treaty limiting conventional forces in Europe, and we fully support NATO's position.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government have established any conditions for their support for the deployment of tactical air-to-surface nuclear missiles in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: We have always made clear our support for the continued presence of modern and effective American nuclear forces in Europe. The specific question of deployment of United States tactical air-to-surface missiles in the United Kingdom, and the terms which might apply, has not yet arisen.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the number of applicants, in each category, awaiting entry clearance at each British post on the Indian sub-continent at the latest available date and for each quarter since 1 January 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The information requested is given in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the loss to the Exchequer in each year from 1984-85 to 1989-90 arising from the provisions of section 179 and schedule 32 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Moynihan: Annual figures for the estimated net cost to the Exchequer up to March 1988 of capital allowances in enterprise zones in Great Britain (designated under schedule 32) are given in table 13 of "Enterprise Zone Information 1987-1988". Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Bedfordshire Pilgrims Housing Association

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conditions have been set for the transfer of housing stock to the Bedfordshire Pilgrims housing association; and, specifically, what percentage has been earmarked for the repayment of debt.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am sending to my hon. Friend a copy of the letter of consent issued to North Bedfordshire borough council and placing a copy in the Library.

In line with our general policy on the use of receipts from large-scale voluntary transfers of council housing, the council was directed to set aside for debt redemption the greater of: 75 per cent. of the receipt or an amount equivalent to the outstanding debt on the housing transferred.

Homelessness

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra funding he will make available to enable Stoke on Trent city council, housing associations and voluntary organisations to meet the housing needs of homeless people within the city.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Housing resources for Stoke city council will be allocated in the usual way following consultation on the 1991-92 housing investment programme. Detailed decisions on the funding of housing associations are for the Housing Corporation, but overall spending by the corporation is scheduled to rise from around £1·1 billion this year to nearly £1·7 billion in 1992-93. Funding under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 for voluntary organisations working with the homeless has increased from £680,000 in 1989-90 to £2 million this year. No applications for funding were received from organisations in the Stoke area in respect of the current year, but it is open to interested bodies to submit applications, by October, for funding in 1991-92.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the presence of cryptosporidium in drinking water supplies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the group of experts chaired by Sir John Badenoch is drawing to a conclusion its report on cryptosporidium in water supplies. When the report is submitted jointly to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health, it will be published and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Acid Rain

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide his estimate of the levels of emission of carbon dioxide and of other chemical substances contributing to acid rain from Britain (a) during the last two months and (b) the comparable figure for the same period in 1989.

Mr. Trippier: Data on emissions of selected gases into the atmosphere are published annually in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics, the latest of which (No. 12) contains figures for 1978-88 and has been placed in the Library of the House. Monthly figures are not available. Emissions of carbon dioxide and of the main contributors to acid rain, sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen for 1987-88 are as follows:

United Kingdom Estimated Emissions	1987	1988
Carbon dioxide[1] (million tonnes)	159	158
Sulphur dioxide (thousand tonnes)	3,863	3,664
Nitrogen oxides[2] (thousand tonnes)	2,429	2,480

[1] Expressed in terms of weight of carbon emitted
[2] Expressed as nitrogen dioxide equivalent

Oil Spillages

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific contribution was made by his Department to the development of the international convention on the prevention of maritime pollution from oil spillages, developed by the International Maritime Organisation.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The draft convention on international co-operation on oil pollution preparedness and response being developed by the International Maritime Organisation is concerned primarily with mutual assistance and international co-operation between administrations to prepare for, and respond to, oil pollution incidents.

These are matters which fall within the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. My Department is being kept in touch with progress in view of its co-ordinating interest in maritime environment issues.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Crown Estates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next proposes to meet the First Crown Estates Commissioner to discuss revenues from the Crown Estates.

Mr. Major: I shall be meeting the First Crown Estates Commissioner on 3 July.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received from the general public on his proposals for economic and monetary developments in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lilley: A number.

Income Tax

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the increase in the standard rate of income tax necessary to raise an extra £21·5 billion per year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: At 1990-91 income levels an increase of about 12 pence would be required, raising the basic rate of income tax from 25 pence to 37 pence. This estimate does not allow for any behavioural effects that might result from such an increase.

HEALTH

NHS Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many copies of "Working for Patients" working paper 11, "Framework for Information", and invitations to take part in the consultation on it, were sent to (a) health authorities, (b) family practitioner committees, (c) community health councils, (d) professional organisations, (e) academic departments and research units, (f) voluntary organisations, (g) trade unions, (h) management and computer consultants, (i) suppliers of goods and equipment, (j) other private companies and (k) other organisations.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 3,400 copies of working paper 11 were distributed; this included copies to all Members of Parliament for England.

Working paper 11 was part of a set of consultative documents. The set was sent to:

	Number
District health authorities	190
Special health authorities	8
Regional health authorities	14
Family practitioner committees	90
Community health councils	0
Professional organisations	59
Academic organisations and research units	29
Voluntary organisations	8
Trade unions	7
Management and computer consultants	32
Suppliers of goods and equipment	32
Other private companies	31
Other organisations	21

Additional copies of the consultative documents were available from the health publications unit. Although the unit does not keep a record of the organisations to which it sends copies, approximately 3,800 copies of both the main texts of the consultative documents for information and IT were distributed.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many replies he has received from his consultation on working paper 11, broken down into (a) health authorities, family practitioner committees and community health councils, (b) management and computer consultants, (c) suppliers of goods and equipment, (d) academic departments and research units, (e) professional organisations and (f) other organisations.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 222 written replies were received. Several organisations sent more than one response. Some regions sent a response which reflected the views of their districts. The breakdown of the organisations sending at least one response was:

	Number
Health authorities, units, FPCs and CHCs	124
Management and computer consultants	3
Suppliers of goods and services	11
Academic departments and research units	8
Professional organisations	20
Other organisations	14
Total	180

A list of the organisations responding to the consultative exercise is given in appendix 1 of the document, published this week, entitled "Framework for Information Systems: The Next Steps". Aimed primarily at information systems specialists, the document presents the conclusions of the consultation exercise. Copies have been placed in the Library.

London Hospitals (Patients)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of patients treated during the last full year before closure of (a) the South London hospital for women, (b) Lambeth hospital and (c) St. George's hospital, Balham; and what is the total number of patients currently being treated at Charing Cross hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the table. St. George's hospital in Tooting is fully operational, but details are given for St. James's which has closed. There were 25,080 in-patient cases treated at Charing Cross hospital in the year ending March 1989, the latest for which information is held centrally.

Numbers of patients treated in last full year before closure

Hospital	Last full year of activity	In-patients treated
South London hospital (women)	1983	5,353
Lambeth hospital	1975	8,836
St. James's, Balham	1986	12,678

Transplant Operations

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many transplant operations have been carried out in the United Kingdom and how many in the other European Community countries.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association the number of kidney transplants carried out in 1988 in European Community countries was as follows:

	Number of kidney transplants
Belgium	401
Denmark	145
Fed. Rep. Germany	1,791
France	1,808
Greece	39
Ireland	78
Italy	476
Luxembourg	6
Netherlands	416
Portugal	104
Spain	1,018
United Kingdom	1,735

Note: Figures include transplants of kidneys from cadavers and living donors.

We do not have accurate information on transplants of other organs in European Community countries.

Pregnancy Tests

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnancy tests were carried out at hospitals following referral from a general practitioner in 1989 and at what cost; if he will list his reply by region; and if he will make a statement about pregnancy test charges in the future.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available centrally. Where health authorities offer general practitioners direct access to pathology services it is for the general practitioner concerned to judge whether a hospital test is warranted or whether an alternative method of confirming pregnancy is appropriate. Tests provided under the national health service will continue to be free of charge.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of breast cancer in women aged (a) 50 to 64 years and (b) 65 years and over in each year since 1984 for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table; 1985 is the latest available data year.

Registrations of newly diagnosed cases of malignant neoplasm of female breast[1], and rates per 100,000 population, ages 50-64, 65 and over, England and Wales, 1985[2].

Age-Group	Number	Rate[3]
50-64	6,977	166
65+	10,538	228

[1] Assigned to the International Classification of Diseases 9th revision code 174.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Rate per 100,000 population.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of cervical cancer in women aged (a) 50 to 64 years and (b) 65 years and over in each year since 1984 for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table; 1985 is the latest available data year.

Registrations of newly diagnosed cases of malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri[1] and rates per 100,000 population, ages 50-64, 65 and over, England and Wales, 1985[2]

Age-Group	Number	Rate[3]
50-64	1,075	26
65+	1,086	24

[1] Assisigned to the International Classification of Diseases 9th revision code 180.
[2] Provisional
[3] Rate per 100,000 population.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the routine invitation of women for breast and cervical cancer screening to women over the age of 65 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Women aged over 65 are not excluded from either screening programme. We have asked health authorities to provide breast cancer screening to women in this age group every three years on request. Guidance on cervical screening issued by the Department of Health to health authorities, family practitioner committees and general practitioners stated that "women aged 65 and over who have not had two consecutive negative smears in the last ten years should also be screened". Our most recent figures show that women aged over 65 years already consult their doctors more than six times a year on average. Under the GPs' new contract much greater emphasis is being placed on health promotion and prevention of ill health. This will mean that GPs will have even more opportunities to advise women patients over 65 of the wisdom of accepting these preventive measures.

Water Quality

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications to consumers of tap water from the presence of blue-green algae in water sources.

Mr. Dorrell: I am advised that, despite medical and scientific interest over at least 50 years, there is no convincing evidence that algal toxins in drinking water have ever caused illness in humans.

Several published reports from other countries refer to outbreaks of gastrointestinal illness and hepatitis occurring during a period of heavy algal growth in the source of the drinking water. In these incidents, the source water often smelt and tasted unpleasant and the water treatment was inadequate to remove the taste and odour which therefore remained in the drinking water. However, as noted in a review published in 1984 by the World Health Organisation, there is no evidence of the causal involvement of algal toxins in these episodes. There have been no such published reports from the United Kingdom.

Scanners

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the provision and allocation of capital resources to provide scanners in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for health authorities to decide, in the light of local circumstances and needs, how capital moneys are to be allocated.

Medical Laboratory and Scientific Officers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the duties and responsibilities of medical laboratory and scientific officers in each of the bands of salaries from £7,897 to £20,244.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The duties and responsibilities of each grade are for employing authorities to determine within the guidance agreed by the Whitley council.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of medical laboratory and scientific officers in each band of salaries from £7,897 to £20,244 a year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is shown in the table.

Qualified medical laboratory and scientific officers on each pay scale[1]
England—30 September 1989

Grade	Pay scale[2] £	Whole time equivalents[2] [3]
MLSO 1	7,897 to 12,158	4,940
MLSO 2	11,241 to 16,639	2,810
MLSO 3	15,383 to 19,465	1,650
MLSO 4	17,996 to 22,771	540
Total		9,940
Grading unknown[4]		1,480
Grand total		11,420

[1] The scales quoted are basic rates of pay.
[2] Pay scales include the three additional points by which scales may be advanced to recognise special skills and additional responsibilities. Approximately 23 per cent. of medical laboratory and scientific officers are on advanced scale positions.
[3] All figures rounded to nearest ten whole time equivalents.
[4] Medical laboratory and scientific officers who, at the time figures were collected, had not been assigned to a grade in the new structure, which was introduced in 1988-89.

Health Visiting, Greenwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions his Department has undertaken following the discussions about health visiting in Greenwich which were held on 26 April between the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and a delegation led by the hon. Member for Woolwich.

Mr. Dorrell: A nursing officer from the Department has visited Greenwich health authority and we have received information from a limited comparative study of Greenwich and some other London health districts. Greenwich health authority had set up a working party to consider the health visiting service, and the Department has this week received a copy of its report.

Residential Care Allowances

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budgeted figure to be transferred from the residential care allowances budget to local authorities in 1990 by departmental region; and for what purposes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No transfer will be made this year. The amount to be transferred from the Department of Social Security to local authorities in 1991-92 to enable them to discharge new responsibilities arising from the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm 849) has not yet finally been determined.

Cadaver Kidney Transplants

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total number of cadaver kidney transplants carried out in the latest year for which figures are available at each of the health districts of Riverside, Bloomsbury, Hampstead, City and Hackney, Tower Hamlets, Lewisham and Southwark, Camberwell, West Lambeth and the Hammersmith special health authority.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 June 1990]: According to information provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Service, the number of cadaveric kidney transplants carried out in 1989 in the district health authorities specified was as follows:

Health Authority	Number
Riverside	25
Bloomsbury	23
Hampstead	33
City and Hackney	48
Tower Hamlets	54
Lewisham and North Southwark	70
Camberwell	32
West Lambeth	22
Hammersmith and Queen Charlotte's special health authority	35

We are pleased to announce that the number of cadaveric kidney transplants carried out in the United Kingdom in 1989 was a record. The total of 1,732 transplants represents a 10 per cent. increase on the achievement of the previous year.

Drug Safety

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Medicines Commission on the Committee on Safety of Medicines carries out independent checking of manufacturers' data on drug safety.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 June 1990]: The Medicines Commission and the Committee on Safety of Medicines are themselves independent advisory bodies set up under the Medicines Act 1968. It is not their practice to commission separate independent checking of manufacturers' data.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the expenditure in real terms on evaluating the safety of pharmaceutical drugs and (b) the number of specialised staff working on drug safety in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 June 1990]: Evaluation of safety is one integral component of the process of licensing medicinal products and monitoring them after marketing. This evaluation is carried out by expert toxicologists, pharmacists and physicians within the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) who are further advised by a number of expert committees. Separate costings are not available in the form requested. The MCA has recently been reorganised into a number of specialised businesses. The pharmacovigilance unit has responsibility for monitoring adverse reactions to drugs and there are currently 27 staff employed on this work.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what data the Medicines Commission and the Committee on Safety of Medicines rely for their assessment of a drug's safety before recommending a product licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 June 1990]: Every product licence application is considered individually and must satisfy the licensing authority as to safety, quality and efficacy before a licence can be granted. The EC publication "The Rules Governing Medicinal Products in the EC" volumes I-V and the Department of Health's publication, "Guidance Notes on Applications for Product Licences" (Revised MAL 2) provide comprehensive guidance on requirements for safety data. Copies will be placed in the Library shortly.

WALES

Andrew Jones

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the extra costs of keeping Andrew Jones in Whitchurch hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Arrangements for the care of Mr. Jones are a matter for South Glamorgan health authority. However, I am told that some £33,000 a year has been allocated to the ward on which Mr. Jones is accommodated to improve the overall level of care of patients, including Mr. Jones.

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessments under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: Each division of the Welsh Office has assessed the risk to the health of staff arising from hazardous substances in the workplace and the action needed to comply with the regulations. Similar information has also been obtained from contractors using buildings occupied by the Department's staff.

Perinatal and Paediatric Pathologists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the regional health authorities in Wales have appointed a perinatal or paediatric pathologist.

Mr. Grist: There is one consultant paediatrician in South Glamorgan health authority who has an interest in pathology.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost to his Department of the recent study undertaken by the university of Manchester on matters relating to the development of the all-Wales strategy for mental illness.

Mr. Ian Grist: It was £24,108·45.

NHS Reform

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all working papers, implementation documents, departmental circulars and other publications, whether in draft or final form, that have been issued to date by organisations other than his own Department, which have application in Wales in whole or in part arising from the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, "Working for Patients", "Caring for People" and associated Government initiatives.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 28 June 1990.

DHAs (Capital Assets)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of any income realised by the sale of any capital assets it is currently his policy to allow any district health authority in Wales to use in respect of revenue expenditure (a) in the financial year in which the sale occurs and (b) in any subsequent financial year.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 18 April which set out the virement limits applying to transfers of funds by health authorities between their revenue and capital cash limits. In the event that an authority wishes to exceed its virement limits, it must seek Welsh Office approval and agreement is subject to the authority's excess requirements being contained within the all-Wales virement limits. Receipts from the sale of capital assets form part of an authority's capital allocation and authorities may therefore vire such receipts to revenue in accordance with these arrangements.

Authorities also have a degree of flexibility to carry forward revenue and capital funds into a subsequent financial year. Each may carry forward 1 per cent. of its final net revenue cash limit and up to 10 per cent. of its final capital cash limit. In planning to carry forward funds, an authority may also seek the help of other authorities by entering into brokerage arrangements. In such cases the authority will lend the funds it wishes to carry forward, on the understanding that the loan will be repaid in the next or a subsequent financial year.

Singleton Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the review of the operation of the minor casualty unit at Singleton hospital has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Officials are currently considering additional information recently provided by West Glamorgan health authority and Swansea and Lliw Valley community health council. I will announce the results of the review as soon as all the relevant factors have been examined.

Algae

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the location of blue-green algae reported on four public supply reservoirs in Wales; what is the scientific description of such algae; and what assessment he has made of its potential effect if ingested by humans.

Mr. Grist: The four public supply reservoirs where blue-green algae have been detected are:

Reservoir	Type of algae
Dolwen, Clwyd	Microcystis
Plas Uchaf, Clwyd	Anabaena, Microcystis
Cefni, Anglesey, Gwynedd	Anabaena
Llandegfedd, Gwent	Aphanizomenon, Anabaena

Algae have also been found at four locations not used for public supply: Llyn Coron reservoir on Anglesey (anabaena detected), Henson hospital lake in Mid Glamorgan (anabaena, microcystis and aphanizomenon), Talley lake in Dyfed (gleostrichia and microcystis) and Eglwys Nunydd, West Glamorgan (aphanizomenon).

Blue-green algae (Myxophyta or Cynanophyta) are a large and diverse group of micro-organisms. Their basic structure and genetic organisation are bacterial in nature, but like green plants, they are able to produce carbohydrates by photosynthesis. The coloration is derived from the blue and green pigments used in photosynthesis. Unlike most plants, many blue-green algae do not need nitrogenous nutrients, having the ability to fix atmospheric nitrogen. Some, but by no means all, blue-green algae are toxic; several species which commonly occur in the aquatic environment can produce toxins.

Toxic algae can result in illnesses, including skin rashes, eye irritation, vomiting, diarrhoea, fever and pains in muscles and joints, in some recreational users of water who swallow or swim through the algal scums. There have been no reports of long-term effects or deaths in humans, but in some cases the illnesses were severe.

There is no evidence of illness resulting from drinking treated water supplied from the reservoirs affected by blue-green algae. In the four public supply reservoirs listed above where the algae have been detected, the algal scums have been limited to small areas on the water surface and have not adversely affected the water abstracted from deeper in the reservoirs for the purpose of water supply.

Furthermore, the normal processes of water treatment used are effective in removing algae from abstracted water or any organic compounds associated with the algal blooms.

SCOTLAND

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals that have expressed an interest in obtaining self-governing status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expressions of interest have been received in respect of hospitals at Forfar, the Royal Scottish national hospital at Larbert, the unit at the Foresterhill site in Aberdeen comprising the royal infirmary, maternity hospital and children's hospital, and the South Ayrshire unit comprising the hospitals at Ayr and Ballochmyle.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of general practitioner practices eligible for budget holding, the number which have applied, the health boards in which they are situated and the names of each practice.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) on 20 June, Official Report, column 622.

Scottish Constituencies

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average number of voters in a Scottish constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average number of voters in a constituency in Scotland on publication of the 1990 electoral registers in February was 54,677.

National Stadium

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards the construction of a national stadium for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 June 1990]: It is for Scottish sports bodies, rather than the Government, to decide what action is required to provide better sports facilities.

Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that no newly qualified nurse in Scotland is unable to find a job.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 June 1990]: While most newly qualified nurses find employment on completion of their training, it is impossible to guarantee the employment of all such nurses and students are made aware of this when they enrol. The number of nurses qualifying each year will seldom, if ever, match the number of posts immediately available in the national health service, but it should be noted that the number of qualified nurses employed in the national health service in Scotland has increased by 34·5 per cent. between 1979 and 1989. In addition, there are a growing number of employment opportunities for nurses elsewhere in both the public and private sectors.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: If the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions were removed, it is currently estimated that about 3·3 million people would pay more contributions. If the corresponding upper profits limit for self-employed people were also removed, it is estimated that about another 0·5 million people would pay more contributions.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people affected by regulation 25, industrial deafness, ruled ultra vires by the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Scott: Since October 1974 when occupational deafness was added to the list of prescribed diseases, we estimate that about 25,000 claims for disablement benefit have failed to satisfy the requirements of regulation 25 of the Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulation 1985 or similar preceding provisions. They were not therefore referred for audiometric testing to establish whether they satisfied the necessary level of hearing loss.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's estimate of the cost of implementing the Court of Appeal ruling on October 1989 regarding regulation 25—industrial deafness prescribed diseases.

Mr. Scott: As a result of the Court of Appeal judgment of 26 October 1989 in the case of McKiernon, the law on occupational deafness reflects neither this Government's intentions nor those of any previous Government. The original proposals for a scheme for paying disablement benefit for occupational deafness were made by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (IIAC) in 1973. Claims were first invited in October 1974 and awards were made from February 1975. The provisions included a rule that a claim had to be made within one year of leaving the relevant occupation. The IIAC considered this to be a pre-requisite of a provision for those made occupationally deaf. Subsequently, in 1983, this restriction was eased so that a claim could be made within five years of leaving a relevant occupation. (Regulation 25 of the Industrial Injuries Prescribed Diseases Regulations 1985). The court's judgment means that this regulation and regulations 6(2) (c) and 36 of the same regulations and preceding provisions are considered to be ultra vires because they do not specifically modify section 165(A) of the 1975 Social Security Act which deals with time limits for claiming social security benefits generally. If we did not seek to validate these provisions to correct this technical legal defect and restore the policy intention of successive Governments, past claims decided under these rules would need to be reviewed, and future claims decided on the basis of the Court of Appeal judgment. The benefit costs could exceed £100 million and there would be substantial administrative costs in reviewing past cases.

DEFENCE

Electronic Cockpit Displays

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out by his Department on the effects of the introduction of high technology electronic cockpit displays on RAF aircrew standards of visual lookout in combat aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: Before any new electronic displays are introduced into RAF combat aircraft, an extensive and rigorous research and development programme is undertaken at the Royal Aerospace Establishment and in British industry. The primary objectives are to present information to the pilot in a clear and unambiguous manner to meet the requirements of the mission, and to reduce pilot workload. Particular emphasis has been placed on developing new cockpit technologies that aid the pilot's lookout.

Before an aircraft is accepted into RAF service, the cockpit layout and its displays are formally assessed by test aircrew for suitability for the mission, and compatibility with the visual flying task.

Military Aircraft (Jamming Equipment)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations governing the operation of radar or radio jamming equipment by military aircraft while operating inside civil airport control zones.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Military aircraft are prohibited from using radio or radar jamming techniques while operating inside civil airport control zones.

Hydrazine Vapour

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the maximum safe exposure limits to hydrazine vapour for Royal Air Force personnel, expressed in parts per million.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Were the RAF to use hydrazine, which at present it does not, it would follow Health and Safety Executive recommendations; currently the executive recommends that a limit of 0·1 parts per million is used as a guidance for the control of exposure to inhalation of hydrazine vapour.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training in the hazards of hydrazine, the cleaning up of hydrazine spills and the treatment of personnel exposed to hydrazine vapour is given to fire service and rescue personnel (1) at military emergency diversion aerodromes in the United Kingdom and (2) at other military airfields in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Hydrazine is not used within the RAF and there are no United States aircraft currently based in the United Kingdom in which it is employed. However, instructions for the handling of hydrazine, and responding to accidents in which it is present, are set out in standing Air Force department fire service regulations and in engineering safety instructions issued to all operational RAF airfields. Basic training courses include instruction in hazardous substances, including hydrazine, and regular training is carried out at RAF airfields where NATO aircraft which use hydrazine may visit.

Galloway Training Area

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training man-days were carried out in the Galloway training area in 1989; and if he will list the dates on which the training area was in use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1989, personnel from Regular and Territorial Army units conducted 6,828 man-days of training in the Galloway forest area. Military use took place on the following dates:

27 and 29 January
25 and 26 February
21 March to 2 April
8 April
20 and 21 May
23 to 25 June
7 to 9 July
3 to 5 August
11 to 24 September
9 to 15 October
20 to 23 October
4 and 5 November

Foreign War Medals

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries which have issued foreign war medals to British service men or ex-service men.

Mr. Neubert: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to the Governments in Greece, Norway, Holland and France on the issue of war medals to British service men and ex-service men.

Mr. Neubert: It would not be appropriate to make representations to the Governments of Greece, Norway, Holland and France for the issue of war medals to British service men and ex-service men.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to obtain the issue of Soviet war medals to British service men and ex-service men.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During his visit to the Soviet Union earlier this year, my right hon. Friend discussed with the Soviet Defence Minister the possibility of a further issue by the Soviets of the medal struck by them in 1985 to mark the 40th anniversary of the end of the war. As a result of these discussions, the Soviet authorities have agreed to make a further 400 medals available.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the oral reply to the hon. Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce), 15 May, Official Report, column 733, which other nations are trying to develop nuclear capability; and what verification problems there are outstanding in threshold nuclear weapons states.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) on 8 June 1990, Official Report, column 738.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is NATO's policy on seeking full or partial reductions in the number of land-based, short-range nuclear weapons in the forthcoming arms negotiations on those weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Arms control remains an integral part of alliance security policy; NATO has therefore made clear that it endorses the United States intention to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on short-range nuclear forces after the conclusion of a treaty limiting conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment as to when NATO's existing short-range, land-based nuclear weapons will become unserviceable and obsolete.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On current estimates it is believed that the Lance missile will be unsustainable much beyond the mid-1990s. Our dual capable artillery guns will be modernised with the introduction of the AS90 self-propelled 155 mm howitzer. However, the serviceability of the United States-owned nuclear warheads and shells for use with these systems is a matter for the United States Government.

Main Battle Tank

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the submissions for the M1 Abrams main battle tank fully satisfy the requirements, as defined in the draft memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom and United States Governments, in so far as existing and proposed projectiles for its main armament are concerned;

(2) what steps have been taken to ensure that the submissions relating to the M1 Abrams main battle tank fully satisfy its requirements for structural armour.

Mr Alan Clark: The information sought on armour and main armament ammunition is sufficiently comprehensive fully to satisfy our requirements for a proper evaluation of the M1 Abrams MBT against the staff requirement for Chieftain replacement.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to ensure that the information made available to his Department, in respect of the reliability of the M1A2 Abrams, Leclerc and Leopard 2 main battle tanks, is entirely comparable with that which has been required from Vickers Defence Systems in respect of Challenger 2.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am satisfied that the information being made available to my Department in respect of the reliability of the overseas contenders for Chieftain Replacement will be entirely comparable with that which has been required from Vickers Defence Systems in respect of Challenger 2.

Defence Equipment Holdings

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's policy towards the annual provision of figures for United Kingdom defence equipment holdings, along the lines of those published in "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts";

(2) whether his Department will publish the latest figures, pursuant to those published in 1988 in "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts" for United Kingdom defence equipment holdings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 15 March, at column 328. There are no plans to publish updated figures for other categories covered in "The Facts", beyond the information already provided in the "Annual Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the United States Government have agreed to assign any sea-launched cruise missiles to NATO (a) in peacetime and (b) in time of crisis;

(2) whether NATO has any plans to integrate United States sea-launched cruise missiles into its targeting plans;

(3) whether NATO has approved a memorandum of agreement implementing the planning process for the Tomahawk land-attack missile/nuclear in support of the NATO alliance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 22 June at column 723.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the efficacy of the non-proliferation treaty since it came into effect.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The non-proliferation treaty is the world's most widely adhered-to arms control treaty, to which three out of the five declared nuclear weapon states are parties. Since 1968, when the treaty was open to signature, no new country has declared itself a nuclear weapon state, and the treaty has helped to ensure that proliferation has not gained respectability.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on pursuing the extension of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom attaches great importance to the widest possible adherence to the non-proliferation treaty, and regularly raises the question of accession to the NPT with non-parties at various levels.

Forces in Europe

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's latest assessment of the balance of total ground forces in the central area of Europe; and how many of the Warsaw pact ground forces are those of the Soviet Union;

(2) how many NATO ground forces are currently stationed in the central area of Europe apart from those belonging to the United States of America.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Taking the "central area" as that covered by the limits on United States and Soviet stationed manpower, as shown in figure 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", we estimate the current balance of ground forces in the central area to be approximately 1·3:1 in favour of the Warsaw pact. Soviet ground forces in this area are currently some 500,000 strong out of a Warsaw pact total of just over 1 million. NATO forces in the same area, apart from the United States, total some 600,000.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to figure 1, page 8, of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", what is his Department's assessment of the balance of manpower between NATO and the Warsaw pact in the central area in the aftermath of the limits imposed by the conventional forces in Europe treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been agreed that United States and Soviet stationed forces in the central area should not in future exceed 195,000 each. It is not yet possible to estimate what the implications for force levels may be of equipment reductions which may be required by a CFE treaty or other national plans.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to figure 1, page 8, of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", how many of the 4 million total armed forces of the Warsaw pact belong to countries other than the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Just a quarter (1,080,000) of the 4 million Warsaw pact armed forces in the Atlantic to the Urals zone belong to non-Soviet Warsaw pact countries.

Soviet Ballistic Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what implications the deployment of additional Soviet ballistic missile defences, beyond those permitted under the terms of the anti-ballistic missile treaty, would have for the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such a question covers a whole range of possibilities. However, we remain confident that our Polaris force and its successor, Trident, will provide an effective deterrent for the foreseeable future.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the statement in paragraph 124, page 14, of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", relating to Trident, what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on reductions in either the number of Trident missiles or the number of Trident warheads within the context of multilateral arms negotiations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The position remains as set out in the paragraph referred to.

United States Strategic Defences

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the United States commitment to deploy strategic defences when they are ready.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government fully support the United States strategic defence initiative (SDI) research programme, which is permitted under the anti-ballistic missile treaty. As the Prime Minister and President Reagan agreed at Camp David in December 1984, SDI-related deployment would, in view of treaty obligations, have to be a matter for negotiation. This remains the position.

Explosion (Deal)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now proposes to make available the conclusions of the inquiry into the explosion at Deal on 22 September 1989; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 23 April 1990 (column 76), a summary of the principal findings of the board of inquiry will be made available to the House of Commons Defence Select Committee when my right hon. Friend has completed his deliberations on these.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

C. J. How

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what periods from January 1982 onwards his Department had direct responsibility for the investment business of the company C. J. How, and any related company.

Mr. Redwood: Under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958, which was repealed on 29 April 1988, the Department was responsible for issuing licences to dealers in securities except where they were members of a recognised association of dealers. The Department did not issue a licence to either C. J. How or C. J. How International.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what periods from January 1982 onwards responsibility for the investment business of the company C. J. How or any related company was vested in (a) the National Association of Security Dealers and Investment Managers, (b) the Securities and Investments Board and (c) the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Organisation.

Mr. Redwood: C. J. How was a member of NASDIM, which on 9 July 1986 became FIMBRA, from 1982 until his membership was terminated in January 1988. Under the Financial Services Act 1986, the main provisions of which came into force on 29 April 1988, any firm wishing to carry on investment business has to be authorised to do so: the Securities and Investments Board is responsible for investigating and, if appropriate, dealing with cases of unauthorised business.

Credit (Availability)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to protect people on low incomes from the problems associated with easily available credit.

Mr. Forth: Major safeguards are already provided for borrowers by existing legislation under which consumers must be informed about the terms of credit agreements before they enter into them. However, the Government have made known their concern about some marketing practices, which suggest among other things that credit is more readily available than it is. We are keeping the situation under review and hope that these problems will be addressed in the code of practice being prepared by the banks and building societies following the report of the committee on banking services law and practice.

Ozone-depleting Chemicals

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of tonnes of ozone-depleting chemicals produced in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: My Department receives data from the European Commission on the production within the Community of various of the substances controlled under the Montreal protocol. The two United Kingdom manufacturers of these substances copy the data they supply to the Commission to my Department and the Department of the Environment on a commercially confidential basis.

My officials have recently received industry data showing that total production of methyl chloroform (1, 1, 1-Trichloroethane) in the main industrialised regions (Western Europe, United States of America, and Japan) for the years 1985-89 was (in '000 tonnes):

	Thousand tonnes
1985	588
1986	609
1987	627
1988	678
1989	718

My Department has no data on the production of HCFCs, or any other ozone-depleting substances.

Recycling

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on grants and loans available for small businesses to invest in plant and machinery for the compaction of metal cans for recycling.

Mr. Forth: Under the enterprise initiative, the Department currently offers a number of schemes which are available to small businesses, including those engaged in recycling. In particular, regional enterprise grants are available in the development areas to help small firms invest and innovate.

Limited Liability Status

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to review the grounds on which limited liability status can be granted.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Cayzer Family

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the implications for investor protection legislation of a redemption reserve held by British and Commonwealth to provide for payments to the Cayzer family.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 June 1990]: None.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which cases Spicer and Oppenheim have supplied inspectors in investigations called for by his Department under the Companies Act.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 June 1990]: None.

Hamilton House Associates

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date, and through which channel, his Department first became aware of problems with the financial services from Hamilton House Associates.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 June 1990]: An allegation was received by the Department in May 1987 about the conduct of one of the directors of Hamilton House Associates Ltd., in the context of a separate business not authorised under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958. The Department concluded that there were no grounds for action under the Act. FIMBRA was also notified.

ENERGY

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ensure that the views of the House are taken into account before any decisions are made on the issues raised in the report of the Hinkley Point C public inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 27 June.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the inspector's report into the Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactor proposal to be completed.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 14 June 1990 at column 287.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost to date incurred by his Department for submitting evidence to the Hinkley Point C public inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: The expenses incurred by the official witnesses and their supporting teams of civil servants in attending the inquiry were about £5,300.

Electricity Generating Capacity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will call for a report on the proposed mothballing of 1,000 MW of electricity generating capacity by National Power at Pembroke and West Thurrock power stations.

Mr. Baldry: This is a commercial matter for National Power.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, further to his reply of 22 June, Official Report, column 719, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, he will list all measures taken so far by the Energy Efficiency Office for the promotion of improvements in energy conservation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since the Energy Efficiency Office was established in 1983, it has offered a substantial range of programmes and initiatives to encourage consumers to improve their energy efficiency.

Initially, the EEO aimed to develop general awareness of the value of energy efficiency through extensive publicity campaigns, particularly during energy efficiency year (1986), and through several specific programmes, among which were:

—the energy efficiency survey scheme for grants towards the cost of independent energy survey;

—the energy efficiency research development and demonstration programmes to help develop and disseminate new energy efficient technology;

—the monitoring and targeting programme to develop energy management systems for 40 sectors of industry;

—support for the energy management movement throughout the United Kingdom.

The EEO's current main programmes are as follows:

—the best practice programme to give independent and authoritative information and advice backed by thorough technical research;

—an enhanced regional programme, stimulating the development and application of energy management skills and techniques;

—a campaign in the public sector with an objective of realising annual energy savings of 15 per cent. within five years;

—proposals (included in the Social Security Bill) for the home energy efficiency scheme to provide grants for basic insulation measures in low income households; this scheme will replace and augment the existing community insulation programme;

—the promotion of combined heat and power.

Among other initiatives, the EEO encourages the development of energy studies in schools, commercially based energy labelling schemes for homes, and standards for energy-consuming appliances. The EEO also publishes an extensive range of technical and non-technical information and guidance.

Elections

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in descending order information available to him on the percentage of the popular vote received by the main governing party on the latest free elections held in each of the NATO and Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures are as follows:

	Per cent.
NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANISATION (NATO)

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the holding of a special conference of states party to the chemical weapons convention at the end of the eighth year after the convention's entry into force.

Mr. Waldegrave: We support the holding of review conferences after a chemical weapons convention has entered into force. Such review meetings of states parties are provided for in the current draft of the convention. We should have no objection to such a meeting taking place at the end of the eighth year. The procedural details for review conferences have yet to be elaborated.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the amendments to the chemical weapons convention draft treaty, proposed in the bilateral chemical weapons agreement by the USSR and United States of America, would have on the existing unreserved commitment of any signatory not to retain any chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: As currently drafted, the chemical weapons convention provides for a transition period of 10 years during which all chemical weapon stocks possessed by states parties will be destroyed. The proposals contained in the US-Soviet joint statement also envisage destruction of all chemical weapon stockpiles in this time frame, provided final destruction is agreed at a review conference at the end of the eighth year after the treaty's entry into force.

Defence Equipment Holdings

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to page 3 of the FCO/NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", whether Her Majesty's Government will provide figures for United Kingdom defence equipment holdings on a regular basis in the future.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer in the House of 8 January. The information that the United Kingdom will provide on a regular basis under a CFE treaty will be made available to Parliament. Additional information may be found in the annual Defence White Paper.

Mr. Garry Maher

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Spanish authorities to ensure that the public prosecutor on Tenerife holds the criminal investigation proceedings into the death on 24 February 1985 of Mr. Garry Maher without further delay.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is a tragic case, but it would be inappropriate for us to try to influence Spanish judicial procedures. It is for the Spanish authorities alone to decide when they are ready to hold criminal investigation proceedings.

Burma

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the status of Aung San Suu Kyi, the detained leader of the National League for Democracy in Burma; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been alleged that Aung San Suu Kyi owes allegiance to a foreign power. In fact, she is a citizen of Burma and has not acquired British citizenship. She is therefore not entitled to the rights and privileges of a British citizen, nor does her marriage to a British citizen of itself confer such rights and privileges on her. She is neither a Commonwealth citizen nor a citizen of a member state of the European Community. As with other aliens in her category under United Kingdom law, she is under a number of disabilities by comparison with British citizens. Most importantly:

(a) she is not entitled to vote in parliamentary or local elections;
(b) she has no right of abode in the United Kingdom and, accordingly, requires leave to enter the United Kingdom and is liable to deportation from the United Kingdom;
(c) she is not eligible for a British passport or for British diplomatic or consular protection overseas;
(d) she is subject to restrictions in certain fields, for example, employment under the Crown.

Aung San Suu Kyi may now apply for British citizenship, on account of her marriage, only by naturalisation under section 6(2) of the British Nationality Act 1981, which is a matter within the discretion of the Home Secretary. She has no right to British citizenship by virtue of her marriage to Dr. Aris, and cannot therefore be said to be entitled to the rights and privileges of a British citizen in the sense of possessing a right to citizenship.

Aung San Suu Kyi's marriage to a British citizen does not in itself entitle her to any social security benefits.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Feed

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances waste products originating from a particular species may be fed back to that species; under what circumstances waste products may be used as feed for species other than that from which the waste originates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Untreated slaughterhouse waste is not fed to animals. Renderers who process animal protein for use in animal feedingstuffs are subject to the requirements of the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989 which requires registration with my Department and microbiological testing. Waste food of animal origin or waste food that has been in contact with material of animal origin must be processed in accordance with the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973 (as amended) before it can be fed to animals. The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1989 prohibits feeding to ruminant animals of protein material derived from ruminants.

Veterinary Product Licensing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to review the system of veterinary product licensing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the animal welfare implications of the trade in live exports.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 28 June, Official Report, column 479.

North-east Drift Net Fishery

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in completion by his scientists of their analysis of the data which have been collected for the review of the north-east drift net fishery.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office on 18 June, Official Report, column 454. Scientists from both the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and my Department have had a great deal of data to collate and analyse on salmon fishing in the areas of England and Scotland covered by this review. The Salmon Act 1986 requires Ministers to report to Parliament as soon as practicable after November of last year. We shall do so.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 2 July 1990

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football Licensing Authority

86. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recruitment procedure to be followed for the chief executive and other staff of the Football Licensing Authority.

Mr Waddington: This will be a matter for the Football Licensing Authority but we expect that the chief executive and other executive staff will be seconded from the civil service, and that other staff will be recruited by the authority locally or by competition as appropriate.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women currently held at Her Majesty's pleasure are allowed to keep their children with them during their detention.

Mr. Mellor: There are no women detained during Her Majesty's pleasure, under section 53(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, or serving life sentences, who currently have their children with them in prison. If the mother of a baby receives a custodial sentence of any length, she may apply to be admitted with her child to a prison mother and baby unit. Approval of such an application depends upon there being an available place and upon the mother's admission being considered to be in the best interests of the child. A child is not normally allowed to remain with its mother in prison beyond the age of 18 months.

Blundeston Prison, Suffolk

Mr David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about staffing levels and industrial relations at Blundeston prison, Suffolk in the light of the present dispute in the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: At present there are 240·5 staff in post at Her Majesty's prison Blundeston. Of these, 149 are officers, including principal and senior officers, compared with the target officer in post figure set for 31 March 1991 of 148.

The Prison Officers Association has not declared a dispute at the prison.

Prison officers voted in June to take national industrial action. A majority of POA members at Blundeston voted in favour of national industrial action.

West Yorkshire Police

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire on the full cost of the police operation at Millfield quarry lagoon, Hurbury, Wakefield on Sunday 17 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire police that the full additional cost of the police operation at Hurbury was £10,073.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter dated 24 May from the hon. Member for South Hams concerning the transfer to Dartmoor prison for Mr. Willcox, currently a prison officer at Ford open prison, west Sussex.

Mr. Mellor: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Offences

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to introduce legislation to make any class of person responsible in law for an offence of which he had no prior knowledge.

Mr. Waddington: The criminal law contains a range of provisions establishing liability, from knowing of and intending to commit an offence, to offences of strict liability not requiring conscious knowledge, for instance those involving motor vehicle defects. If the hon. Gentleman has a particular legislative proposal in mind perhaps he would let me know of his precise concern.

TVS Entertainment Ltd.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether he intends to investigate allegations of forged documents relating to TVS Entertainment Ltd.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis this matter is now the subject of a police investigation.

Football Match Tickets (Sales)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department intends to implement the recommendation contained in Lord Justice Taylor's final report into the Hillsborough disaster that it should be made an offence to sell tickets on the day of a football match without authority from the home club to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We hope to reach a conclusion shortly on whether to create such an offence.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Waddington: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with Public Record Office inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Documents originating from the Home Office are recorded on official files which are indexed according to standard subject headings.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of, and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Waddington: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with its duties under the Act, the Department ensures that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Trafalgar Square (Incidents)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 35, if he is able to provide the details of age, sex, offence, last known address and prison or place of confinement of those people who were remanded and are still remaining in custody following the incidents in Trafalgar square on 31 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Birmingham Six

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the Devon and Cornwall police are working on the inquiry into the Birmingham pub-bombing cases.

Mr. Waddington: I understand from the chief constable of the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary that 45 police officers from that force are currently engaged in carrying out inquiries into various matters which have been raised about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the trial Judge, Lord Bridge, has been consulted either by his Department or by any of the various inquiries since 1986 into the safety of the Birmingham pub-bombing convictions.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference of the inquiry by the Devon and Cornwall police into the Birmingham pub-bombing convictions; and if they have been amended since the inquiry was first commissioned.

Mr. Waddington: In March 1990, I asked the chief constable of the West Midlands police for a report on a number of matters arising out of representations made by the solicitor acting on behalf of the Birmingham Six. Since then, I have asked the chief constable for a report on a number of further matters which have been raised with him about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six. The chief constable has asked the Devon and Cornwall constabulary to undertake inquiries on my behalf.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps the Home Office has taken to satisfy itself that the named day-to-day care person, with a statutory responsibility under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, within the National Institute for Medical Research, carried out his or her duties to the full, relating to Professor Feldberg's experiments;

(2) what steps the Home Office has taken to satisfy itself that the named veterinarian, with a statutory responsibility under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, within the National Institute for Medical Research, carried out his or her duties to the full relating to Professor Feldberg's experiments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It would not be right to make any comment on matters such as these while the Medical Research Council is conducting an inquiry into the circumstances which gave rise to the allegations about the work carried out by Professor Feldberg.

Homosexuals

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government policy on the treatment of lesbians and gay men under the law.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 1 February 1990 at columns 304-6, and to my letter to him of 1 June 1990, a copy of which is in the Library.

"The Sentence of the Court"

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish a new edition of the handbook, "The Sentence of the Court".

Mr. Waddington: I am glad to say that a new edition is published today and is being distributed to all judges and magistrates. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to announce any further appointments to the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am pleased to be able to announce the appointment to the Animal Procedures Committee of Professor Margaret Brazier, of the department of law, university of Manchester and Professor Onora O'Neill, of the department of philosophy, university of Essex. I am grateful to Professor Brazier and Professor O'Neill for agreeing to serve on this committee.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation are awaiting decision at the latest available date and at each quarter since 31 December 1987; what is the average time taken from receipt of application to taking a decision on each application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The available information about outstanding cases relates to applications in the nationality division caseworking groups and is in the table. In addition, on 31 December 1987, there were an estimated 210,000 applications in Lunar house that had not reached caseworking groups, and these were transferred to the nationality division over the course of the next 18 months.

Citizenship applications outstanding in caseworking groups

	Registration	Naturalisation	Total
December 1987	n/a	n/a	55,374
March 1988	45,723	28,674	74,397
June 1988	n/a	n/a	79,143
September 1988	n/a	n/a	95,971
December 1988	n/a	n/a	119,276
March 1989	84,438	41,154	125,592
June 1989	86,452	52,318	138,770
September 1989	70,858	63,877	134,735
December 1989	55,239	64,930	120,169
March 1990	38,832	65,050	103,882
May 1990	33,755	64,273	98,028

n/a = not available

The average processing times for cases completed in May 1990 was 24 months for registrations and 29 months for naturalisations. We aim to reduce these waiting times as soon as practicable.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxpayers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been taken out of tax over the past 11 years; if he has any plans to take more people out of tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: If the 1978-79 income tax regime were reintroduced after indexation of thresholds to 1990-91 levels, the number of individual taxpayers would increase by a little under 2 million. Tax thresholds have been increased by almost 25 per cent. in real terms under this Government. We shall continue to review their levels in the future.

Taxation (Performers)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what authority the Inland Revenue has decided to distinguish between established performers/artists who are being taxed under schedule D and new performers/artists who are to be taxed under schedule E;

(2) with whom the Inland Revenue has agreed a gradual transition to the schedule E treatment of performers.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The Inland Revenue has a duty to implement tax law. The change in the tax treatment of certain performers/artists is based on decisions made in the courts. The arrangements to put their tax treatment on to the correct basis over a transitional period were made by the Inland Revenue, with the approval of Treasury Ministers, under its powers for the general "care and management of the income tax in the Taxes Management Act 1970.

These arrangements have been discussed, over an extended period, with representatives of all sides of the theatre industry and take into account their concern that an abrupt change to schedule E for all those involved could be disruptive to the industry, and, in some cases, cause hardship.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what relative consideration the Inland Revenue has given to the cases of Fall v. Hitchen and Davies v. Braithwaite, in deciding whether schedule E was the correct schedule of charge for income tax for performers and artists undertaking theatrical engagements;

(2) on what legal authority the Inland Revenue based its claim that generally performers and artists undertaking theatrical engagements under standard contracts are, in law, employees.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 June 1990]: I understand that the Inland Revenue's view on the taxation position of theatrical performers working under standard contracts is based on legal advice they have received relating to the 1972 Fall v Hitchen High Court case, which indicated that a typical standard contract of engagement, based on terms agreed between Equity and theatre managements, was a contract of employment, and a number of subsequent Court decisions on the general issue of whether people are employees or self-employed. The Revenue has explained its views on these issues to the theatre industry on several occasions in the past.

In Fall v Hitchen the High Court considered, and distinguished, the earlier judgment in Davis v Braithwaite. I understand that the Revenue took both cases, and other relevant cases, fully into account in forming their views on the correct tax treatment of theatrical performers.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors led to the revision of the figures for manufacturing investment in the north-east for the years 1979 to 1987 between the answer of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South of 6 June 1989, Official Report, column 70, and his answer of 25 June 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The figures have not been revised. As stated in these replies the information provided on 6 June 1989 was based on constant 1985 prices while that provided on 25 June was based on current prices. The earlier constant price figures used price indices which are applicable to manufacturing investment for the United Kingdom as a whole. The Central Statistical Office, which now has responsibility for the figures, considers these may be inappropriate for individual regions because of the different mix of industries and the possibility of differing prices and price movements in each. There are no regional price indices.

Natural Beauty Products, Bridgend

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his statement of 18 June, Official Report, columns 777-80, if he will indicate by weight and volume the loaded capacity of the vehicles which arrived at the Natural Beauty Products in Bridgend on 2 February, and the assessment the value added tax official then made of the weight, and value, actual and auction, volume, of the finished goods, raw materials, factory equipment and office equipment which he intended to remove from the factory.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 28 June 1990]: Customs and Excise had no responsibility for any vehicle that arrived at Natural Beauty Products in Bridgend on 24 February.

On 1 February, Customs instructed the bailiff to commence removal of the finished goods subject to distraint. Although a Ford Transit van and Ford Cargo 60 cwt. pantechnicon called to the premises, only the latter was used to remove the goods. On 2 February a Ford Cargo lorry and a furniture removal van arrived at the pemises but no goods were removed because of the prior appointment of an administrative receiver. On both these dates the provision of the transport was arranged by the bailiff.

Customs and Excise made no assessment of the weight of the goods subject to the levy. The total volume was estimated to require four 60 cwt. pantechnicons to complete the removal of all items subject to distraint.

The administrative receiver's estimate of the book value of the finished goods, raw materials, factory equipment and office equipment was £228,875. No deduction was made for possible tax liability and no account was taken of any other expenses or charges that may accrue on their disposal. The estimated auction value was £29,200.

HEALTH

Community Care

84. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation he has had regarding funding for care in the community in future years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have discussed all aspects of community care, including funding, with a wide range of interested organisations.

Wheelchairs

85. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to consider how best to fund a scheme to look at the design and provision of wheelchairs for use on public transport services.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to fund such a scheme. The accommodation of wheelchairs on public transport is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

National Assistance Act

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received advocating the replacement of section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948;

(2) what plans he has to reform section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948.

Mr. Dorrell: Representations were received in the form of amendments to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, and correspondence from Age Concern, (England).

We have no plans to reform section 47 but we shall be keeping the operation of these provisions under review as our new community care arrangements take effect.

HIV

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the total number of people who have been infected with HIV.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest estimate of the total number of people who have been infected with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) in England and Wales was published by the Public Health Laboratory Service in January 1990 as a supplement to the communicable disease report. In this report, "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in England and Wales to end 1993" (the Day report), it was estimated that there were between 12,250 and 26,400 HIV-infected people in England and Wales at the end of 1988.

A separate group is currently preparing new estimates of short-term predictions of HIV incidence and prevalence estimates of the numbers of AIDS cases in Scotland as a revision of the earlier report of national working party on health service implications of HIV infection (the Tayler report). Copies of both the Day and Tayler reports are available in the Library.

Reported incidence in Northern Ireland is too low to make accurate estimates of the likely spread of HIV infection.

Results from the HIV prevalence monitoring programme using the unlinked anonymous technique will help to reduce uncertainty in these estimates.

Dental Laboratories

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the proportion of the total fees paid to dentists under the national health service which is attributable to dental laboratory costs; and what arrangements exist to ensure that such proportion is duly paid to the laboratories.

Mr. Dorrell: In the current scale of fees for national health service dental treatment which came into effect on 1 October 1989, approximately 18 per cent. of the total fees to be paid to dentists is attributable to dental laboratory costs. The price which individual dentists pay for laboratory-made dental appliances is, however, entirely a private arrangement between the dentist and the laboratory concerned.

GPs (Home Visits)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce a charge for general practitioner home visits.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Child Migrants Trust

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department gives to the Child Migrants Trust; and if he will make a statement regarding future developments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 27 June at column 249.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which officials at national, regional or local level are responsible for drawing up rules for family practitioner committees on the appointment of their chief executive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 25 June at column 88.

Cigarette Advertisements

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to implement the recommendation of the third report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship that all cigarette advertisements should carry a health warning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This was not a formal recommendation of the committee as a whole, but the view of the chairman expressed in his foreword. The Government fully accept the chairman's concerns, and is currently negotiating with the tobacco industry on this matter. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

NHS Trusts

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish any written evidence given by the national health service trusts unit to district health authorities, regional health authorities, project managers or trust sponsors on the preparation or revision of draft business plans for units seeking self-governing status; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to publish a compendium on national health service trusts in the autumn, which will update and bring together advice on the establishment and operation of NHS trusts which has been provided by the Department.

Social Work

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on general social work practice within local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department promotes effective and efficient social work by working constructively with local authorities, and representatives of the professions concerned, to promote the development of services which will provide quality of care combined with value for money for clients.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has made any estimate of the possible cash savings arising as a result of the assessment and case management procedure contained in the Government's community care proposals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We expect local authorities to make more cost effective use of resources as they develop their ability to offer a more individual response to clients' needs through improved procedures for assessment and case management. The extent to which this will be achieved will depend on the decisions of individual authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external evaluation of his Department's draft guidance on the implementation of the Government's proposals on community care took place between the deliberations of the guidance working parties and their despatch to interested organisations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representatives from external organisations contributed to the community care development project groups whose reports helped to inform the draft guidance. The Department has recently sent this draft guidance for formal consultation to a wide range of external bodies involved in community care services. These include the local authority associations, the Association of Directors of Social Services, national health service regional general managers, the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, representative organisations of the medical and nursing professions and other representative organisations.

TRANSPORT

Dial-a-Ride

82. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from dial-a-ride, regarding transport arrangements for the disabled; and what measures he intends to introduce.

Mr. Freeman: There are many dial-a-ride and similar services for people with disabilities in operation all over the country. Outside London their funding and development is a matter for local authorities. London Transport has responsibility for administering the scheme in London.

Disabled People (Transport Access)

83. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to hold discussions with United Kingdom passenger transport authorities on improvements in access by disabled citizens to fixed and mobile facilities.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is in regular contact, both direct and through the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, with transport authorities and operators throughout the country to promote ways of improving access for people with disabilities both to vehicles and systems.

London Underground

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State how many times in the last month the fire brigade has been called to be in attendance at a London underground station.

Mr. Freeman: London Underground tells me that its record consists of four-week periods rather than calendar months. Figures are not yet available for the whole of the four-week period ending 23 June 1990, but from 27 May to 21 June the fire brigade was called to be in attendance at a London underground station on 474 occasions. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 8 May, Official Report, column 7.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to visit the north-west to discuss with interested parties the maximisation of benefit from the channel tunnel to the region.

Mr. Freeman: I look forward to several visits to the north-west and would be happy to meet my hon. Friend.

Transport Infrastructure, Essex

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the adequacy of the transport infrastructure in Essex.

Mr. Atkins: My hon. Friend's report entitled "South Essex Transport—A Preliminary Report" is the only representation I have received on this matter. It is being considered by my officials and a full reply will be sent shortly.

Beaches

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory provisions relating to vehicular access to public beaches.

Mr. Atkins: No public general Act contains any provision relating expressly to such access.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a requirement that vehicles satisfy a maximum exhaust carbon emission test as part of the MOT test.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 28 June, Official Report, column 305.

Concessionary Fares

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in light of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh borough council, what advice he is now offering to transport undertakings, in respect of concessionary fares for elderly people.

Mr. Freeman: This decision has no relevance for local authority concessionary fares schemes for people of pensionable age, which are based on statutory provision unaffected by the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Railways

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total financial subvention from public funds for running the railways in each of the EC countries; and how many miles of track each country has.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent comprehensive information available to my Department on the public subsidy levels of the European Community's railway systems is contained in the 10th Commission report on the transposed annual accounts of railway undertakings for 1986 [COM (89) 364 final]. These have been converted to sterling on purchasing power parity, together with figures for route mileage; track mileage figures are not available.

Country	Support (£ million sterling)	Route mileage
Belgium	454	2,221
Denmark	158	1,547
France	1,845	21,602
Greece	123	1,549
Ireland	92	1,215
Italy	4,403	10,009
Luxembourg	83	170
Netherlands	319	1,766
Portugal	161	2,255
United Kingdom	815	10,374
West Germany	2,138	17,052

Notes:

1. COM (89) 364 does not include details in respect of Spain, which was not a member of the EC in 1986. The figure for route mileage in Spain is 7,844.
2. The subsidy figure for the United Kingdom includes support for the British Railways Board (£810 million) and for the Northern Ireland Railway Company (£5 million).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his response to proposals for an integrated high speed rail network to service United Kingdom industry and commerce from the year 2000 onwards.

Mr. Freeman: I will be glad to look at any proposals put to me by British Rail for high-speed passenger services.

Wrentham Bypass

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the status, programming, funding and timetabling of the proposed by-pass of Wrentham, on the A12 in Suffolk.

Mr. Atkins: Wrentham by-pass forms part of my Department's proposals for the A12, Saxmundham by-pass to the Lowestoft widening scheme, which was included in the report "Trunk Roads, England: Into the 1990s" published earlier this year. The design commission for part of the scheme including a by-pass of Wrentham, has been awarded by the Department to Suffolk county council. Council staff will carry out preliminary investigation of the options for a dual carriageway by-pass before the public are consulted next year. Announcement of a preferred route will follow. Timing of construction will be dependent on the completion of the remaining statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Most individual documents are not separately registered. Documents are lodged on registered files which are part of a structured filing system which is regulated by the Department's chief registrar.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Atkins: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of, and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Atkins: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with duties under the Act, the Department is obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

A40 (Improvement)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 June to the hon. Member for Uxbridge, what were the reasons for the increase in the estimated cost of the A40 Western avenue improvement at the junction with Long lane, Hillingdon from £18·2 million between November 1987 at 1986 prices to £34·1 million at 1987 prices.

Mr. Atkins: The most significant element in the increase in the estimated cost of constructing the scheme was that the cost of piling and structural work in London has exceeded the rate of inflation. In addition, there were increases in the cost of London Underground's scheme to reconstruct Hillingdon station to higher, more up to date standards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Greece

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the United Kingdom has taken within the Council of Ministers of the European Community to urge Greece to release the 250 conscientious objectors detained in Avlona military prison.

Mr. Maude: None. Under Greece's military service provisions, conscientious objectors can opt for unarmed military service of double the annual period. But it is an offence to refuse to do military service altogether.

NATO Summit

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed during the recent NATO Foreign Ministers meeting at Turnberry.

Mr. Waldegrave: The meeting usefully prepared the ground for discussion at this week's NATO summit, on how NATO should adapt to changing times. We also discussed the external aspects of German unification; the future of CSCE; and current arms control issues. A copy of the communiqué has been placed in the Library of the House.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken to issue explanatory statements by entry clearance offices following receipt of an appeal or request to provide one.

Mr. Sainsbury: The majority of posts are able to meet our targets of despatching settlement appeals to the appellate authorities within three months of the date of receipt and visit appeals within one month. Staffing levels are being increased at the few posts which, because of growing demand for visas, have been unable to meet these targets during the past year.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of, and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Sainsbury: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Documents in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are normally placed on departmental files and processed in accordance with departmental instructions and registry practices.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter of 25 June to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, whether he has received any representations from institutions in other European countries about the recent changes in the natural history museum.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not received any such representations. We understand that the museum will continue to meet its statutory national and international obligations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Danny McNamee

Mr. Terry Field: To ask the Attorney-General why the appeal on behalf of Danny McNamee currently imprisoned in Parkhurst prison was cancelled for July and put back to November; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The listing of cases in the Court of Appeal criminal division is entirely a matter for the Court. I understand that Mr. McNamee's application for leave to appeal against conviction was originally listed to be heard by the court on 16 July but was relisted for 12 November, with the agreement of the parties, to enable the court to deal with another case on 16 July.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE Results

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by county education authority in England, in rank order, the percentage of all pupils gaining a higher grade GCSE pass A to C in (a) a modern European language, (b) mathematics and (c) English, in 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information for 1989 is not yet available. The table gives information for school leavers, for county and metropolitan local education authorities, aggregated over the three years 1986-88 to reduce sampling error.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order the percentage of all pupils gaining five or more higher grades A to C at GCSE in 1989, by county education authority in England.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information for 1989 is not yet available. For the latest available information I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Nicholas Bennett) on 18 January 1990, Official Report, column 333.

Sciences

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps have been taken to ensure that there is ample provision within the national curriculum to allow for taking the three main sciences separately to O-level standard.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum for science sets out a balanced science curriculum. This includes the material from the three main sciences appropriate at GCSE level as a basis for further study in the separate sciences at A-level. It will be possible for schools to cover the curriculum through separate subject science teaching but decisions on the proposed arrangements for assessment of science at age 16 have not yet been taken.

Education Expenditure

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any evidence of links between spending on education, excluding teachers' salaries, and achievements by children at nine, 13, 16 and 18 years plus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any such evidence. Socio-economic background is known to be linked with examination achievement at 16 and 18 years plus; research has indicated that there is no marked correlation between education spending and pupils' achievements once allowance has been made for these links.

Higher Education

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the number of home students currently in higher education, both full-time and sandwich students other than postgraduates in Scotland, England, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole;

(2) what is the number of full-time home postgraduate students studying at levels beyond first degree in Scotland, England, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows.

Home students in higher education in the United Kingdom by country of study and level of courses, 1987-88

Country of study	Postgraduate	First degree and other higher education	Total
England	37·7	405·6	443·2
Wales	2·6	27·1	29·7
Scotland	6·0	70·8	76·8
Northern Ireland[1]	1·3	14·5	15·8
United Kingdom	47·6	517·9	565·5

Derby City Technology College

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he is using to decide on the establishment of a city technology college in Derby.

Mrs. Rumbold: The criteria for choice of city technology college locations are set out in the booklet "City Technology Colleges—A New Choice of School", published in October 1986. This is available in the Library. My right hon. Friend will make his decision with regard to these criteria and in the light of comments received during the consultation he is currently undertaking with interested parties in the area.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much private sector money has been (a) pledged and (b) received for the proposed city technology college in Derby.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of £1·15 million has so far been promised by the private sector for the proposed Derby city technology college. Of this sum, £233,000 has been received.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that progress regarding planning permission for the land for the city technology college in Derby is halted pending the conclusion of the consultation process.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has taken no such steps.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much public sector money has been allocated for the proposed city technology college in Derby.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total of public sector money spent upon the proposed city technology college in Derby amounted to £1·145 million by the end of May 1990. Apart from some small administrative costs, no further funds have been, or will be, allocated until my right hon. Friend has made his decision upon the proposal.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue guidelines for consultation for the establishment of a city technology college; and if he will lay them before Parliament.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will be issuing no such guidelines. He will take decisions concerning the proposals to establish city technology colleges on which he is currently consulting in the light of all comments received from any interested parties.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's library maintains an online database which records every document published by the Department. Comprehensive printed lists are generated each month and cumulated annually. They are available to the public.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mrs. Rumbold: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made for calculating the general schools budget of a local education authority with regard to funding of grant-maintained schools should all the schools within that local education authority become grant maintained.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will keep in mind the prospective need for such arrangements as the grant-maintained sector grows.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of those primary schools which (a) have closed in England during the last three years, (b) have been considered by him and their closure approved and (c) have been considered by him and their closure rescinded; and if he will give for each school the number of pupils attending.

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I have today written to the hon. Member with the information he requested. Copies have been placed in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My office is situated in the Cabinet Office, which complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspection officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by the Duchy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Each outgoing document from my private office is recorded in a document register. Each document is given a unique number and various details are recorded such as the date of the letter, security classification, subject, to whom the document was referred to and its file number.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passsed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained in full, (d) retained in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No Privy Council Office document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with the duties under the Act, my Department ensures all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Privy Council Office complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Privy Council Office registry operates a numerical cataloguing system to classify and record documents by subject matter, for example, the relevant Act of Parliament in the case of papers relating to the discharge of statutory function, or the name of the relevant organisation in the case of charter matters. My office and that of the Lord Privy Seal have separate sub-systems for registering papers, also by subject.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fees Office

Mr. Stern: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what assessment has been made of the adequacy of the equipment and staffing numbers available to the Fees Office.

Mr. Beith: The number and grades of staff in the Fees Office, as in other offices and Departments of the House, are periodically reviewed by the Staff Inspector; and his recommendations, and those of the Board of Management, are submitted for consideration by the Commission. The Staff Inspector has recently completed a review of the staffing complement of the Fees Office at the grade of higher executive officer and below. His report will be considered by the Commission in due course, after appropriate consultation with the relevant trade unions and management. Computers and similar equipment are supplied to the Fees Office on the basis of the needs identified by the Accountant and the Head of the Administration Department and on the advice of the Computer Officer. I am not aware of any inadequacies in the staffing and equipment of the Fees Office that are not currently being addressed through these well-established procedures.

PRIME MINISTER

NATO Meeting

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Prime Minister what was discussed during her visit on 7 June to the NATO Ministers meeting.

The Prime Minister: I held a short meeting with the United States Secretary of State, during which he briefed me on the United States-Soviet meeting in Washington. I then made a speech over lunch with NATO Foreign Ministers, before leaving for the Soviet Union. A copy of my speech has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister which non-civil-service special advisers accompanied her on official visits abroad on each of the last 11 years; and what was their cost to public funds, in real terms.

The Prime Minister: For years before 1987-88 the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Since 1 April 1987, no special adviser who is not a career civil servant has accompanied me on an official visit abroad.

European Council, Dublin

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to paragraph 2 of annex 1 of the communiqué of the Dublin European Council she will place in the Library the suggestions and written contributions submitted by member states, together with the analysis of the issues made by the Foreign Ministers of the member states.

The Prime Minister: The examination and analysis carried out by the Foreign Ministers, as requested by the 28 April meeting of the European Council in Dublin, is contained in annex I of the Presidency conclusions. No other document was prepared. It is for the governments concerned to decide whether they wish to make public their written contributions to that examination.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with President Gorbachev in Moscow, she discussed the forthcoming fourth quinquennial review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister what systems she employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by her office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Documents to and from my office are dealt with in accordance with established registry practices.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria she uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

The Prime Minister: The guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 she estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Records Office in censored form, (c) retained in full, (d) retained in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

The Prime Minister: No document falls for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

European Council, Dublin

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister whether she supported the re-appointment of Mr. Jacques Delors as president of the European Commission at the meeting of the European Council in Dublin; what alternative candidates were considered; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I seconded the presidency's proposal to re-appoint Mr. Jacques Delors as President of the European Commission for a further two years, which was carried by acclaim.

Gifts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all gifts received in her official capacity from (a) domestic and (b) overseas sources within the last 12 months; what procedure exists for receiving and documenting such gifts; and what becomes of them.

The Prime Minister: No.

Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to investigate the document, sent to her by Colin Wallace on 10 June alleging links between Charles Haughey and the IRA.

The Prime Minister: A reply will be sent on my behalf to Mr. Wallace's letter of 10 June.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessments under Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at all workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Curry: The responsibility for complying with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH) within the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has been delegated to line managers who are familiar with local working arrangements and potential hazards. Technical assistance is available both from safety officers on their staff and from the departmental health and safety unit.

COSHH assessments of work activities which are liable to expose Ministry employees to substances hazardous to health have been undertaken both in respect of premises which are occupied by the Ministry and in respect of premises which are occupied by third parties but where Ministry employees use or may be exposed to such substances.

Detailed records are not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

The COSHH regulations impose a commitment to review assessments and this is a process which continues within the Ministry.

Waste Management

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions had been taken by his Department since the publication of the seventh report of the Royal Commission on environmental protection in response to its recommendations in respect of (a) independent assessments of the performance of waste treatment plant, (b) the resources needed by the farm waste unit and (c) the need for a review of the advisory material on waste management.

Mr. Curry: The Department provides a service to manufacturers for the independent assessment of the performance of waste treatment equipment and storage facilities. In 1987, the farm and countryside service was established within ADAS and the farm waste unit was incorporated within the mechanisation discipline of that service. This has strengthened the Ministry's ability to provide advice on environmental issues including farm waste disposal. The Department published, in 1985, the code of good agricultural practice which provides guidance to farmers on ways to reduce the risk of farm pollution of water courses.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount paid to farmers under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme in each of the designated areas; what is his estimate of the total savings in common agricultural policy expenditure arising from the scheme in each area; and what was the total amount received from the EEC to offset the payments made.

Mr. Curry: The costs of the annual payments made to farmers who signed ESA agreements up to 31 March 1990 are shown for the 10 English ESAs in the table. The EC reimbursed £0·762 million towards ESA payments made during the calendar year ending 31 December 1989. The economic studies which will throw light on any savings made under the CAP are not yet complete.

Scrapie

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has investigated the possibility that the scrapie agent could be transmitted to cattle through contact with the scrapie-infected placenta of ewes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence that such transmission occurs. If it does, it is apparently of no consequence since sheep and cattle have been in close contact for many years without a scrapie-like disease becoming established in cattle in the past. Epidemiological studies have show that BSE was most probably caused by feeding cattle with compound feedstuffs containing protein derived from scrapie-infected sheep.

Potato Marketing Board

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of the members, and the organisations they represent, of the joint consultative committee of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: Membership of the committee is as follows:

Sir Michael Franklin KCB, CMG	Independent Chairman
Mrs. M. Barnett	PMB Consumers Liaison Committee
Mrs. H. Millar	National Consumer Council
Mr. L. G. Price	Retail Fruit Trade Federation
Mr. R. Murdy	British Retailers Association
Mr. R. Newborough	Produce Packaging and Marketing Association
Mr. J. McArthur	Scottish Potato Trades Association
Mr. K. G. Axworthy	National Federation of Fish Friers
Mr. T. Charlesworth Mr. C. M. A. McCarthy	Potato Processors Association
Mr. C. W. Login	National Joint Council of British Potato and Vegetable Merchants Association
Mr. R. Pooley	Federation of Agriculture Co-operatives UK
Mr. J. Arbuckle	National Farmers Union of Scotland
Mr. D. J. T. Piccaver Mr. J. H. Gittins	National Farmers Union of England and Wales
Mr. D. B. Sinclair Mr. F. C. Newbold Mr. C. A. Strawson	Potato Marketing Board

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will refer back to the Potato Marketing Board the proposed amendments to the existing potato marketing scheme.

Mr. Curry: No. The board's proposals were duly submitted to me after full consultation with the industry, and will be implemented soon.

Animal Classification

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to persuade his EC counterparts to change the classification of animals from agricultural products to sentient beings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I fully accept that animals need proper care and must not be treated in the same way as inanimate goods. Rather than press for a new classification, however, the Government prefer to concentrate on negotiating tangible and enforceable welfare safeguards in the Community on protection of animals on farms, during transport and at the place of slaughter.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department follows a comprehensive procedure for the documents it generates both to meet the requirements of the Public Records Acts and to ensure uniformity of treatment throughout. Documents are allocated to files which are identified by a subject code and number. Within files each document is individually numbered. The movement of all files is recorded.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Curry: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on the the Public Record Office.

Mr. Curry: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Stubble Burning

Mr. Bright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the criteria for temporary exemptions from the proposed ban under the Environmental Protection Bill's provisions on stubble burning.

Mr. Curry: Decisions on the need for an extent of any temporary exemptions can only be taken once the ban is in place and in the light of circumstances affecting particular crops in particular areas and particular weather conditions. I expect such exemptions to be strictly limited to exceptional circumstances.

EC Extensification Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for implementing the European Community extensification scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friends and I have decided to introduce pilot extensification schemes for beef and sheep under the Community rules. Cash incentives will be made available to about 100 participating producers in selected livestock areas who are prepared to reduce their production by at least 20 per cent. over a period of five years. Apart from reducing livestock production on these farms, the schemes should bring environmental benefits through the less-intensive use of land and a reduced requirement for fertilisers and pesticides. I shall place in the Library information on the rules of the scheme.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-how Fund

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what ways were small companies being encouraged to be involved in the range of activities under the know-how fund for Poland and Hungary; what procedures a small company needs to go through to be involved in this project; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have already had a large number of applications from small firms inquiring about opportunities under the know-how fund. Many of the applications are in the field of management training and we will soon be evaluating these proposals in the light of various managment sector missions that we have sent to eastern Europe.

There are also opportunities for small and medium firms to benefit from two recently inaugurated schemes, one for assistance with pre-feasibility investment schemes, the other for assistance with joint venture training.

Companies should apply to the joint assessment unit in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office if their interest lies in any of these areas.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on activities to date of the know-how fund.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many separate projects have been identified under the know-how fund for eastern Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 14 March at column 236, and to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock) on 13 June at column 213. Seventy-nine projects were listed in those two replies. Since then we have agreed the following projects:

Czechoslovakia

A conference on privatisation to be held in Prague in September—26,000.

Contribution to the United Kingdom transport costs of Czechoslovak agricultural students undertaking practical attachments with British farmers—£1,000.

Symposium on the construction sector to be held in Prague in July—£5,000.

Hungary

Co-operation between the Open University and the Hungarian Open Business School—£56,000.

Visit of both Hungarian State Insurance Supervisors to the United Kingdom—£4,000.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether aid for developing countries to adopt chlorofluorocarbons substitutes will be additional to the current aid budget; and if he has anything to add to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 343, concerning the amount of aid to be given for this purpose over the next three years.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain's contribution of up to $15 million to the funding mechanism to help developing countries meet their obligations under the strengthened Montreal protocol will be separate from the aid budget to developing countries. It will form part of a new and separate item in the ODA's expenditure plans.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on which councils in Wales are requiring payment of the poll tax in (a) 12 instalments and (b) 10 instalments.

Mr. Grist: Under the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989, charging authorities are permitted to enter into agreements with chargepayers for payment of community charges other than in accordance with the instalments scheme prescribed in those regulations. Information about the use made of these powers is not held centrally.

Tourism

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales representations he has received concerning the development of gites type tourist facilities in rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations. The Wales tourist board's "Hafod" promotion of high-quality self-catering accommodation in rural areas forms part of the board's overall rural marketing strategy, but cannot be directly compared to gites type accommodation, which is of more variable quality.

The Wales tourist board examined the possibility of creating a gites type system for Wales in 1982, but concluded that the general standards of accommodation would be unlikely to reach an acceptable level.

Mental Health

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out in full the terms of reference for the recent study undertaken on behalf of the Welsh Office by the University of Manchester in relation to the development of the all-Wales strategy for mental health.

Mr. Grist: The study has been commissioned to show, with particular reference to the work of social services departments, the extent to which current services conform to the objectives of the all-Wales mental illness strategy and to indentify factors which either promote or inhibit its fulfilment.

Health Organisations

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list any new bodies, joint committees or co-ordinating organisations which he intends shall be established in Wales, or have already been established, whether on an all-Wales basis or on a regional or local basis, in respect of the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, "Working for Patients", "Caring for People" and associated Government initiatives.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the details he has sought on the organisational framework for implementing the White Paper proposals and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Health Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the district health authorities in Wales which have completed their register of capital assets; and if he will give the number of entries made on each register.

Mr. Grist: All health authorities with the exception of Clwyd and Gwynedd have completed their capital asset registers. Clwyd health authority has listed all its assets, but some 20 per cent. of its non-property assets have yet to be valued. Gwynedd has listed 95 per cent. of its assets and valued 90 per cent. Details of the numbers of entries included in each register are not held centrally.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales under what circumstances he would allow a higher than normal proportion of any capital receipts accruing to any district health authority in Wales to be used in respect of revenue expenditure; and what process would have to be followed on seeking such approval.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 29 June 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the gross revenue expenditure of each district health authority in 1982-83 and 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Accounts information for 1989-90 is not yet available. The gross revenue expenditure of each district health authority in 1982-83 was as follows:

	£000
Clwyd	64,286
East Dyfed	39,797
Gwent	79,892
Gwynedd	37,233
Mid Glamorgan	91,103

Nurses

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grading appeals in respect of nursing staff have been successful in (a) Wales and (b) the East Dyfed health authority.

Mr. Grist: Latest information on the number of successful grading appeals made at local level to employing authorities is as follows:

	Number
Wales	482
East Dyfed	58

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grading appeals in respect of nursing staff in (a) Wales and (b) the East Dyfed health authority are outstanding.

Mr. Grist: Latest information on the number of outstanding regrading appeals made at local level to employing authorities is as follows:

	Number
Wales	3,088
East Dyfed	177

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average time a patient awaited treatment in each Welsh district health authority in March 1982 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Grist: Median waiting times are usually calculated on a calendar year basis. The figures given in the table relate to in-patients and day cases admitted as waiting list cases and discharged during 1982 and 1989.

Median waiting times (days)

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the cost to public funds of the proposed takeover of the Corlan housing association and associated companies by Wales and West housing association.

Mr. Grist: The long-term cost to public funds is expected to be nil. However certain moneys owed to Housing for Wales by the Corlan housing association are not expected to be repaid in the current financial year and are being rescheduled as a short term interest bearing loan.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received relating to the finances of the Corlan housing association and its proposed takeover by Wales and West housing association.

Mr. Grist: In all, 20 letters and five petitions have been received. My right hon. Friend has met with a deputation representing the staff and tenants of the association.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether information arising from the HACAS inquiry into the financial crisis at the Corlan housing association has been supplied to (a) the South Wales constabulary, (b) the Director of Public Prosecutions and (c) the Serious Fraud Office.

Mr. Grist: The inquiry instituted by Housing for Wales into the affairs of the Corlan housing association is continuing.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the impact on the number of new houses and flats to be constructed in the social housing category in Wales in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, of the finances of the Corlan housing association and its proposed takeover by Wales and West housing association.

Mr. Grist: Housing for Wales has made alternative arrangements for the completion of grant aided schemes under construction by the Corlan housing association. The social housing programme is not expected to be significantly affected; the completion of some schemes will be delayed by a few weeks beyond the date originally anticipated.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to place a copy of the HACAS report into the financing at Corlan housing association in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Grist: Housing for Wales is responsible for the inquiry into the affairs of the Corlan housing association. It is not customary to publish reports of inquiries carried out under section 28 of the Housing Associations Act 1985.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Copies of documents created by my Department are as a general rule placed on numbered registered files which are indexed by subject.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanant preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with Public Record Office inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. David Hunt: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what what the number of (a) nurses and midwives, (b) doctors and dentists and (c) all direct care staff, including (a) and (b) for each district health authority in: (a) 1982 and (b) 1990, expressed as whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Grist: The available information is given in the table.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of (a) in-patients treated, (b) out-patients treated and (c) day cases for each district health authority in (i) 1982 and (ii) 1989.

Mr. Grist: Details of in-patients, out-patients and day cases treated in each district health authority in Wales in 1982 and 1988-89 are published in the relevant issues of "Hospital Bed Use Statistics" copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Quarrying

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policy towards the extension of existing quarries in areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Advice on planning applications for mineral extraction is given in the series of minerals planning guidance notes—MPGs—issued jointly by the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment. MPG1—"General considerations and the Development Plan System"—reasserts the Government's policy that all minerals applications in areas of outstanding natural beauty "should be subject to the most rigorous examination".

Health Service Capital Schemes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the major capital schemes costing over £1 million which have been completed since 1982, are in process of construction or which are planned for each district health authority.

Mr. Ian Grist: The information is given in the table. Schemes planned comprise those for which approval in principle has been given.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manhole Covers

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to restrict the import of manhole covers from India.

Mr. Redwood: My officials are currently considering with the industry whether there is evidence of serious injury to domestic producers arising directly from the import of manhole covers from India which might justify a call for safeguard restrictions. Any decision to impose restrictions would ultimately be a matter for the European Community.

Engineering Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received a copy of the Engineering Council report published on 29 May concerning the Government's assistance to manufacturing industry to encourage innovation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Engineering Council published a press release on 29 May on its written evidence to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology which is looking at "Innovation in Manufacturing Industry". My Department has given both oral and written evidence to this inquiry. The Government will respond in the normal manner to the Select Committee's findings once its report has been published.

Postal Services

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the publication, in draft form, of the European Community Green Paper on postal services.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission expects to publish the Green Paper on postal services towards the end of the year.

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate changes in share ownership of TVS Entertainment Ltd. and other companies holding ITV franchises.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 June, at column 25. The provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1981 operate without prejudice to the Fair Trading Act 1973. Under the latter, the Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to keep himself informed of mergers and proposed mergers. If changes in the share ownership of a company holding an ITV franchise gave rise to a merger situation qualifying under the Fair Trading Act for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission he would advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on whether it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Forth: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Forth: Department of Trade and Industry estimates relate to files reviewed and are for (a) 4·3 per cent.—4,463, (b) nil, (c) 7·3 per cent.—7,540 retained for second review, (d) nil, (e) 88·4 per cent.—91,339, (f) nil, (g) nil.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what system he employes to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department of Trade and Industry raises and registers files by number and title, incorporating relevant documents, using widely accepted filing conventions for paper records.

Girobank

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the sale of Girobank to be completed.

Mr. Forth: I am pleased to announce that the sale of Girobank by the Post Office to the Alliance and Leicester Building Society was completed today. When the sale of Girobank was announced in June 1988, we set out a number of factors which we and the Post Office agreed would be important in evaluating bids. I am fully satisfied that the sale to Alliance and Leicester meets these points. Alliance and Leicester is clearly well placed to develop and expand Girobank's business, a major objective of the sale. It will contribute to greater choice in banking services, while preserving the close links between Girobank and Post Office Counters. I am confident that both Girobank's staff and its customers will benefit from its new position in the private sector and I wish Girobank's management and staff well in this new and challenging stage of the bank's development.

My right hon. Friend the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced in April 1989 that, following a competitive bid process, the Post Office had agreed to sell Girobank to the Alliance and Leicester Building Society for £130 million, subject to later adjustments to the sale price principally in respect of the difference between the book and market values of Girobank's gilts portfolio. Following these adjustments, the proceeds received by the Post Office will amount to £111·9 million, comprising the repayment of Girobank's subordinated debt issued to it by the Post Office of £39 million, and payment by Alliance and Leicester of £72·9 million for the equity.

Euroenviron Initiative

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support his Department has given to companies under the Euroenviron initiative; and to what use the measures were put.

Mr. Forth: Since the launch of Eureka Euroeviron in the United Kingdom on 23 January 1990, three research proposals involving United Kingdom companies have been approved for which the total DTI grant amounts of £1·2 million over three years. The projects will investigate a new technique for incinerating plastic shredder residues from car breaking with heat recovery and no emission of toxic fumes; the development of an ultra-low emission dry cleaning machine, and research into the recovery, and re-use for high quality goods, of plastic materials derived from automobile production and disposal.

The DTI has supported four successful regional seminars on Euroenviron since the London launch; a further nine are planned. These are maintaining the momentum developed by the initiative.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Small Independent Brewers Association regarding the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received no representations from the Small Independent Brewers' Association since 1 May 1990, when the measures to ensure that tenants of the major brewers were free to take a guest beer came into effect. Specific complaints should be put to the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what monitoring he is undertaking of the practical effects of the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on brewing.

Mr. Redwood: The Director General of Fair Trading is monitoring compliance with the measures and has taken steps to keep their effects under review.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet a delegation of the Small Independent Brewers Association to discuss the tactics of the big five breweries against Small Independent Breweries Association products since the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

Mr. Redwood: I should be happy to consider any request for a meeting. However the Director General of Fair Trading is monitoring compliance with the measures we have introduced, and it is important that any evidence of anti-competitive behaviour is passed to his office.

Scottish Consumer Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grants he has made to the Scottish Consumer Council in each of the past five years.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The grant in aid paid by my Department to the Scottish Consumer Council, through the National Consumer Council, in each of the last five years with an estimate for the current year is as follows:

1985-86	203,100
1986-87	215,796
1987-88	218,534
1988-89	238,076
1989-90	243,113
[1]1990-91	271,000

[1] Estimate.

Air Fares

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the reduction of air fares within the European Economic Community; and if he is able to provide some examples of specific reductions.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The European Community Council of Transport Ministers meeting on 18 June agreed on a second stage of air transport liberalisation measures and committed themselves to complete a single market in aviation by the end of 1992. The agreement reached will give airlines greater freedom to set innovative fares and take advantage of more open access to the market. The setting of fare levels is a matter for airlines' commercial judgment. However, where the United Kingdom has already concluded liberal bilateral agreements with other countries, fares have come down.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the contract was signed for the appointment of Imagination to be the co-ordinator of the share offer presentations for the forthcoming offers for sale of the successor companies to the area electricity boards in England and Wales.

Mr. Wakeham: I announced the joint appointment, with the 12 regional electricity companies, of Imagination as co-ordinators of the share offer presentations for the forthcoming offers for the sale of the 12 RECs on 4 May 1990, after terms and conditions had been agreed. A formal contract incorporating these terms and conditions is being prepared.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 468, whether any of the estate agents advising on electricity privatisation have consulted him regarding any potential conflict of interest.

Mr. Wakeham: Before they were appointed all the property advisers assured my Department that they had no conflict of interest with their appointment. As I said in my reply of 16 February to the hon. Member, the contracts with these firms require them to consult me regarding potential conflict of interest. I am satisfied that these arrangements have enabled my Department to ensure that any such potential conflicts are avoided.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, columns 454-58, if he will list any changes in the companies retained by him to advise on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: Since I last replied the following changes have taken place in the Department's contracts with advisers.

The following contracts have come to an end:

Adviser and Area
Lloyds Bank—Receiving Bank and Registrar
Lamb and Edge—Property Valuers
Grimley J. R. Eve—Property Valuers
Gerald Eve—Property Valuers
Knight Frank Rutley—Property Valuers
Weatherall Green and Smith—Property Valuers
Debenham Tewson and Cheshire—Property Valuers
Hartnell Taylor and Cook—Property Valuers
Connell Hallum and Brackett—Property Valuers
Matthews and Goodman—Property Valuers
Cook and Arkwright—Property Valuers
Bernard Thorpe—Property Valuers
Henry Butcher—Property Valuers
Lloyd Northover—Design Consultants

New contracts have been concluded with:

Adviser and Area
Price Waterhouse—Reporting accountants
Russell Reynolds—Recruitment consultants for Chairmanship, National Power
R. L. Associates—Setting X for Area Boards
Lincoln Hannah—Press cutting service
Imagination—Roadshow organisers
WCRS—Flotation advertising
Debenhams Tewson and Chinnocks—Property Valuers
Edward Erdman—Property Valuers
Rowe and Pitman—Brokers (in the process of being formally appointed)

In addition, a number of operational contractors have been or are in the process of being employed to provide the major flotation operations:

(i) the Share Information Office;
(ii) printing; and,
(iii) share application processing.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to publish the valuations of the assets of the electricity supply industry which have been carried out by the firms of estate agents that are advising him.

Mr. Wakeham: The reports of the surveyors are commercially confidential documents.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the firms of estate agents for the 12 electricity distribution companies, the National Grid Company, PowerGen and National Power appointed jointly with his Department were chosen by competitive tender.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government's central adviser. Jones Lang Wootton, was appointed by a competitive process. The valuers for the 12 regional electricity companies, the National Grid Company, PowerGen and National Power were joint appointments with the industry. These were either chosen by a competitive process or on the basis of existing arrangements with the individual companies concerned. For example, valuers who had recently advised a company were often picked in the interest of obtaining their accumulated knowledge and expertise with the related downward pressure on fees. This is an established practice in privatisation exercises. In all such cases the fees chargeable were renegotiated as if their selection had been on the basis of a competitive process. The Department drove a hard bargain in these cases and succeeded in obtaining charge rates which were well below the companies' normal commercial rates.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether annex B to the Cabinet Office guidelines on Government publicity applies to his specialist PR and marketing adviser and the PR and marketing adviser to his Department and the electricity supply industry;

(2) whether page 10 of the document entitled "The Government Information Officer" applies to his special PR and marketing adviser and the PR and marketing adviser to his Department and the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I have nothing to add to the letter I wrote to the hon. Member on 11 April 1990 on these matters.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has anything to add to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 167, about James Capel's advice to journalists.

Mr. Wakeham: James Capel has not advised journalists of the value at which the electricity supply industry will be sold. It is in any case much too early to produce a meaningful estimate of the likely proceeds of the sale. Exactly how James Capel respond to speculation or questions about the likely proceeds which appear in the press is a matter for it.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the report of the Hinkley Point C inquiry before he announces his decision and before the House rises for the summer adjournment.

Mr. Wakeham: I set out how I intend to handle the report of the Hinkley Point C public inquiry in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Woodford and Wanstead (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 14 June, at column 287.

The report is long and detailed, and I am considering it carefully. I am not yet able to say whether I shall have reached a conclusion before the House rises.

Cullen Inquiry

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive the report of the Cullen inquiry.

Mr. Wakeham: The timing of the report is a matter for Lord Cullen. I look forward to receiving it when it is available.

National Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what firms of recruitment consultants have been employed to assist him in appointing a new chairman of National Power; and what is the cost to public funds.

Mr. Baldry: Russell Reynolds Associates has been appointed to assist my Department in finding a chairman of National Power. The fees being paid are commercially confidential.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the selection of the new chairman of National Power.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 14 May, Official Report, column 317.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: to ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on the the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Wakeham: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: All documents raised in the Department are held on registered files.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (M. Kirkwood), 25 June, Official Report, column 115, what contingency plans his Department has to facilitate or undertake third-stage decommissioning in the event of the operators of nuclear power stations having inadequate resources to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) of 6 March 1990 at column 556.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will place a report on the breakdown of the £990 million avoidable costs that would be saved by cancellation of the Sizewell B nuclear power station in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc. The precise breakdown of the avoidable cost is commercially confidential. I have already indicated that the breakdown can be made available on this basis by the company to the Energy Select Committee if the Committee wishes.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive Nuclear Electric's review of its financial position.

Mr. Wakeham: We continue to review Nuclear Electric's financial position with the company's management and auditors. This work is nearing completion. The company's opening report and accounts will be published during the summer.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries (Maintenance)

55. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what further donations have been received from the private sector for the maintenance of museums and galleries since he last reported to the House.

Mr. Luce: The national museums and galleries which I sponsor receive continual support from the private and commercial sector for the maintenance and enhancement of their buildings.

Recent notable successes include the new Japanese galleries at the British museum, made possible by a £5 million public appeal in this country and Japan.

Repertory Theatres

56. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the financial position of the repertory theatres in London and the regions.

Mr. Luce: At the end of March, cumulative deficits for building-based drama companies funded directly by the Arts Council represented about 6 per cent. of their total turnover. This figure conceals a wide variation in the performance of individual companies and takes no account of this year's substantial increase in Arts Council grants.

Opera

57. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last officially visited the opera; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I attended a performance of Mozart's "La Clemenza Di Tito" at the Guildhall school of music and drama on 18 June.

Regional Film Theatres

58. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to meet the British Film Institute to discuss the development of regional film theatres.

Mr. Luce: I regularly meet the chairman of the British Film Institute to discuss current issues.

National Gallery

59. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the trustees of the national gallery to discuss their buildings and exhibits.

Mr. Luce: I meet frequently the trustees and directors of all the national museums and galleries which I sponsor to discuss a wide range of issues.

Community Theatre

60. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts what financial support was provided in 1989 by (a) the Arts Council and (b) regional arts associations for community theatre productions.

Mr. Luce: Both the Arts Council and the regional arts associations fund a large number of companies which give performances in small-scale local venues.

Museums and Galleries (Charges)

61. Sir David Price: To ask the Minister for the Arts in light of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh Borough Council, what advice he is now offering to museums and galleries in respect of concessionary admission charges for elderly people.

Mr. Luce: I shall ensure that the national museums and galleries which I sponsor are aware of this recent decision by the House of Lords.

British Film Institute

62. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the British Film Institute to discuss its future plans for film production.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman and director of the British Film Institute from time to time. A wide variety of matters is discussed.

Wilding Report

63. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following his statement on the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I have received representations from a wide range of interested organisations and individuals.

70. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the progress in implementing the Wilding report reforms.

Mr. Luce: Since I announced on 13 March my proposals for a new structure of arts funding, good progress has been made by Mr. Mason, the manager of the reforms. The steering group I established has met regularly, and in addition, working groups of the interested parties are looking at detailed issues. As a result I hope to announce further decisions in the near future.

Theatre Royal, Bristol

64. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to visit the Theatre Royal, Bristol.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Business Sponsorship

65. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to change the regulations for Government support for business sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I recently announced a number of changes to the rules of my business sponsorship incentive scheme when it resumed in April of this year. The changes enable the scheme to focus on first-time sponsors and I am delighted that it is proving more effective than ever in bringing new money to the arts.

Liverpool Theatres

68. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will vist the Playhouse and Everyman threatres, Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to visit either of the two theatres at present.

West Yorkshire Playhouse

69. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends next to vist the West Yorkshire Playhouse, Leeds.

Mr. Luce: I shall be visiting the West Yorkshire Playhouse on 24 July.

Courtauld Gallery

71. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to vist the new Courtauld gallery.

Mr. Luce: I visited Somerset house for a preview of the new Courtauld galleries in May and was delighted to attend the reception to celebrate the opening of the galleries, in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen Mother, on 12 June.

Arts Council

72. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I meet Mr. Palumbo regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Museums and Galleries

73. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of museums and galleries are located outside south-east England.

Mr. Luce: According to the museums data base project, published in 1987, 67·5 per cent. of museums and galleries in Great Britain and Northern Ireland are located outside south-east England.

Haymarket Theatre, Leicester

74. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will visit the Haymarket theatre, Leicester.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so at present.

Natural History Museum

66. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from civil service trades unions on the effects of the level of funding for the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: I have received no formal representations from civil service trade unions about the level of funding at the natural history museum.

However, I understand that at a recent meeting between the Office of Arts and Libraries and Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists (IPMS) representatives, the IPMS outlined its concerns about the museum's proposals, including the level of funding. My officials have subsequently briefed me on the outcome of the meeting.

Future funding for the natural history museum will be considered in conjunction with funding bids received from other national museums and galleries.

67. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from academics about the effects of the level of funding for the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: I have received many representations from members of the academic community about the level of funding for the natural history museum.

I will be considering future funding for the natural history museum in conjunction with funding bids received from other national museums and galleries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from the institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists about the effects of the level of funding for the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: I have received no formal representations from trade unions about the level of funding at the natural history museum.

However, I understand that at a recent meeting between the Office of Arts and Libraries and Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists (IPMS) representatives, the IPMS outlined its concerns about the museum's proposals, including the level of funding. My officials have subsequently briefed me on the discussion. I shall be meeting the chairman and director of the museum to discuss their plans in the near future.

Future funding for the natural history museum will be considered in conjunction with funding bids received from other national museums and galleries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his actions following the Adjournment debate on Wednesday 20 June to help funding problems at the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: The natural history museum has submitted to me its corporate plan for the years 1990 to 1995. My officials will discuss the plan with the museum next month in the context of the corporate plan discussions held with all the national museums and galleries I sponsor. I will consider fully the points raised in the Adjournment debate on Wednesday 20 June before making the financial allocations to the national museums and galleries to be announced this autumn. I shall be meeting the chairman and director of the natural history museum to discuss their strategy and the wider issues.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled People (Access to Sporting Events)

88. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding access to sporting events for people with disabilities, following publication of the Taylor report.

Mr. Moynihan: We have received no such representations. Better access for disabled people to sporting events was recommended in my review report "Building on Ability" published in August 1989. I believe that improvements to football grounds as recommended in Lord Justice Taylor's report provide the opportunity to improve access for disabled people to this type of sports facility.

Blue Plaques

88. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are to be made to sponsor and regulate the commemorative blue plaques in London of eminent literary and artistic persons.

Mr. Trippier: The present arrangements are set out in paragraph 4 of schedule 2 to the Local Government Act 1985. This provides that

"The [Historic Buildings and Monuments] Commission may in Greater London, and a London borough council may in its borough—

(a) provide; and

(b) on any conspicuous part of a house, building or place, with the consent of its owner, erect, a commemorative plaque, tablet or sign indicating an event or matter of public interest in connection with the house, building or place or its site, and may in that area, with the like consent, maintain any such plaque, tablet or sign erected by it or by any other person or body, whether before or after the passing of this Act."

There are no plans to change this provision.

The commission has been operating a commemorative plaques scheme since April 1986 and has erected 35 plaques on London buildings. The commission also maintains a variety of commemorative plaques erected during the last hundred years by the Royal Society of Arts, London county council and the Greater London council. Information is not available on schemes operated by London boroughs.

The commission is always prepared to consider fresh suggestions for commemorative plaques.

Empty Property

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public sector and private sector properties are currently estimated to be standing empty in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 27 February 1990 to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) at columns 180-81.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Census Statistics

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he took to determine that the use of the statistics available from the 1981 census in order to determine the distribution of central support for local authority expenditures provides a sufficient and reliable means of recognising the particular needs and conditions of those local authorities which have experienced change since that study.

Mr. Chope: We use the latest information available on a consistent basis for all local authorities in calculating entitlements to revenue support grant. For a number of social characteristics of local authorities the information from the 1981 census of population is the latest available on this basis.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of, and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Chris Patten: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. But in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department operates in accordance with procedures agreed with the Public Record Office, which are designed to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Public Records Act 1958.

Antarctica

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether either his Department or the Nature Conservancy Council will be represented on the United Kingdom delegation to the special consultative meeting of Antarctic treaty parties to discuss comprehensive measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment to be held in Santiago, Chile in November.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the meeting in Santiago has not yet been decided. I will consider the matter in due course with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who has overall responsibility for the Government's policy on the Antarctic.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he or his Department have had with conservation experts in Australia with regard to the Australian Government's refusal to sign the convention for the regulation of Antarctic minerals resources and proposals to declare Antarctica a wilderness reserve.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 28 June 1990]: None.

Planning Legislation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make to planning legislation in England and Wales; and whether he has any plans to abolish county structure plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The White Paper "The Future of Development Plans" (Cm 569), published in January 1989, set out the Government's proposals for the reform of the development plan system. Other legislative proposals have been the subject of recent consultation papers. Further announcements will be made in due course about the timing and content of any legislation.

Charitable Housing Associations

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in devising a new system of portable discounts to enable tenants of charitable housing associations to purchase their own homes; and when he expects this to be in operation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The Housing Corporation has now introduced a new scheme, known as the tenants' incentive scheme, under which registered housing associations, whether or not charitable, may give grants to assist their tenants to move out and buy homes of their own.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make an order under section 106 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 confirming the charge caps on those local authorities which neither accepted the caps he proposed nor put forward alternative amounts within the statutory period of 28 days of their being designated for capping.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1990, c. 477-78]: I have today laid before the House a draft order, under section 104 of the 1988 Act, setting out my decisions on the final caps of 16 authorities which did not accept the caps which I proposed for them and put forward alternative amounts within the 28-day period. I have carefully considered the cases which the authorities made in support of the figures which they suggested. In the case of Brent, Southwark and Wigan I have decided to increase the caps which I proposed for them by £2·5 million, £2·5 million and £2 million respectively. In the case of the other 13 authorities I have decided to confirm their caps at the level I originally proposed.

The 16 authorities and their caps included in the draft order are as follows:

Implied reduction in budget

	£	£ million	£ per adult
Avon	507,100,000	26·6	37
Barnsley	132,000,000	10·0	59
Brent	244,200,000	5·1	26
Calderdale	125,400,000	7·5	52
Derbyshire	520,600,000	40·0	56
Greenwich	203,000,000	10·0	65
Hammersmith and Fulham	155,800,000	11·7	99
Haringey	206,500,000	10·0	71
Islington	185,800,000	3·7	30
Lambeth	285,100,000	8·8	51
North Tyneside	122,900,000	6·8	45
Rochdale	144,000,000	8·0	51
Rotherham	157,500,000	7·9	39
St. Helens	122,800,000	3·9	29
Southwark	229,400,000	11·6	71
Wigan	192,600,000	8·0	34

As I said on 6 June in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton), I laid before the House that day a draft section 104 order confirming Hillingdon's cap.

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many people have refused to pay the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 27 June 1990 c. 261]: This information is not available centrally but reports indicate that in many authorities over 80 per cent. of charge payers have begun to make payments and there are very few cases of wilful refusal to pay.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will direct Scottish Homes to turn over to the relevant district councils the property maintained by them on behalf of their tenants and recent owner-occupiers of Scottish Homes; and if he will make the finance available to the district council for this adoption to take place.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for Scottish Homes, in discussion with individual district councils to decide whether it is appropriate to make alternative arrangements for future maintenance of common amenities. Responsibility for bearing a proportionate share of the burden of common charges is clearly set out in the sales agreement under which former tenants of Scottish Homes have purchased their houses.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of the poll tax transitional allowances scheme in Scotland in 1989-90 if the calculation of benefit had been based on the actual poll tax paid by each applicant in that year rather than the notional figure used in the present scheme.

Mr. Rifkind: It was never the intenion to base the scheme on charges higher than those considered necessary by the Government to maintain local authority services in the transition from domestic rates to the community charge. A range of projections was made when the scheme was under consideration which included the use of actual rather than assumed charges.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what he estimates will be the total cost for the transitional allowance for the poll tax for the financial year 1990-91; how many people he expects will benefit from transitional allowances in that year; and what the average payment per head will be;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of the transitional allowance for the poll tax in Scotland in the financial year 1989-90; how many poll tax payers will benefit; and what the average payment per head will be.

Mr. Rifkind: Formal returns have not yet been made to the Scottish Office by local authorities of the numbers of people entitled to relief and the amount of relief awarded either individually or in total. Figures so far received by my Department of the numbers entitled to relief and of the cost are both informal and incomplete and do not provide an adequate basis for making a reliable estimate of the kind sought by the hon. Member.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission will be withholding grants from Economic Forestry Group plc in relation to its applications for woodland grant in view of the damage to sites of archaeological importance at Tarland and Ashkirktown; whether it intends to initiate prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The damage done to these archaeological sites was in clear breach of the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme approvals which required that they should be protected. The commission will therefore be witholding grants on both applications. The Tarland site was not scheduled; a decision has still to be taken on the question of a prosecution in respect of the damage done to the scheduled Ashkirktown site.

Kidney Disease

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of renal units; and how many persons are receiving kidney dialysis treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are 12 units in Scotland providing treatment for around 900 patients per annum.

Benefit (Young People)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has made to the statement of the president of the Association of Scottish Police Superintendents of 18 May on the effects of changes in the payments system on young people no longer able to qualify for benefit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am placing in the Library the official unrevised copy of the speech which I made at the annual meeting of the Association of Scottish Police Superintendents on 18 May in response to the remarks of the president of the association. I may have added some impromptu remarks.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of, and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Rifkind: The records of the Scottish Office are specifically exempted from the Public Records Act 1958, but broadly similar procedures are followed with a view to transferring records to the Scottish Record Office. No document falls due for such selection and transfer until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. There is an obligation under the Act to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which a Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Rifkind: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Scottish Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with the SRO inspecting officer.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Because of the large number involved no attempt is made to classify, log and record each document, although a standard registry system is in operation which provides for the opening, titling, indexing and maintenance of official files.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency-based nurses are employed on a casual labour basis in (a) Scottish and (b) Glasgow hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about agency nurses is collected twice yearly and the average whole-time equivalents for the quarter ending 31 March 1990 for Scotland and Glasgow hospitals are 215 and 127 respectively.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to reduce the number of trained, experienced nurses who rely for employment on agency-based casual labour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government do not have a policy of direction of labour and nurses are free to seek employment in the public, private or voluntary sectors.

Halons

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that every precaution is taken in Scottish hospitals to prevent release of halons in the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The use of halogens in Scottish hospitals is not widespread and is mainly confined to fire extinguishers used to combat small and incipient fires in specialised areas such as computer or electrical installations, where a suitable alternative is not available and where the overall safety of patients and staff is paramount.

School Assemblies

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to education authorities concerning religious observance at school assemblies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 June 1990]: A draft circular on religious education and religious observance was issued for consultation on 29 March 1990. Reponses are currently being studied.

School Buses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to education authorities concerning child safety on school buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The safety of pupils using transport made available by education authorities is the responsibility of the authority concerned. Authorities have a duty of care arising from the common law, and also specifically from the provisions in the Schools (Safety and Supervision of Pupils) (Scotland) 1990 Regulations.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many children travel to school each day by school bus in each education authority area.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The information requested, taken from a survey undertaken in October 1989 and assembled by education authority area, is as follows:

Region	Children receiving free transport by bus
Borders	3,243
Central	7,532
Dumfries and Galloway	9,205
Fife	14,495
Grampian	16,249
Highland	9,478
Lothian	10,037
Strathclyde	52,126
Tayside	6,790
Orkney	1,322
Shetland	1,810
Western Isles	2,048
TOTAL	134,335

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to education authorities concerning the criteria to be applied in determining whether a child qualifies to travel to and from school by school bus.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 June 1990]: Education authorities are required by the terms of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to make free travel arrangements for pupils who live outwith the statutory walking distance from school. The Act defines the statutory walking distance as being two miles for pupils under the age of eight years and three miles for any other pupils. Authorities have discretion to provide free travel arrangements in other circumstances.

Community Care

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make available to local authorities sufficient funding to allow them to provide domiciliary night care facilities as an integral part of their community care programmes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make available to Strathclyde regional council the extra funding needed to allow the council to provide community care facilities for the handicapped.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 June 1990]: It is for local authorities to decide on the allocation of funds to particular services for which they may be responsible. I am aware that Strathclyde regional council already provides an extensive range of services for handicapped people and other persons requiring care in the community and that these include domiciliary services extending to some provision for night care.

Water Supply (Aluminium Levels)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the supply zones for which applications have been made for authorisation to relax the standard for aluminium set in the water regulations; and whether in each case he proposes to give consent.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 June 1990]: Relaxation of the standard has been requested and authorised in respect of naturally-occurring aluminium in the following supply zones:

Dumfries and Galloway
- Black Esk
- Penwhirn
- Carsphairn
- New Abbey
- Wanlockhead
- Palnure

Grampian
- Inverurie—Newbigging (until 1995)
- Strathdon

Highland
- Ardvasar/Dariach

Loch Gair (until 1996)
Portnahaven (until 1991)
Nerebolls (until 1991)
Craighouse (until 1999)
Ross of Mull (until 1994)
Kilberry (until 1999)
Arinagour (until 1997)
Iona (until 1995)
Mulindry (until 1994)

New Abbey Water Supply

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the New Abbey water supply in Dumfries and Galloway will meet the European Community drinking water standard for aluminium at the end of 1990 when the article 20 delay expires.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 June 1990]: Because of naturally-occurring aluminium in the source water, the supply concerned will not always meet the standard. A relaxation of the standard has been authorised to cover this for the time being, but the water authority intends to develop schemes to remove the need for such relaxation.

Water Supply

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the supply zones which are the subject of the new article 9 designations which he referred to in his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 727.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The additional derogations for naturally occurring aluminium referred to in my answer of 20 February relate to the following supply zones:

Dumfries and Galloway—Black Esk and Lochinvar.
Highland—Beauly Firth and Spey Valley.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 727, what target dates have been agreed for compliance with the standards for aluminium, nitrate and bacteria listed in the water regulations for each of the individual water supply zones.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 June 1990]: Water authorities have given undertakings to carry out improvement programmes in which the target dates fro compliance with the aluminium standard are as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People (Benefits)

12. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement as to how many people will benefit from the review of benefits for disabled people set out in "The Way Ahead".

28. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will benefit from the review of benefits for disabled people set out in "The Way Ahead".

Mr. Scott: We estimate that some 850,000 people will benefit from the proposals set out in "The Way Ahead" (Cm. 917) and the interim measures we announced in October 1989.

15. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the structure of benefits for disabled people and their carers.

Mr. Scott: Our proposals to improve the balance and structure of social security benefits for disabled people and their carers are set out in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) which we put before the House on 10 January. In 1993-94 the changes will add some £300 million to the £8·3 billion we are already spending on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people and their carers.

Maintenance

13. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of his proposals to oblige fathers to provide financial support for their children born out of marriage with whom they no longer reside.

Mr. Newton: Social security law has always placed an obligation on parents to maintain their children, and this applies just as much to an unmarried father as to any other parent. We are continuing to look at ways of ensuring that parents do as much as possible to meet this obligation.

44. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce proposals resulting from his review of the maintenance system; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Action is already being taken to improve the existing arrangements: for example, by various measures included in the current Social Security Bill, by the proposals recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office to make court orders more effective, and by giving greater emphasis to work in DSS offices on recovering maintenance. A wide-ranging review is in progress, with the aim of making proposals for reform later this year.

38. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made towards securing greater recovery of the costs of child support from divorced and separated fathers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The amount of maintenance recovered from absent parents in respect of their children for whom income support is claimed was £155 million in 1988-89. We have met our target of £180 million for 1989-90, and we expect the sum collected to increase further to £260 million in 1990-91.

22. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to improve the collection of maintenance for lone parents.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government are concerned that so few lone parents receive maintenance. We are taking action to improve the effectiveness of the present system. There are measures in the Social Security Bill and the Home Office have announced proposals on payment arrangements. Our far-reaching review of maintenance is moving forward with all urgency, examining where changes need to be made in the current system in the longer term.

18. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce proposals resulting from his review of the maintenance system; and if he will make a statement.

23. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce proposals resulting from his review of the maintenance system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell).

Benefit Increases

14. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost of a further increase in the basic retirement pension of £5 for a single person and £8 for a couple if this were extended to income support and to national insurance benefits tied to the pension, and the cost of an increase in child benefit to £8·60 a week.

17. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost of a further increase in the basic retirement pension of £5 for a single person and £8 for a couple if this were extended to income support and to national insurance benefits tied to the pension, and the cost of an increase in child benefit to £8·60 a week.

34. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost of a further increase in the basic retirement pension of £5 for a single person and £8 for a couple if this were extended to income support and to national insurance benefits tied to the pension; and the cost of an increase in child benefit to £8·60 a week.

35. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost of a further increase in the basic retirement pension of £5 for a single person and £8 for a couple, if this were extended to income support and to national insurance benefits tied to the pension; and the cost of an increase in child benefits to £8·60 a week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am sure that my hon. Friends, and indeed all hon. Members, will be interested to know that to increase state pensions and related pensions in the way described would cost in the order of £3 billion, and to increase child benefit would have a net cost of £635 million.

Disabled People (Discrimination)

16. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next intends to meet representatives of disabled persons' organisations to discuss the problem of discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Scott: I regularly meet the disability organisations to discuss a wide range of issues. I met the Disability Benefits Consortium—an umbrella group representing over 250 disability organisations—on 5 April in the second of a series of meetings to discuss their views on "The Way Ahead".

Blind People (Disability Allowance)

19. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make the new disability allowance available to blind people to cover the full range of costs incurred by their disability.

Mr. Scott: The new disability allowance, which will extend help to less severely disabled people of working age and below, will benefit people with seeing disabilities who have mobility or care needs. The surveys of disability carried out by the OPCS found that attendance allowance and mobility allowance are well directed towards disabilities causing the heaviest expenditure. These benefits also provide help to people with other disabilities, such as blindness, which are frequently combined with locomotion or self-care disabilities. The new disability allowance will build on that relatively simple framework.

Computerisation

20. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he anticipates his Department's computerisation programme will benefit social security claimants.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Computerisation has improved the speed and accuracy with which benefit claims are handled. It provides a better service to the public on inquiries. It has enabled us to move benefit processing work out of London to areas where it is easier to recruit and retain good staff—and so provide a better service to our London customers.

National Insurance

21. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

26. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many standard rate tax payers would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit from national insurance contributions.

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many standard rate tax payers would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

46. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many standard rate taxpayers would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce).

24. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received regarding the level of national insurance contributions.

Mr. Scott: Representatives of the business community have recently urged us to retain the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions and to keep employers' national insurance contributions as low as possible.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many standard rate taxpayers would be affected by the removal of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: If the upper earnings limit for employees' National Insurance contributions were removed it is currently estimated that about 3·3 million people would pay more contributions, of whom about 2·1 million people would be standard rate tax payers. If the corresponding upper profits limit for self-employed people were also removed it is estimated that about another 500,000 people would pay more contributions, of whom about 200,000 would be standard rate tax payers.

War Widows (Pensions)

25. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review the current guidelines governing payment of war widows' pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to change the existing provisions for war widows pensions.

Disabled People

27. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further measures the Government are planning to introduce to help those disabled people whose care and mobility needs are less severe.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 5 March at columns 525-26.

47. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the measures introduced in April to assist sick and disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Improvements made to social security benefits for long-term sick and disabled people in April were as follows:

(i) an increase in the income support and housing benefit disability premium of £1 for single people and £1·60 for couples above the normal uprating;
(ii) an increase in the income support and housing benefit disabled child's premium of £8·55 above the normal uprating to bring it into line with the adult disability premium;
(iii) an increase in the earnings limit for invalid care allowance from £12 to £20;
(iv) an increase of £6·50 in the therapeutic earnings limit for invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance.
(v) the extension of attendance allowance to disabled babies under two. Carers of disabled babies will automatically be eligible to claim invalid care allowance.
(vi) the extension of mobility allowance to people who are deaf and blind

These measures form the first stage of our plan to provide a better balanced structure of benefits for disabled people as set out in "The Way Ahead" (Cm. 917). Taken together these proposals will provide extra help for some 850,000 people.

37. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the structure of benefits for the most severely disabled people.

Mr. Scott: The existing benefits structure already recognises that disabled people have extra needs. The OPCS survey findings showed that attendance allowance and mobility allowance are well targeted on the most common of the more costly disabilities. The new disability allowance will build on that framework by offering a relatively simple and readily understood benefit to both severely and moderately disabled people. The closer alignment of invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance with the proposed age-related addition will substantially increase the benefit income of large numbers of very severely disabled people by up to £10 a week at current rates.

Child Benefit

30. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the reduction in public expenditure, if child benefit were paid only to households with a gross income of £13,000 per annum or less and for the first two children only.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: About £3·1 billion after allowing for associated extra expenditure of around £185 million on income-related benefits.

40. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about single parent child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: One-parent benefit is paid in addition to child benefit to a person responsible for bringing up children on his or her own. One-parent benefit provides a worthwhile addition to the income of a lone parent who is working and not dependant on income support. It is now 12 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979.

Water Filters

31. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision he makes for benefit recipients whose health requires the use of water filters to claim reimbursement for the installation costs of such filters.

Mr. Scott: Help with these costs may be available from the social fund. An income support recipient can apply for a community care grant or budgeting loan. Anyone, whether in receipt of income support or not, can apply for a crisis loan if there is serious risk to their health or safety.

Income-related Benefits

32. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much spending on income-related benefits for families with children has increased since April 1988.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimated expenditure on income-related benefits for families with children increased by some £280 million in cash terms between 1988-89 and 1989-90. This figure represents the latest available cash estimate based on the annual statistical inquiry and the public expenditure White Paper 1990. It excludes housing benefit paid to unemployed families with children, as this figure cannot be separately identified. It also excludes forecast expenditure for the current financial year.

Taking into account the additional annual expenditure on family credit compared with family income supplement, the real increases in children's rates in the income-related benefits in April 1989 and the real increases in the income support family premium and adult credit in family credit in the current financial year, the provision —including forecast spending for families with children —now amounts to over £350 million a year extra in real terms compared with the position before the reforms were introduced in April 1988.

Household Incomes

33. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the 1985 to 1987 figures on households below average income.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following the recent report by the Social Services Committee, we have asked DSS statisticians to carry out some additional work on the composition and characteristics of the lowest income group, as the Committee suggested. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member last month explaining that, while this additional work meant that publication would not be possible on the timescale originally envisaged, we had suggested that the statisticians should aim to complete their work within about four to five weeks. This work has not yet been completed.

Income Support

36. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what improvements have occurred recently in the quality of service to claimants of income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since the Government reforms were introduced in 1988, the social security system has become simpler for claimants to understand and easier for staff to operate. There have been very real all-round improvements in the standards of service to the public. For example, in 1989-90 the average time taken to clear income support claims improved by 25 per cent. to 4·7 days compared with 1987-88, the last year before the reforms, and error rates fell by 31 per cent. to 7·9 per cent.

41. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the level of income support will be for youth training participants in this financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Participants in youth training do not normally receive income support. Instead they receive a training allowance which exceeds the income support rates of personal allowance. The minimum value of the lower and higher levels of the youth training allowance are £29·50 for trainees aged 16 and £35 for trainees aged 17.

42. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest figure he has for the number of lone parent families in receipt of income support; and how many such families were receiving supplementary benefit five years ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest published figures are those quoted in my reply to my hon. Friend on 2 April at column 487.

Deaf People

39. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the implications of the recent report "The Way Ahead" for deaf people.

Mr. Scott: A number of proposals set out in "The Way Ahead: benefits for disabled people" will benefit people who are deaf. The new disability allowance, which will extend help to less severely disabled people of working age or below, will benefit people who have mobility or care needs. People disabled early in life who have not been able to build up a national insurance contributions record will gain from the introduction of an age related addition in severe disablement allowance; and those who are partially capable of work will be helped by the new disability employment credit, which will make it easier for disabled people to take up or remain in work. Some deaf people will have already benefited from the extension of mobility allowance to people who are both deaf and blind, introduced in April 1990 as part of "The Way Ahead" proposals.

Invalid Care Allowance

43. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next expects to review the criteria for payment of invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: The earnings limit for people receiving invalid care allowance was increased, in April, from £12 to £20 per week. The extension of attendance allowance for children under age two from April, and for terminally ill people without the normal six-month waiting period, proposed for October 1990, will enable more carers to qualify for invalid care allowance. We also propose to introduce, from October, a £10 carers premium into income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit for those receiving invalid care allowance.

Housing Benefit

45. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend housing benefit to include water rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No. Housing benefit is intended to meet reasonable accommodation costs. Help towards water charges forms an integral part of overall income support levels.

Carers' Premium

48. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he expects will benefit from the introduction of the new carers' premium.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We expect the new £10 premium to be introduced in October, to help 30,000 carers through income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Invalidity Pension

49. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the real increase in value of the invalidity pension since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows:

	£	Per cent.
November 1979 rates in cash	23·30	—
April 1990 rate in cash	46·90	—
Per cent. change in real terms	—	−3·1
Per cent. change between uprating periods November 1978-79 to April 1989-90	—	5·4

Notes:

(i) The figures relate to basic invalidity pension. In addition a claimant may be entitled to Invalidity Allowance and/or Additional Pension.

(ii) The percentage change between uprating periods is calculated as the percentage change in the average real value of benefits during the uprating periods April 1989 to April 1990, as compared to the period November 1978 to November 1979.

Departmental Service

50. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how his Department is planning to improve its service to the public.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since the Government reforms were introduced in 1988, the social security system has become simpler for claimants to understand and easier for staff to operate. There have been very real all-round improvements in the standards of service to the public. Nevertheless, there is still room for further improvement, particularly in inner London. This is being tackled by relocating work which requires no face-to-face contact away from 21 London offices to areas where recruitment and retention of staff is easier. There is already substantial evidence that significant improvements in accuracy, clearance times and quality of service are being made.

By 1991 the major programme underway to computerise social security operations will bring major improvements in service standards to all local offices. It produces faster and more accurate payments and decisions, and provides fast access to information needed to deal with queries.

In 1991, the new agency to administer the benefit systems will be established, having as one of its principal aims a high quality service for customers.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any information has been supplied by Lambeth council to his Department about claims for community charge benefit in that borough.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Community charge benefit caseload data have yet to be supplied by Lambeth council.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were examined by doctors acting on behalf of his Department for the purpose of assessing attendance allowance and mobility allowance claims over the last 12 months; and what was the average fee paid to doctors for such examinations.

Mr. Scott: Approximately 700,000 claimants were examined in connection with claims to attendance and mobility allowances in the last 12 months. An average fee figure is not available. The fee per case in the financial year 1989-90 varied between £25·90 and £69·80 depending on the location and the duration of the examination. The great majority of these would be at or near the lower end of that range.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints his Department has received about doctors arising from examinations for mobility allowance and attendance allowance; and how such complaints are dealt with.

Mr. Scott: No central record is kept of the number of complaints against examining medical practitioners—EMPs. In fact, many apparent complaints are appeals against the decision made. The number of complaints against the doctors' conduct, manner or behaviour is very small in relation to the 700,000 examinations carried out annually.

Each of these complaints is investigated by the Department's regional office senior medical officer. The doctor is sent a copy of the report of the examination complained about and of the claimant's complaint and asked for his or her comments. Subsequent action depends on the individual complaint and the past record of the EMP. In extreme cases the doctor's employment on this work may be terminated forthwith and an explanation of the reason sent to him or her.

If it appears that the doctor requires guidance on the attitude required to be shown to claimants in order to prevent further complaints this is done. If it becomes clear that despite such guidance the doctor is unsuited to the work, for one reason or another, further work is not made available and an explanation is sent to the doctor.

In all cases a detailed reply is sent to the complainant including, where appropriate, an indication of action which has been taken as a result of the complaint.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many medical centres his Department operates for the purpose of medical examinations for people who claim mobility allowance; and how many medical centres there are in each region.

Mr. Scott: Examinations in connection with initial and renewal claims to mobility allowance are normally carried out in the examining doctor's own surgery premises. Appeals and references to a medical board are dealt with in the Department's medical adjudication centres which also deal with industrial injuries, war pensions and severe disablement allowance examinations.

The number of these centres is 94, divided among the regions as follows:

	Numbers
North-East	13
London North	14
London South	11
Wales/South-West	17
Midlands	14
North-West	12
Scotland	13

Earnings Allowance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new claims for reduced earnings allowance were made in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available because details of claims for industrial injuries benefit do not distinguish between claims for disablement benefit and reduced earnings allowance. However, a special count undertaken last year suggests that about 23,000 claims for reduced earnings allowance were made in 1989.

Residential Homes

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to commission the study into the costs of residential care and nursing homes outlined in the Government's response to the second report of the House of Commons Social Services Committee of Session 1989-90 (HC 257) on "Community Care: The Future Funding of Private and Voluntary Residential Care".

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have commissioned the management consultants Price Waterhouse to undertake a rapid investigation into the costs of running residential care and nursing homes across the country.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by category, those statistics his Department maintains or has access to with regard to claims for pensions for industrially-induced deafness.

Mr. Scott: Information is maintained on the numbers of successful claims for occupational deafness and those disallowed either on the occupational criteria or on hearing losses below the prescribed standard.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people dropped out of making claims for pensions for noise-induced industrial deafness at the stage where the five-year rule came into effect in (a) St. Helens and (b) the United Kingdom in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows. In Great Britain during the five-year period April 1985 to March 1990 a total of 11,742 claimants were disallowed because they had not made a claim within five years of leaving the relevant occupation—the provision intended by regulation 25 of the Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations 1985. They were not, therefore, referred for audiometric testing to establish whether they satisfied the necessary level of hearing loss. For St. Helens the relevant figure for the four-year period to March 1990 is 107 claimants. Individual figures for St. Helens are no longer available for periods before April 1986.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what system he employs to classify log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department receives and generates many millions of documents in the course of its business, and it would be impracticable, and disproportionately costly, to record these individually. However, the vast majority are placed with related documents, on registered files in accordance with well-established registry practices.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No document falls for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Record Act will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Vaccine Damage Payment Scheme

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reported payments were actually made under the Vaccine Damage Payment Act, for the past five years up until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figures are in the table.

Year	Payments
1985	26
1986	25
1987	9
1988	4
1989	4

Note:
Payment is often made in a different year to that in which the award decision is made because of the need to set up a trust fund.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of running the vaccine damage payment scheme for the last three years up until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is in the table.

Year	£
1987	[1]310,000
1988	[1]155,000
1989	[1]105,000

[1] Figures contain both administrative costs and payments made under the Act.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications his Department received last year for payments under the Vaccine Damage Payment Act; and what were the figures for each year from 1985.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is in the table.

Year	Number of applications
1985	79
1986	79
1987	65
1988	39
1989	53

Income Support

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, 21 June, column 707, if he will give, for the latest date available, a list of the offices with the number of cases with a poll tax deduction in place.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest count, completed in May 1990, showed that 22 offices in Scotland had income support cases with a deduction to clear community charge arrears. Up to this date no deductions had been taken in England and Wales. The table records the offices and the number of such deductions in each office.

DEFENCE

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the results of the recent survey in which military and civilian air traffic controllers were required to report all infringements of rule 21 and rule 36 airspace.

Mr. Neubert: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I understand, however, that the results of this survey, which was completed on 30 June, have not yet been analysed.

HMS Centurion

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the new security blockhouse/gatehouse at HMS Centurion cannot be used.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The installation will not be in use until ancillary works and some external roadworks have been completed.

Regency Net and Cemetery Net Systems

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) at which Royal Air Force, Royal Air Force/United States Air Force and United States Air Force bases in the United Kingdom there are facilities of the regency net and cemetery net systems;

(2) what is the purpose of the regency net antenna being erected at RAF St. Mawgan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Cemetery net is a command and control system for United States Commander in Chief Europe. There are cemetery net facilities currently located at RAF Mildenhall and RAF Greenham Common. Regency net is intended as a successor to cemetery net. Details of the regency net configuration are classified, although I can confirm that a facility is currently being planned for RAF St. Mawgan.

Regiments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply of 14 June, Official Report, columns 326-27 concerning regiments, if he will give the total annual cost of each regiment listed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to produce a new edition of his Department's booklet entitled "Defence and the Environment"; and if he will include information on low-flying training, and the measures taken to reduce its environmental impact.

Mr. Neubert: There are no plans at present to produce a new edition of this booklet. However, the actions taken by the Department to protect the environment, and to minimise the adverse effects of its essential activities, were recently summarised on pages 51-52 of the 1990 "Statement on the Defence Estimates" (Cm. 1022-I). This included information on measures taken to reduce the environmental impact of low-flying training.

Atlantis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is participating in the United States space shuttle Atlantis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence has no plans to participate in the United States space shuttle Atlantis.

Training and Consultancy Services

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department and the armed forces have taken to contract out training and consultancy services to small companies; what contracts on what subjects have been let in the last two years; what value these contracts were for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: We continue to review and market test support activities including training and consultancy services and to award contracts where it is demonstrated that they will provide the best value for money. The choice of contractor will depend entirely upon the proposals received following normal competitive tender action. Small firms are encouraged to participate in this process whenever possible through the Ministry of Defence's successful small firms initiative, and by the new suppliers service of MOD.

Complete figures on training and consultancy services are not held centrally but it has been possible to identify a number of contracts let over the past two years in the following areas:

Year	Number of contracts	Total value (£)
Driver training
1988-89	16	305,680
1989-90	19	168,000
Technical support services
1988-89	2	593,486
1989-90	6	524,020
Academic services
1988-89	Nil	Nil
1989-90	2	2,048,870

In addition, details of management and computer consultancy contracts for the last two years were given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) by my hon. Friends the Minister of State and the then Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 28 March 1990 at column 236 and 4 April 1989 at column 130.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the prohibition of practice approaches by military aircraft at Stornoway airport took effect.

Mr. Neubert: The prohibition of non-essential overshoots by Tornado F3 aircraft based at RAF Stornoway when it is active came into effect for the latest activation, from 25 to 29 June. The prohibition will be extended to visiting aircraft in time for the next activation in September.

RAF Shackleton Crash

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the investigation into the RAF Shackleton crash on Harris on 30 April.

Mr. Neubert: A military aircraft accident summary will be published once the report of the board of inquiry has been completed.

St. David's Airfield, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) navigational lights and (b) security lights will be provided on the proposed over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire; and at what height and distance they will be visible.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no plans to include navigational lights on the proposed over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire. The whole question of lighting will, however, be fully addressed in the environmental impact assessment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any non-Ministry of Defence sites were included in the 166 sites examined for the over-the-horizon radar proposed for St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. All the 166 sites considered for the installation of either the transmitter or the receiver for the proposed trial of the over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom were already in Ministry of Defence use.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the proposed landscaping of the over-the-horizon radar site at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Proposals for landscaping of the over-the-horizon radar site at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, will be addressed in the environmental impact assessment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in current flight patterns, including take-offs and landings, will be necessary at RAF Brawdy if the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation is constructed on the St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: If the proposed over-the-horizon radar is built at St. David's airfield, minor adjustments in the radar pattern and westerly departure routes from RAF Brawdy may be necessary. There will be no impact on safety or operations at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternative arrangements are proposed to provide RAF Brawdy with an emergency landing strip if the present one at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, is used for the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation.

Mr. Alan Clark: St. David's airfield is not normally designated as an emergency landing strip for RAF Brawdy. A number of airfields will remain available to aircraft on training flights from RAF Brawdy in an emergency. Which is used would depend on where the training flight took place, and weather conditions.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 19 June, Official Report, column 782, if he will make a statement on other means by which radar cover could be provided similar to that proposed as a result of the installation of over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: At present, radar coverage of the United Kingdom air defence region to the north of the United Kingdom is provided principally by airborne early warning (AEW) aircraft, supplemented by shipborne radars, ground-based microwave radars in the United Kingdom, and allied ground-based systems in Iceland and Norway. Studies have concluded that a northward-looking over-the-horizon radar (OTHR) located in this country could make a particular contribution to the air defence of the United Kingdom by providing wide area coverage of a considerable proportion of the Norwegian sea. This would allow greater flexibility and efficiency in the use of scarce air defence assets that would otherwise have to fulfil this role; it would also allow frequent coverage of areas where the regular use of AEW aircraft would be uneconomic.

Alternative methods of providing similar coverage to an OTHR, such as space-based radar or additonal AEW aircraft, would cost substantially more.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Documents in the Ministry of Defence are normally placed on departmental files and processed in accordance with departmental instructions and registry practices.

Dishonesty Offences

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defen ce if he will list (a) the nature of the offence and (b) the sentence for each of the soldiers currently serving sentences for dishonesty at Colchester military corrective training centre.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

British Aerospace

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 June, on how many occasions in the last six months he has been in communication with British Aerospace regarding the future equipment requirements of the armed forces.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence has regular contacts with British Aerospace on a wide range of procurement issues.

Service Personnel (Scotland)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are stationed in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 1 July 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, 20,035 service personnel were stationed in Scotland.

Catering Firms

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information on Army training schedules is normally provided to private catering firms that have won Army contracts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Catering firms that win Army contracts are given the information necessary to enable the company to provide the required service. Such information is given in the contract document. Contracts with firms providing catering facilities to summer camps have hitherto included the location and dates of the particular event, and the name of the unit attending camp. Instructions have been given that in future the name of the unit should not appear in the contract.

Tornado

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he discussed with British Aerospace the possibility of not authorising work on the order for the eighth batch of Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence maintains close and detailed discussions with all its main suppliers; the timing and content of these discussions is commercially confidential between the Ministry of Defence and the suppliers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 25 June, when he informed British Aerospace of his decision not to authorise work on the order for the eighth batch of Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: The contracting authority for the Tornado is the NATO Multi-Role Combat Aircraft Development and Production Management Agency (NAMMA). It was informed of the decision on 18 June. British Aerospace was advised informally on the same day.

Deansway Catering

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the security classification of the list given to Deansway Catering detailing training schedules for the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No list was provided to Deansway Catering Company Ltd. detailing training schedules. Information on the contracted tasks was provided in the individual contracts for the specific events. The contract documents bore no security classification.

Combat Aircraft

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 June, about assessed need for combat aircraft, in which sections of the 1989 and 1990 "Statement on the Defence Estimates" the assessed need for combat aircraft is described.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I pointed out in my reply of 26 June, at column 199, the assessed need for combat aircrft has been reflected in the plans described in successive "Statements on the Defence Estimates". In the case of the 1989 and 1990 statements, I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraphs 329 and 330 and tables 4 and 5 and to paragraphs 315 and 316 and table 5 respectively.

Local Government Finance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of service personnel in Scotland will receive reimbursement due to high community charges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Eleven per cent. of those service personnel living in service accommodation, in the current year, will receive refunds of part of their accommodation charges as a result of community charges which exceed the service average by more than £1 per week.

CIVIL SERVICE

Trade Unions

79. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met representatives of the civil service trade unions; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher).

Agencies

80. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what further agencies will be established in the next four months.

81. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proposals he has to create further next steps agencies.

Mr. Luce: My noble Friend the Lord Chancellor today launched the Land Registry as an executive agency. This takes the total number of established agencies to 32, together employing some 80,000 staff. In addition, I expect the national physical laboratory and national engineering laboratory to be launched as executive agencies soon.

EMPLOYMENT

Liverpool Skill Centre

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions took place between his Department and METEL prior to the dismissal of the Liverpool skill centre staff including the timing of these discussions.

Mr. Eggar: The sale negotiations with Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Ltd—METEL—for the Liverpool skill centre were carried out by the Department's professional advisers, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte. The negotiations extended over a period of months and were concluded on 14 May.

As far as staff redundancies were concerned, METEL had made it clear, prior to the sale, to staff, trade unions, and the Department that they would need to restructure the business, and that redundancies were expected. The speed with which the redundancies came, and that they affected all staff, was not signalled in the pre-sale discussions, and was a great disappointment to the Department.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions were made in respect of the numbers of people to be employed at the METEL skill centre in Liverpool after its sale.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 June 1990]: The skill centre was sold as a going concern, and no specific provisions were made in respect of the exact number to be employed by METEL after completion of the sale.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the staff working at the Liverpool skill centre were dismissed on 15 May; and if he was informed that the dismissals would take place prior to the sale of the skill centre.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 25 June 1990]: All the staff working at the Liverpool skill centre on 15 May 1990 were made redundant. The Department was not informed, prior to the sale, that all staff would be dismissed.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the recognised trade unions were consulted about the dismissals on redundancy terms of the staff of the Liverpool skill centre, in line with the Employment Act 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: On completion of the sale of the Liverpool skill centre, the issues of trade union recognition and consultation on redundancies became matters for the new owners.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of Liverpool skillcentre as a training centre.

Mr. Eggar: The sale of the training business at the Liverpool skill centre to Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Limited was negotiated on the basis that it would continue to operate as a training business. Now that the centre is in the private sector, it is for METEL to determine the future of the business. However, I have no reason to believe that METEL will not continue to operate a training business from the centre.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if will he give details of how the severance payments to the staff of the Liverpool skill centre who have been dismissed will be funded.

Mr. Eggar: Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Limited, which purchased the business of the Liverpool skill centre, made it clear, prior to the sale, to staff, trade unions, and the Department that they would need to restructure the business, and that redundancies were expected. In negotiating the price for the training business, some allowance was made for anticipated redundancies. It will be for METEL to pay the severance payments agreed with staff.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to offer reinstatement into the civil service to the staff of the Liverpool skill centre who have been dismissed.

Mr. Eggar: An agreement has been reached with the trade unions concerned for my Department to give preferential consideration to applications for reinstatement from staff employed in the Skills Training Agency —STA—immediately before the sales were concluded, including those at the Liverpool skill centre, if they are made redundant in the private sector within three years of completion of the sales. Within the terms of the agreement everything that can be done to help staff from the Liverpool skill centre will be done.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effect on training provision in the Liverpool area of the Liverpool skill centre developments.

Mr. Eggar: Now that the Liverpool skill centre is in the private sector it is for the purchaser, Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Limited to determine the future of the business. I have no reason to believe that the sale of the Liverpool skill centre to METEL will adversely affect training provision in the Liverpool area.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many businesses started under the enterprise alowance scheme in each year since 1982; how many businesses folded after the first year; and how many continued operating into the (a) second, (b) third, (c) fourth, (d) fifth, (e) sixth, (f) seventh, (g) eighth and (h) ninth year.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers of businesses started under the enterprise allowance scheme are as follows:

Financial year	Total number
February 1982 to July 1983 (pilot in five parts of the country)	3,331
August 1983 to March 1984 (national implementation)	27,629
1984-85	46,037
1985-86	60,037
1986-87	86,751
1987-88	106,305
1988-89	98,522
1989-90	77,886
April 1990 to May 1990	12,662

Information on the number of businesses which folded after the first year, and those which continued operating into further years is not collected from all former scheme participants. However, regular national follow-up surveys are undertaken and the latest show that of businesses completing a full year on the scheme 74 per cent. were still trading six months later, 9 per cent. were in paid employment or other self-employment, and 15 per cent. were unemployed. The remaining 2 per cent. were sick, retired, or provided no answer; and two years later 65 per cent. were still trading.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many people (a) have joined job clubs, and (b) have left job clubs, from 1 April 1989 to the latest possible date; and (c) what were their destinations, showing how many entered a job, employment training, or another positive scheme;

(2) what information he has about the relative value for money of internal job clubs and agency job clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Restart Courses

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed claimants who have been out of work for over two years and who are quarterly attenders will be required to attend restart courses if they turn down the offer of a place on another scheme from this autumn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. The requirement to attend a restart course will apply to all claimants who have been unemployed for two years or more and who, at subsequent restart interviews, refuse all offers of help made to them.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants in each month since 9 October 1989, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, have been (a) issued with warning letters for not actually seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed or (ii) disallowed and (d) have been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment; and how many of those in (d) have had their benefit disqualified.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Hotel and Catering Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the future of hotel and catering training.

Mr. Nicholls: The White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" set out the Government's view that independent and voluntary arrangements are more likely to be effective than those agreed by statute.

In November 1989 the Government accepted proposals put forward by the chairman of the hotel and catering training board for new independent training arrangements in the hotel and catering industry. These new arrangements were prepared following full consultation with the main employer associations in the industry.

TVEI, St. Helens

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on technical and vocational education initiative spending in St. Helens, with special reference to any budgetary changes.

Mr. Eggar: The St. Helens TVEI pilot programme, which started in 1986, has a budget of £2 million. A total of £1·3 million has been spent up to 31 March 1990. St. Helens enters the extension phase of TVEI in September 1990. A sum of £238,000 has been offered for the first year of the extension phase.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the number of (a) deaths, (b) major injuries, (c) minor injuries and (d) dangerous occurances in the construction industry for each year from 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for Great Britain is provided in the tables. Data for the latest year commencing 1 April 1989 are not yet available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many sites have been given preventive workplace inspection by a Health and Safety Executive inspector (a) weekly, (b) monthly and (c) never, as a proportion of the total.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. Workplaces for which the Health and Safety Executive is the enforcing authority receive preventive inspections at intervals which vary according to risk and need, rather than at any fixed frequency.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stretford, 24 April, Official Report, column 174, about health and safety offences, what criteria are used to decide whether a case is passed to the Crown prosecution service; and which body decides whether to initiate prosecutions for manslaughter.

Mr. Nicholls: The nature of the offence is the main criterion used to decide whether a case should be passed to the Crown prosecution service or not. The character of the defendent may also be relevant. The Crown prosecution service decides whether or not a charge of manslaughter is appropriate.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stretford, 15 May, Official Report, column 402, whether the Health and Safety Executive will consider initiating comparative research into accident or incident rates on (a) civil engineering and (b) construction projects within Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans to do so at present.

Youth Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish assessments made by his Department of the additional contribution to be made by employers in 1990-91 towards the cost of youth training.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government do not publish yearly forecasts of the additional contributions, both in money and in kind, to be made by employers to new youth training. These contributions are expected to exceed those of previous years, reflecting the growing recognition of employers that it is in their interests to contribute to training and the greater benefits to employers of the new youth training arrangements.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department accepts youth training trainees as unemployed for funding purposes under the European social fund.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with International Labour Organisation recommendations, young people on YT are considered to be part of the work force in employment and are therefore not deemed to be unemployed. I have no plans to adopt a different definition for the purpose of the European social fund.

Trans-national Training

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the policy of West Germany in dealing with trans-national training projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is currently seeking information from European social fund applicants on all likely trans-national training projects, including those linked with West Germany. Once we have replies we will approach the other member states concerned with those projects to establish their policy towards them.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what applications his Department has received from the Trident training initiative for European social fund funding towards the cost of trans-national projects.

Mr. Eggar: According to my Department's records, no applications have been received for ESF funding from the Trident training intitiative up to the year ending 1989. The project applications for 1990 have yet to be submitted.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Eggar: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with the Act, the Employment Department group is obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Employment Department group may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Work-related Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the spending on work-related further education in 1990 prices for 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: The total expenditure on work-related further education by the Employment Department group Training Agency and its predecessors, the Training Commission and the Manpower Services Commission is as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	128
1988-89	127
1989-90	112
1990-91	[1]108

[1]Projected.
The figures shown are at constant 1989-90 prices and were calculated by use of the GDP deflator index.

Unemployed People, Salisbury

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, of the 150 people claiming unemployment-related benefits at his Salisbury office, who are registered as not having a permanent or fixed address, how many have had (a) availability and (b) actively seeking work interviews.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to my hon. Friend.

Technical and Vocational Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of spending per child on the technical and vocational education initiative extension in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: TVEI introduces long-term developments in schools to help prepare young people for the world of work. Spending is not necessarily geared to the number of students. It is therefore not appropriate to calculate unit costs.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Department group complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with Public Record Office inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what systems he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Department group does not necessarily record each document raised. Instead, all documents are filed using widely accepted filing conventions in accordance with the relevant instructions.

Skill Centres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the skill centres which are to be closed as training businesses and sold, giving (a) the valuation of and its assets sold, (b) the number of expressions of interest received and (c) the income likely to be received from successful purchasers.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The centres to be closed by my Department as training businesses are Chelmsford, Chesterfield, Northampton, Portsmouth, Reading, Twickenham and Letchworth, excluding the gas safety training business purchased by Mr. J. James, which is due to be relocated.

With the exception of Chesterfield, where the property will revert to the landlord, the Government's property interests in these centres will shortly be marketed. It would be prejudicial to the sale to give the valuation of the assets or to reveal the number of expressions of interest. The equipment at the closed centres is being sold by auction over the next few weeks and for commercial reasons it is not possible to reveal valuations at this stage.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the new pension arrangements of all civil servants involved in the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency and skill centres are compatible with the civil service pension scheme.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The pension arrangements of the purchasers of the Skills Training Agency were all subject to an independent assessment by the Government Actuary's Department. The assessment concluded that the respective arrangements are broadly comparable to those of the principal civil service pension scheme and hence met the undertaking given by the then Secretary of State when the sale was announced.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if companies or individuals who had unsuccessfully bid for any or all of the skill centres were contacted about the further sale of Lambeth skills centre after 19 February.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No. The only organisation interested in Lambeth at the final offer stage, other than one bidder interested in a very large network, was The Training Business.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total expenditure involved in the payment to Astra Training Services Ltd. for the acquisition of skill centres and other Skills Training Agency facilities.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The sale of the training businesses at 45 skill centres plus the Skills Training Agency head office, mobile training service, sales teams and colleges to Astra Training Services Limited involved a payment from the Government to Astra of some £10·7 million.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the skill centres and (b) the type of assets covered by the clawback procedures.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Clawback will apply to the freehold and long leasehold properties acquired by Astra Training Services Limited. These are skill centre premises at:

Barking
Basildon
Bellshill
Billingham
Birmingham
Bradford
Bristol
Cheshire
Dundee
Durham
Enfield Annex
Gloucester
Gwent
Hillington
Hull
Irvine
Manchester
Medway

Wrexham

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Lakin Consortium put in bids, prior to 19 February, for any skill centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Yes. An indicative bid was received from the consortium headed by Mr. Lakin by the Government's sale advisers and it was placed on a shortlist of potential purchasers in mid-November 1989.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the total income likely to be received on completion of the sale of (a) skill centres as training businesses and (b) skill centres which will be closed and held as land and premises.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The sale of skill centres as training businesses is complete and total income received was £65,000. The Government's remaining property interests are about to be marketed and it would be prejudicial to the sale to give an estimate of proceeds.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if The Training Business Group Ltd. put in a bid, prior to 19 February, for any skill centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Yes. An indicative bid was received from The Training Business by the Government's sale advisers and they were placed on a shortlist of potential purchasers in mid-November 1989.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for each of the successful bidders of the 51 skill centres the conditions covering (a) the length of time training must be carried on and (b) the quality of the training.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In accepting the offers of successful bidders, I satisfied myself that they met the key objectives of the sale that as much as possible of STA's training business was transferred to the private sector, and that the training businesses sold had good prospects of future viability. I did not impose on any bidder specific operating conditions on the length of time training must be carried on, or the quality of training to be provided.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guarantees of employment training income have been given to (a) Astra Training Services Ltd., (b) the Lakin Consortium, (c) The Training Business Group Ltd. and (d) METEL for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No guarantees of employment training income have been given to any purchaser of skill centres for the current or any subsequent year.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps were taken to ensure that the bid procedure, involved in the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency was fair and reasonable to all potential purchasers.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) announced on 13 March 1989 that he intended to sell the Skills Training Agency by private tender. In September 1989 advertisements were placed in the national press inviting potential bidders to contact Deloitte Corporate Finance for a copy of the information memorandum. The memorandum fully described the STA, the scale of its operation, the nature of its business, and the property that it occupied. Those interested could request information packs which give details of the individual skill centres and other units of sale. Further information was made available to shortlisted bidders, who were able to visit STA sites, talk to local managers, and make the inquiries they felt necessary to enable them to judge whether to proceed to make a final offer. All bids were evaluated against the same criteria, taking full account of the objectives for the sale. These objectives were placed in the Vote Office on 13 February 1990—[Official Report, 1 May 1990, column 42). All evaluations and recommendations on bids were made by professional advisers.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the selection of advisers on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency was based on competitive tendering.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Deloitte, Haskins and Sells were appointed on the basis of competitive tender to advise the Secretary of State on the feasibility of transferring the Skills Training Agency into the private sector. Deloittes were then appointed on the basis of a single tender to act as main sale advisers and to undertake some accountancy work.

The surveyors, King and Co., and solicitors, Field Fisher Waterhouse, advising on the sale were also appointed on the basis of competitive tenders.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps were taken to ensure that the general principles contained in paragraph 32.1.2 of chapter 32 of Her Majesty's Treasury's manual "Government Accounting on Disposal of Assets were observed in the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Department took particular care to ensure that appropriate systems of control were instituted over the disposal of assets involved in the privatisation of the STA. Staff involved in the sale of assets were not involved in valuations. Valuations of premises assets were made by external specialist advisers, appointed for the purpose. Valuations of equipment assets was subject to indexation using the "Business Monitor".

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the civil servants identified as surplus to requirements in note 11 of the Skills Training Agency accounts 1988-89 had left before 13 February.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The number of staff employed in the Skills Training Agency fell by some 500 between March 1989 and February 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on which assets the clawback procedure for the Skills Training Agency privatisation will apply.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Clawback has been applied to the freehold and long leasehold properties acquired by Astra Training Services Limited. It will be applied as appropriate when the Government's remaining property interests in the STA are sold.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the reduction of employers' income to the Skills Training Agency from March 1989 to February 1990.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The employer income received by the Skills Training Agency between April 1989 and March 1990 was £12·4 million compared to £13·8 million in the previous year. The reduction reflected in part the ending of two short-term training schemes, funded by the construction industry training board and the engineering industry training board respectively, which were available in 1988-89 but not in 1989-90; and in part a substantial reduction in the size of the British Coal retraining scheme for redundant employees.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if METEL and The Training Business Group Ltd., have benefited in any of the contractual agreements covering employment conditions or pension rights following the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The contractual agreements covering employment terms and conditions met the requirements of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. Pension and redundancy terms met requirements set by the Secretary of State. These regulations and requirements applied to all purchasers, including METEL and The Training Business, and were for the benefit of staff transferring to the private sector.

Lambeth Skill Centre

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any positive cash amounts were bid for the Lambeth skill centre.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No, at the final offer stage no positive cash amounts were bid for the Lambeth skill centre.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the regulations with The Training Business Group Ltd., and the transfer of Lambeth skill centre.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The regulations governing the sale of the Lambeth skill centre to The Training Business Group Ltd. were the same as those which applied to all the STA sales. Staff terms and conditions were transferred under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions were made in respect of the numbers of people employed at the Lambeth skill centre after its sale.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The skill centre was sold as a going concern, and no specific provisions were made in respect of the number to be employed by The Training Business after completion of the sale.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 3 July 1990

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to aid to Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: It remains our policy that long-term economic aid, but not humanitarian aid, to Romania is conditional on a genuine commitment to democracy and economic freedom in Romania. The conditions for aid to be released have not yet been met.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Zimbabwean authorities regarding the recent murder in Harare of Mr. Brian Angel, a United Kingdom citizen.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have expressed our concern about Mr. Angel's death to the Zimbabwe Government both in Zimbabwe and, most recently, in London on 22 June 1990 when the permament secretary of the Zimbabwe Ministry of Foreign Affairs called on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. We have called for a full investigation and understand that this is under way. We expect to be informed of the outcome.

South Africa

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the South African Government on their responsibility for Namibian debt.

Mr. Waldegrave: The pre-independence debt question is a matter for resolution between the Governments of Namibia and South Africa and discussions have already begun. Both Governments are aware of our hope that early solutions satisfactory to both sides will be found to this and other aspects of their future economic relations.

Soviet Union

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the content of the 28 April letter to him from the Soviet Foreign Minister; what was his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Shevardnadze's letter proposed a ban on all nuclear weapons from Baltic waters, airspace and the sea bed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' reply made clear that, while we agreed on the importance of maintaining stability in northern Europe, we did not believe that a nuclear-free Baltic would contribute to the security of that region.

Rights of the Child

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet set a timetable for the verification of the UN convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 9 May column 176.

Namibia

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what timetable he has been given by the South African Government for their withdrawal from and control of Walvis bay in Namibia in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 432.

Mr. Waldegrave: The future of Walvis bay is a matter for negotiation between the Governments of Namibia and South Africa. We hope that an early solution satisfactory to both sides can be found.

Angola

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent talks in Portugal between the two sides in the Angolan civil war.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome the Portuguese initiative in bringing the MPLA Government of Angola and UNITA together for talks. We are encouraged by the signs that some progress has been made towards resolving differences. We urge the two sides to continue to work for an early ceasefire and a lasting political settlement.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 16 and 17 July. Ministers will discuss how to carry forward work on institutional reform on the basis of the agenda approved by the Dublin European Council. Ministers will also have a short discussion of economic and monetary union and possibly of presidency plans for the social action plan. They will hold an orientation debate on development co-operation. Ministers will discuss assistance to central and eastern Europe against the background of political and economic reform, and will review Community relations with Romania. The Council will further discuss the Commission's proposals on developing the Community's relations with Yugoslavia. It may also again discuss proposals for strengthening EC relations with the Mediterranean countries in general. Discussion is also expected on EC aid to Chile and Colombia, Namibia's application for accession to the Lomé convention and the Communities' position on the forthcoming Paris conference on least-developed countries. The Council will discuss the GATT Uruguay round and will look forward to the Trade Negotiation Committee in Geneva the following week. It is possible that Ministers will discuss EC/EFTA relations, and will consider whether or not to call a Youth Council later in the year. The Council will discuss preparations for a meeting of the EC/Malta Association Council which will take place in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council. It is expected that the Maltese Foreign Minister will present Malta's application for EC membership.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 17 July. We expect discussion of a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market. The "utilities directive" liberalising public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors is close to adoption, but may not be ready for adoption at the Council. The last IMC of the Irish presidency completed consideration of a number of outstanding items: hence the current agenda is thinner than usual.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 23 July. On 8 May 1990, the Commission published its technical proposals for VAT, mutual assistance and intra-trade statistics based on the agreements reached at ECOFIN at the end of 1989. The Council will have an initial discussion of these proposals. There will be a discussion of the state of preparations for the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 23 and 24 July and may discuss the welfare of pigs and calves, reform of the dried grape regime, non-food uses of agricultural products, aromatised wines, organic production, pathogens in feedingstuffs and poultry and hatching eggs.

The Budget Council will meet on 26 or 27 July to consider the 1991 preliminary draft budget submitted by the Commission.

ENERGY

National Power

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is able to make an announcement about the chairmanship of National Power.

Mr. Wakeham: I am delighted to announce the appointment of Sir Trevor Holdsworth as chairman of National Power. Sir Trevor retired as chairman of GKN plc in 1988 and was president of the CBI from 1988 to 1990. He is chairman of British Satellite Broadcasting and Allied Colloids Group plc and deputy chairman of Prudential Assurance plc.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what month he expects Nuclear Electric plc to publish its annual accounts.

Mr. Baldry: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 2 July, Official Report, column 432.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he will review the appointment of Kleinwort Benson as his merchant banking advisers on the privatisation of the electricity supply industry of England and Wales;

(2) what action he proposes to take to extend the range of merchant banking advice he has available to him on the privatisation of the electricity industry of England and Wales.

Mr. Baldry: I am entirely satisfied with the role Kleinwort Benson is performing as merchant banking advisers on the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he expects to ask the chairman of Nuclear Electric to carry out a further review of the progress on the Sizewell B nuclear power station in 1991.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric will continue to review regularly progress at Sizewell B.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the need for new electricity generating capacity requiring to be completed in England and Wales in the 1990-1998 period (a) assuming the completion of Sizewell B nuclear power station and (b) assuming that it is not completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The need for new capacity by 1998 is uncertain and will depend upon a number of factors including the future demand for electricity and commercial judgments on the economic life of existing plant. These are matters for the industry.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will exempt public electricity suppliers from paying the non-fossil fuel levy in respect of all the costs of Sizewell B nuclear power station incurred after his letter to the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) of 26 June.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates were made of the level of the non-fossil fuel levy in 1994, 1995 and 1996 in the event of the cancellation of Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Baldry: The effect on the fossil fuel levy of the cancellation of Sizewell B would depend on the closure dates and performance of Nuclear Electric's other stations.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what independent financial advice he took on the comparison between the economics of combined cycle gas turbine stations and the completion of Sizewell B described in his letter of 26 June to the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark).

Mr. Baldry: My Department undertook the analysis using the best available information.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what comparisons he has made of the costs and benefits of expenditure on (a) Sizewell B nuclear power station and (b) research and development on the UKAEA safe integral reactor and other advanced nuclear power station designs;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on the environment of expenditure of £990 million on (a) Sizewell B nuclear power station and (b) energy efficiency and conservation.

Mr. Baldry: The assessment of the case for continuing with the construction of Sizewell B concentrated on economic grounds, although it also took into account environmental and other considerations. We perceive a need for new generating capacity in the mid-1990s, taking into account the potential for greater energy efficiency. The case for completing Sizewell B must therefore be assessed against the economics of alternative forms of generation, available for immediate construction. It is not likely that an alternative design of nuclear plant could be brought into operation within the time scale required.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to carry out a further review of the economics of the Sizewell B nuclear power station when it is (a) 50 per cent. complete and (b) 66 per cent. complete.

Mr. Baldry: We will continue to monitor closely the costs of Sizewell B through six-monthly progress reports which Nuclear Electric will continue to provide to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Any further economic analysis of Sizewell B will be carried out as necessary.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Brixton Prison

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prison officers in Brixton prison and (b) prisoners committed suicide in Brixton prison last year.

Mr. Mellor: Three prison officers employed at Brixton prison committed suicide in 1989. Eight inmates died by their own hand in the same year. At the coroners' inquests verdicts of suicide were returned in two cases; other verdicts were returned in the remaining cases.

Race Relations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to make a decision about the application from Staffordshire county council for section 11 funding for bilingual assistant posts.

Mr. John Patten: The application was received on 28 March and is currently under consideration. A decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Political Asylum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) political asylum and (b) variation of leave to remain in the United Kingdom have been received in each quarter since 1 January 1988; how many have been (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) await decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The available information is given in the tables.

Table A: Applications for refugee status, or variation of leave to remain in the United Kingdom, made during the period 1 January 1988 to 31 March 1990, by quarter.

	Applications for refugee status	Applications for variation of leave[2]

[4] Does not include decisions on referred entry clearance applications, or enquiries submitted by letter.
[5] This figure is a total of all work outstanding in the Refugee Unit.
[6] Includes referred entry clearance applications as well as variation of leave cases. The figure comprises 26,359 general immigration cases and 1,609 Eastern Europe.

Multi-faith Education

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent by the Commission for Racial Equality in the last five years in promoting multi-faith education.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The quantifiable cost of this work over the last five years is £12,850, being the net cost of three publications designed to convey factual information about different religions.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the numbers due to enter higher education in October 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Our latest projection indicates that, at over 208,000 the number of home students entering full-time higher education this autumn will be more than 4 per cent. above last year's record level.

Further Education, Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the capital allocations for further education for the Isle of Wight for the last two years; and if he will tabulate the projects to which the sums apply;

(2) if he will list the allocations for the Isle of Wight college of art and technology for (a) a residential block, (b) a short-course teaching block, (c) minor works and (d) equipment.

Mr. Jackson: Annual capital guidelines to the Isle of Wight authority for the college of art and technology for 1990-91 were as follows:

a. Residential Block	200,000
b. Teaching Block	155,000
c. Minor Works	20,000
d. Equipment	22,000

For 1988-89, a total of £40,000 was allocated for further education equipment. There were no capital allocations for further education in 1989-90.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research is being undertaken at his instigation by the Medical Research Council to establish any possible connections between Alzheimer's disease and human spongiform encephalopathies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Under the terms of its royal charter, it is for the council itself to decide what research to undertake. The council is not currently undertaking research into a possible connection between Alzheimer's disease and human spongiform encephalopathies. Until now there has been no scientific evidence to suggest that there is any possible link between these two diseases which show separate and distinct neuropathologies. The council is always willing to consider soundly based proposals for research.

Correspondence

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the reply to the letter of 21 June from the head teacher at Beaufort Street county primary, junior mixed and infants school, Liverpool.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following is the text of the Department's reply:

Dear Mrs. Redmond

Thank you for your letter of 21 June 1990 to the Secretary of State.

You have in your letter raised some very important issues. I understand that after nineteen years at Beaufort County Primary School you will be retiring with mixed feelings.

The Secretary of State wrote recently to all head teachers stressing his appreciation for the hard work teachers are undertaking in our schools. He has made clear on many other occasions that the teaching profession deserves gratitude, recognition and respect for its professionalism and the commitment shown to pupils. Ministers value that commitment very highly indeed.

I hardly need to tell you that teaching remains a very attractive career for many people. You may know that about 25,000 people enter or re-enter the profession each year. Despite what we are sometimes led to believe, wastage is generally low. The latest data indicate that less than 1% of teachers leave for other paid employment.

The Government's proposals for local authority current spending in 1990/91 allow for almost £15 billion to be spent on education. That is 9·6% higher than the comparable total for this year. Within the £15 billion total, specific grants of over £180 million will be available under the Education Support Grants programme and the LEA Training Grant Scheme to help implement the education reforms. Given effective management, the total should be sufficient to allow good progress to be made in getting the reforms into place. It allows for LEAs and schools to give more priority to spending on key areas of books and equipment, repairs and maintenance compared with the levels of spending assumed for this year.

The vast majority of teachers support the aims of the National Curriculum, which is founded on current best practice. Its introduction together with other education reforms does place extra demands on teachers, and the Government has responded to pleas that further reforms might overstrain teachers' goodwill and commitment. The intention is to ensure that the reforms are implemented at a reasonable pace, while retaining the momentum already gained.

You express particular concern about children with special educational needs (SEN) in relation to the National Curriculum. The Government believes that all children, including those with SEN should follow the National Curriculum to the maximum extent possible. The levels of attainment within the National Curriculum are being flexibly designed so that almost all pupils, including those with special educational needs, will be able to show what they have achieved and, more importantly, what progress they have made over time. Up until now too many pupils have had limited educational opportunities, and that includes children with SEN. Their curricula have often lacked breadth and balance and they have not been challenged into achieving their full potential. The Government firmly believes that the National Curriculum will lever up standards in education and benefit children including those with special educational needs.

Maintained schools are under a duty to offer the National Curriculum to all their pupils unless exceptions are made in accordance with the relevant Sections of the Education Reform Act (ERA). Some children with SEN, such as those referred to at the end of your letter, may have a statement of their special educational needs drawn up in accordance with the Education Act 1981. That Act rejects the concept of labelling pupils and concentrates instead on identifying individual pupils' needs and ensuring that those needs are met. In future each statement will be able to specify how the National Curriculum is to apply to the individual pupil. A statement can modify or disapply the National Curriculum requirements, and where appropriate offer an individual programme of study. However, where exceptions are made, maintained schools are still under duty to ensure that the curricula they offer pupils are balanced and broadly based, in accordance with the requirements of Section 1 of the ERA.

The quality of your own commitment to teaching and the development of your pupils is very clear from your letter. We too are dedicated to the well being of education and to giving the best support we can to teachers. Important changes are taking place, particularly with the introduction of the National Curriculum and Local Management of Schools, and I would ask you to have faith that those who will be working in and on behalf of education after you have retired will carry forward the best values and build upon the best practices of teachers in your generation.

Yours sincerely

G. A. HOLLEY

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in respect of each city technology college, what amount of annual per capita grant he has agreed to pay for the financial year beginning in September; what unit of cost per pupil has been used in calculating the amount of annual per capita grant; how this cost has been determined; and what enhancement of annual per capita grant has been allowed under the terms of paragraph 11 of the model funding agreement;

(2) in respect of each city technology college, what amount of earmarked annual grant he has agreed to pay in the financial year beginning in September; and for what purpose each element of earmarked annual grant has been approved.

Mrs. Rumbold: The level of recurrent expenditure for city technology colleges for the academic year beginning this September has not yet been agreed.

Birmingham City Action Team

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what actions he has undertaken in the past six months in support of the Birmingham city action team and the east Birmingham task force.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As a member of a team of Ministers with responsibility for oversight of city action teams and inner-city task forces in various parts of England, I became sponsor Minister for the Birmingham city action team and the east Birmingham task force late last year. I have sought to encourage co-operation between business, local authorities, the voluntary sector and local people. In this capacity, since the beginning of this year I have visited Birmingham seven times, meeting a variety of local groups and visiting local projects.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether United Kingdom Government aid will be given to support any development of the Rihard II power generation project in northern India.

Mrs. Chalker: At the request of the Government of India, the Department of Trade and Industry has nominated a main contractor for the second stage of the power station. An offer of aid has been made subject to appraisal of the project.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Reports

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reports other than reports prepared under the Companies Acts may be required under clause 78(2) of the Finance Bill 1990.

Mr. Lilley: The proposed tax return for companies under pay and file, which has been developed in consultation with bodies representing businesses and the legal and accountancy professions, requires companies to provide a copy of their full accounts prepared under the Companies Act, which will include the directors' and auditor's reports, with the return. Insurance companies will also be required to provide a copy of the report made to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under part II of the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

House Purchase

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the provisions of subsection (6) of section 354 of the Taxes Act 1988 in order to provide that interest eligible for relief on bridging finance for house purchases is extended beyond the initial 12-month period of relief as of right and not discretion.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 July 1990]: None. I am not aware of any need for a change in the present rules.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 2 July 1990]: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which Departments may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 2 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend's Departments comply with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what systems he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Treasury does not record each document generated. Papers are collected on to files which are given specific titles. These files are then registered on to a records management computer system. These practices are in accordance with the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967. Each file bears the classification of the highest classified document enclosed in each file.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the effects of the level of inflation on pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have maintained their commitment to increase the state retirement pension fully in line with prices, as measured by the retail prices index.

WALES

NHS Trusts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the number of national health service hospitals in Wales seeking self-governing trust status.

Mr. Grist: The Department has so far received no applications for self-governing status, but has received one formal expression of interest from Pembrokeshire health authority.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to establish the headquarters of the Countryside Council for Wales in Aberystwyth, Ceredigion; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have decided that the headquarters of the Countryside Council for Wales will be at Plas Penrhos, Ffordd Penrhos, Bangor, which is currently the Nature Conservancy Council's headquarters for Wales. The present buildings can accommodate most of the new headquarters staff although some additional accommodation may be needed later. It will probably be necessary to relocate the north Wales regional office of the Nature Conservancy Council which at present shares the headquarters buildings; the precise location will depend on the availability of suitable alternative accommodation but it is envisaged that it will be in, or within daily travelling distance of Bangor.

We have received representations for the headquarters to be situated at a number of other locations in Wales which we have considered very carefully. However, on balance we have chosen Bangor mainly because suitable accommodation requiring the minimum of adaptation is immediately available and it will reduce staff inconvenience and relocation costs to a minimum.

Crown Buildings, Cathays Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Export Credits Guarantee Department insurance services group to vacate the New Crown building, Cathays park, Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect the new company which is to be formed from the insurance services group of ECGD to move from the New Crown building, Cathays park as soon as alternative accommodation can be found; this is not expected to be for some time after incorporation of the company as a new building is likely to be necessary.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the energy efficiency of the Crown buildings, Cathays park.

Mr. David Hunt: A consulting engineer was commissioned by the Property Services Agency to produce an energy survey report on the Crown buildings in Cathays park. My Department and Property Holdings—Department of the Environment—are now considering the consultant's recommendations.

Quarrying

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call in the application by Pioneer Aggregates to extend Aberduna quarry, Maeshafn, Llanferres, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. On present information, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales sees no reason why an application of this nature, which does not appear to raise planning issues of more than local importance, should not be decided by Clwyd county council.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now pursue an appeal against the quashing of an enforcement notice relating to the activities of Messrs. F. G. Whitley and Co. in respect of the quarry Moel Findeg, Maeshafn, Llanferres, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. The notice was quashed by my right hon. Friend in accordance with the ruling given by the High Court and he has no present jurisdiction in the matter. He understands however that Clwyd county council is pursuing the case to the Court of Appeal.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the number of confirmed cases of BSE in (a) the east midlands and (b) Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Maclean: Following is the information:

County	Confirmed cases
Warwickshire	159
Northamptonshire	115
Nottinghamshire	83

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of holdings which have had at least one case of BSE in the last two years, by county, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The information for Great Britain for the two years from 30 June 1988 to 29 June 1990 is as follows:

Silver Foxes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many silver fox farms there are in the United Kingdom; and whether there is a feral population of silver foxes.

Mr. Maclean: Farmers do not need licences to keep silver foxes and we do not collect this information. There is no evidence of feral silver foxes in the United Kingdom.

Agricultural Dwellings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he takes to ensure the independence of his Department's assessment of the financial viability of proposals for agricultural workers' dwellings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he takes to ensure that his Department's independent advice to local authorities on proposals for agricultural dwellings is not compromised by the commercial advice given by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Local authorities receive advice on the rehousing of agricultural workers from agricultural dwellings house advisory committees—ADHACs. These consist of an independent chairman and one representative each of employers and employees. These representatives must be unconnected with the case. The role of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service is confined to the provision to ADHACs of a factual account of the agricultural enterprise in question. ADHACs are entitled to seek alternative sources of information on this point if they so wish.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marchioness

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will bring charges under the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, section 30, in connection with the collision between the Bowbelle and the Marchioness on 20 August 1989;

(2) if he will bring manslaughter charges against any of the parties involved in the collision between the Bowbelle and the Marchioness on 20 August 1989;

(3) if he will bring charges under the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, section 31, in connection with the collision between the Bowbelle and the Marchioness on 20 August 1989.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions announced on 26 April 1990 that the master of the Bowbelle was to be prosecuted for an offence contrary to section 27 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1970 as substituted by section 32 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988. The charge alleges that he failed properly to discharge a duty, namely to ensure that a proper lookout was kept by all available means, to such an extent as to be likely to cause the loss or destruction of, or serious damage to, another ship or the death of, or serious injury to, another person.

Those proceedings are now pending at Bow Street magistrates court. The Director of Public Prosecutions does not envisage any further charges.

PRIME MINISTER

National Health Service

Q6. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the progress of preparations on the Government's proposed changes in the financing of the national health service.

The Prime Minister: Royal Assent for the National Health Service and Community Care Act was received on 29 June. Preparations for implementation of the new financial arrangements are proceeding well.

Bootle

Q64. Mr. Carr: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Bootle.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Community Summit

Q71. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the recent European Community summit of Heads of Government held at the conclusion of the Irish presidency; and if she will list the principal conclusions.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 28 June.

USSR (Financial Aid)

Q105. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has recently held discussions with Chancellor Kohl and other European Community Government leaders concerning the subject of the provision of financial aid to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Aid to the Soviet Union was discussed at the Dublin European Council. I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made to the House on 28 June.

Metrocentre, Gateshead

Q116. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister when she next proposes to make a visit to the Metrocentre at Gateshead, Tyne and Wear.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Retirement Pensions

Q130. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the recent decision by the House of Lords in the case of James v. Eastleigh borough council, she will introduce amending legislation to provide equal age eligibility between men and women for the state retirement pension.

The Prime Minister: The James case was concerned with concessions to people by reference to their age. It has no effect on the law on social security and, therefore, there is no need to amend that law in the light of this judgment.

Film Studio, Rainham

Q134. Mr. Squire: To ask the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage proposals by MCA to build a film studio complex in Rainham, Essex.

The Prime Minister: I have met Mr. Lew Wasserman, chairman of MCA Inc. A number of Government Departments and agencies have had discussions with the company about its proposals.

IRA

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Prime Minister whether any representations were made to Her Majesty's Government by the Government of Australia about Irish terrorism following the murder of two Australian tourists by the IRA operating in Holland.

The Prime Minister: No such representations have been made.

Engagements

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with Chief Anyaoku, the new Secretary General of the Commonwealth. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Chinese ambassador. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Environment and Health

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by the Government to implement the European charter on environment and health; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European charter on environment and health consists in the main of a broad statement of principles and priorities for the protection of the environment and health. Government policy is already fully consistent with these principles and we are active in all the priority areas listed in the charter. We will be publishing a full statement of our policies for the environment in a White Paper later this year. As to the specific proposals in the charter for further international action, my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, indicated at the Frankfurt conference that the United Kingdom stood ready to discuss these through existing international machinery. A copy of his speech is in the Library.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Bridges)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bridges which traverse the London underground network have failed the BD21/84 guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from London Underground Ltd. that, as of 26 June 1990, 59 structures carrying highways over its network have failed the criteria of BD21/84.

In all these cases it has notified the highway authorities concerned so that necessary measures can be taken to maintain traffic and safeguard the public.

Strengthening work is in hand on six structures and temporary measures are either in force or being investigated for the rest.

Cycle Lanes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his most up-to-date estimate of the additional cost to public funds of incorporating a cycle lane on the second Severn bridge.

Mr. Atkins: The most recent estimate, provided in 1988, put the cost of incorporating a cycle lane in the second Severn bridge at almost £10 million.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding cycle lanes on the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Atkins: Representations have been received from cycling organisations, including Cyclebag and the Cyclists Touring Club, requesting that the second Severn crossing include provision for cyclists.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will incorporate a cycle lane in the second Severn road bridge.

Mr. Atkins: No, it is not the intention that a cycle lane should be incorporated in the second Severn road bridge.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the decision to omit a cycle lane from the design of the second Severn bridge was made.

Mr. Atkins: When tenders were invited in spring 1989 for the design and construction of a second Severn crossing, my Department suggested to tenderers that they should consider incorporating cycling facilities, although it was not a firm requirement that such facilities should be provided. None of the tenderers put forward proposals for a cycle lane on the new crossing.

Newbury Bypass

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he anticipates he will be in a position to announce jointly with the Secretary of State for the Environment the decision on the route to be adopted for the Newbury bypass on the A34.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for the Environment hope to be able to make an announcement soon following the public inquiry into the A34 Newbury bypass.

Railway Services

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with British Rail about improvements to existing rail links from the south coast to the north and Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: None. This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

East Usk Sidings

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to respond to the petition by residents of Newport, Gwent, against British Rail's operations at East Usk sidings, presented by the hon. Member for Newport, East on 18 June.

Mr. Freeman: The matters raised in the petition are for British Rail and the local authority to resolve. I understand that BR has had discussions with local residents and Newport borough council and plans to take remedial measures to alleviate the disturbance caused by its operations at East Usk sidings.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now make an ex-gratia payment to the families of the people who died when the MV Derbyshire sank.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no plans to make an ex-gratia payment to the dependants of those who were lost in the MV Derbyshire tragedy.

Private Aircraft

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of air hours flown in United Kingdom airspace for the last three years for which figures are available by (a) commercial and (b) private aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figures are not available in precisely the form requested, but the most likely numbers are given in the table.

The commercial aircraft figures relate to aircraft of more than 2,300 kg mass. The private aircraft figures are for United Kingdom-registered aircraft only, but for all flying including that flown outside United Kingdom airspace.

	Commercial	Private
1987	606,000	800,000
1988	655,000	876,000
1989	706,000	991,000

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many private pilots are currently registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has issued 55,135 private aeroplane licences and 2,203 private helicopter licences. However, the CAA has no knowledge of how many of these licence holders are currently exercising the privileges of the licences.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents for each of the last three years have involved aircraft flown by private pilots.

Mr. Atkins: Not all accident reports indicate the type of licence held by the pilot. A flight which is clearly a private flight may well be flown by the holder of a commercial licence and conversely many private aircraft are registered in the public transport category so that they can be flown on payment by, for example, other club private pilots. Taking these points into consideration, the safety data analysis unit of the CAA believes that the following table represents the accidents involving pilots with private or student licences.

Accidents involving United Kingdom registered aircraft flown by pilots with private or student licences

	Fatal accidents	Total accidents
1987	19	137
1988	11	165
1989	11	203

Accidents to foreign registered aircraft in United Kingdom airspace flown by private licence holders

1987	2	3

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ban the transport of nuclear waste and spent nuclear fuel on roll-on, roll-off passenger ferries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 July 1990]: No. I am satisfied with the safety arrangements for such transport, which is permitted within the conditions prescribed in the international maritime dangerous goods code.

Rail Industry (Injuries)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway staff have been killed or suffered major injuries for the period 1979-83 and 1984-88; and what they represent as a proportion per 1,000 railway staff employed.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply, 24 May 1990, c. 294]: In the period 1984-88, 98 staff died and 979 suffered major injuries, totalling 1,077. The average number of staff employed during that period was 181,200. The proportion of deaths and major injuries to 1,000 employed was 5·94.

In the period 1979-83, 153 railway staff died and 1,613 suffered major injuries, totalling 1,766. The average number of staff employed during that period was 228,200. The proportion of deaths and major injuries to 1,000 employed was 7·74.

In the period 1974-78, 209 railway staff died and 3,023 suffered major injuries, totalling 3,232. The average number of staff employed during that period was 246,400. The proportion of deaths and major injuries to 1,000 employed was 13·1.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Physical Laboratory

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards the establishment of the National Physical Laboratory as an executive agency.

Mr. Ridley: I am establishing the National Physical Laboratory—NPL—and an executive agency with effect from 3 July. The NPL is the eighth executive agency to be established within the DTI. Nearly 50 per cent. of the Department's staff are now working in agencies.

Establishing the NPL as an executive agency will assist it to improve further the quality and cost effectiveness of its services. The primary measure of the NPL's performance will be its ability to satisfy its customers in terms of value for money and the quality of its work whilst fully covering its costs. I am also setting the NPL quality of service and efficiency targets as follows:

- to improve to 90 per cent. by 1994-95 the percentage of calibrations completed within six weeks;
- to complete at least 95 per cent. of contract research investigations on time over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95;
- to increase by at least 3 per cent. the number of research milestones achieved annually per scientist over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95;
- to reduce the cost of administrative support so that by 1994-95 it represents no more than 20 per cent. of NPL's full economic cost;
- to increase the proportion of staff time attributed to programme-related work by 5 per cent. over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95;
- to reduce the cost of NPL per member of project staff by 2 per cent. per annum over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95; and
- to secure a combination of output efficiency and cost reduction measures which, taken together, represent a requirement on NPL to improve its overall efficiency by more than 2 per cent. a year over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95.

DEFENCE

Parachute Training

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 9 May, Official Report, column 137, how many of the 97 cases of injury and death of parachute trainees at RAF Brize Norton in 1989 were related to ill health; how many had seen a medical officer prior to the incident; and of these, how many were certified unfit to continue with immediate training.

Mr. Neubert: There were no cases of injury or death at No. 1 parachute training school which were related to ill health. It is not known how many had seen a medical officer prior to the incident; medical records for those attending parachute training at RAF Brize Norton are returned to the trainees unit for regular soldiers and to general practitioners for territorials at the end of the course. If trainees were certified as unfit to continue immediate training they would not parachute again until cleared by the medical officer.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there was an outbreak of sickness and diarrhoea at the RAF Brize Norton parachute training camp during the first two weeks of August 1989.

Mr. Neubert: No. On a station the size of RAF Brize Norton, with upwards of 7,000 personnel, sickness and diarrhoea are endemic.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given to parachute instructors so that they will recognise concussion or other forms of illness which could impair the safety of parachute trainees; and what first aid training is given.

Mr. Neubert: All NCO parachute jumping instructors are required to obtain a first aid certificate during basic training as a physical training instructor; this includes recognition of some forms of concussion. There is no training given in the recognition of any forms of illness as the trainees have immediate access to fully qualified medical officers the moment they feel unwell. During all forms of parachute training there is a fully qualified medical attendant and ambulance available at all times. There is always an individual responsibility to report sick if the trainee considers he is unfit to continue training. Queen's regulations demand this for all services.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parachute trainees at RAF Brize Norton reported to a medical officer and were categorised as requiring 48 hours or more withdrawal from the course in 1989.

Mr. Neubert: Fifty-seven.

Army Personnel (Summer Camps)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps will be taken to ensure that the safety of Army personnel attending summer camps can be secured, in the light of information provided by his Department to Messrs Deansway Catering of Worcester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Appropriate measures are taken to provide adequate security, in the light of the threat, to all personnel attending summer camps run by the Army. In the case of those units on which information was provided by Deansway Catering Company Ltd., steps have already been taken to alert the relevant districts and units on the need to be particularly vigilant.

Oil Pollution, Aquila

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cause of the recent leak of oil from his Department's site at Aquila on to adjoining land; what steps have been taken to remove the pollution caused; on how many previous occasions similar incidents have occurred; what steps are being taken to prevent a recurrence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Extensive investigations made by my Department have not revealed any recent leakage of oil from the MOD Aquila site. It appears that the source of the recent pollution was outside the MOD site and that oil was introduced into one of the drains which run underneath the site. Two minor incidents involving oil spillage have occurred on the Aquila site, in February 1988 and June 1989. In each case immediate action was taken to limit and repair any damage.

ENVIRONMENT

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the operation of the drinking water inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The drinking water inspectorate was established on 2 January 1990. Its principal tasks will be to check that the quality of public water supplies complies with legal requirements and that water companies are carrying out improvement programmes to which they are committed by undertakings under section 20 of the Water Act 1989. Before the end of the year, the inspectorate will make an inspection of each of the 39 water companies. It will publish a report upon its first year of operations, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Housing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of housing starts and completions in the Northern region in each quarter of 1988 and 1989 and the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Latest available figures for the Northern region show 2,027 dwelling starts reported in the fourth quarter 1989, and 2,428 in the first quarter of 1990. Corresponding figures for dwellings completed were 2,837 and 1,996, respectively. The latest quarterly figures for 1988 up to the third quarter of 1989 appear in table 1.3 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 1, No. 40", which is in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of housing starts and completions in each standard region in 1988 and 1989, together with the percentage change between 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest available figures for all housebuilding, private and public, are as follows:

Housebuilding Starts and Completions

(Thousands)

	Starts			Completions
	1988	1989	Per cent. change	1988	1989	Per cent. change
North	10·3	9·8	−4	8·6	9·7	+13
Yorkshire and Humberside	17·9	15·9	−11	16·9	14·4	−15
East Midlands	21·7	16·8	−23	19·9	15·9	−20
East Anglia	16·5	11·4	−31	13·2	13·7	+3
South East:
London	15·4	13·7	−11	12·5	12·9	+4
Rest of South East	63·7	41·9	−34	55·5	47·9	−14
South West	30·2	19·2	−36	23·7	21·0	−11
West Midlands	19·1	15·6	−19	17·6	14·2	−19
North West	18·7	18·0	−4	18·5	16·3	−12
England	213·4	162·3	−24	186·3	166·0	−11

In 1988 private enterprise housebuilding was at its highest since 1973. Because of the need to raise interest rates to keep down inflation the fall during 1989 and early 1990 is not surprising. Interest rates will remain at current levels as long as is necessary to defeat inflation.

Greenhouse Effect

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons currently in use which are greenhouse gases.

Mr. Trippier: HCFC 22 is an important transitional substance to replace CFC 12. Its global warming potential (GWP) is about a fifth of CFC 12. Other new chemicals are being developed which are also greenhouse gases but with a fraction of the GWP of the CFCs they are to replace.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of the use of HFC 134A as an alternative to chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Trippier: HFC 134A is an environmentally acceptable alternative to CFC12—it has no ozone depletion potential and its global warming potential is less than a sixth that of CFC12. The Government expect industry to use substitutes in a way which ensures minimum emission to atmosphere.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number and distribution of feral mink in Great Britain.

Mr. Trippier: My Department maintains no records of numbers or distribution of feral mink.

Pavements

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory requirements and regulations concerning the minimum and maximum heights of pavements local authorities are required to observe.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The law on highways is a matter for the Department of Transport, but I understand that there are no such statutory requirements.

Joint Committee for Nature Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the proposed joint committee for nature conservation will assume responsibility for the peatland resource survey currently being undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council;

(2) whether the proposed joint committee for nature conservation will have a responsibility for establishing the criteria for identifying and safeguarding blanket and raised peatland bogs of national or international importance.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The main duties and responsibilities of the joint committee were set out in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 23 November 1989, Official Report, columns 16-17. The committee will be responsible for establishing guidelines to assist the county councils in designating sites of special scientific interest and sites of national or international importance for nature conservation. Proposals for the detailed programme of work to be undertaken or overseen by the committee are currently being drawn up in consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council and the other Government Departments involved.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to reconsider their position on phase-out targets, for chemicals that destroy the ozone layer, before the forthcoming Montreal protocol renegotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 2 July 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made in the House by the Secretary of State yesterday.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his oral answer of 27 June, Official Report, columns 309-10, whether his undertaking that new outfalls will be designed to be fully treated includes schemes which are currently at the planning stage.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My officials wrote on 7 June to the National Rivers Authority to explain how the policy announced on 5 March by my right hon. Friend, at column 452, would be applied. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library.

This makes it clear that discharges to estuaries must receive secondary treatment where the dry weather flow exceeds 1,500 cu m a day. The outfall at Lavernock will therefore be designed to discharge sewage which has received secondary treatment.

Crown Buildings, Cathays Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the requirement for modern air conditioning in the (a) Crown building and (b) New Crown building, Cathays park.

Mr. Chope: (a) The Crown building at Cathays park has no air conditioning except for one small computer room in the basement. There has been no assessment of the requirement for air conditioning in the remainder of this listed building.

(b) The New Crown building was built with air conditioning throughout. Following an assessment of the additional requirements of modern information technology, the system is currently being enhanced.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the application of combined heat and power to the future energy requirements of the Crown buildings complex, Cathays park, Cardiff.

Mr. Chope: No assessment has been made of the application of combined heat and power to Cathays park. Such an assessment would normally be appropriate when the existing plant became due for renewal.

Construction Industry

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will fund further research into the use of Mundic in the construction industry.

Mr. Chope: No.

Tyneside Enterprise Zone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 7 June, Official Report, column 688, and 20 June, Official Report, column 566, what was the sum added to the revenue support grant for England 1990-91 in respect of business rates otherwise payable in (a) the Newcastle and (b) the Gateshead portions of the Tyneside enterprise zone.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1990]: A total of £81 million was added to the revenue support grant for England in 1990-91 as being broadly equivalent to the amount of rates that would have been paid in 1990-91 but for the exemption from rating of properties in enterprise zones. No part of this figure is specifically attributed to any individual enterprise zone. As all business rates are gathered into a central pool and then paid out to authorities on the basis of their relevant populations an authority containing an enterprise zone would not lose income as a result. Any difference between authorities in the amount which they need to spend to provide a standard level of service at average efficiency is measured in their standard spending assessments and is provided for in their RSG.

Tourist Resorts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider specific grants for capital projects to tourist resort local authorities.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1990]: My Department has no plans to make such grants. I understand that the English tourist board is the agency through which taxpayers' money is made available for tourism in England.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected magnitude of the liquidated damages that the Property Services Agency will recover from the main contractor at the RAF St. Mawgan site in relation to the building of nine hardened aircraft shelters.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The extent of liquidated damages, if any, cannot be assessed until the contract is complete.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which company is supplying the main door drive units at RAF St. Mawgan; and whether extensive prototype tests have been carried out to the satisfaction of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The units were supplied by NEUERO Industrieanlage Technik of Melle, West Germany. Prototype tests were carried out several years ago before NEUERO units were used for similar projects at other RAF stations, where the units are operating satisfactorily.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the site welding diary at RAF St. Mawgan recognised by the Property Services Agency in its contract specification.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 June 1990]: There is no specific requirement for a "site welding diary" in the specification. The clerk of works' diaries recording the labour on site and areas of work in hand on each day are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many representations he has received complaining about the quality of Property Services Agency overseeing of the steel-work element used in Government-funded contracts;

(2) if he will place in the Library the detailed criteria used by the Property Services Agency when choosing specialist sub-contractors.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 June 1990]: It is the responsibility of a main contractor to deliver a project in accordance with the contract specification, including dealing with any problems relating to products incorporated in the design. No project in which Cimolai has been involved has included defective products when handed over to the PSA. Representations have been received about problems arising between Cimolai and its sub-contractors, but these have not related to the quality of PSA oversight. In considering the choice of sub-contractors (whether selected by the main contractor or nominated by the PSA) PSA has regard to a firm's expertise and experience in the field of work concerned and previous performance, and to its resources and financial stability.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Cope: With the exception of the cost, which I consider would be a breach of commercial confidentiality, the information is as follows:

Consultancy	Subject	Outcome
1980-81
Beecom (NI) Ltd.	Monitoring the implementation of productivity/ bonus schemes	Systems implemented

Kidney Disease

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of renal units in the Province; and what is the number of persons receiving kidney dialysis.

Mr. Needham: There is one regional renal unit in the Province together with a satellite renal dialysis unit in Omagh. At present 145 persons are receiving kidney dialysis.

Gas Pipeline

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will commission a study of the feasibility of installing a branch gas pipeline to Northern Ireland from the gas pipeline crossing the Irish sea from Morecambe bay.

Mr. Needham: The possibility of using natural gas for electricity generation in Northern Ireland is currently being examined. It is too early to speculate on the likely route of any gas interconnector from Great Britain.

Population Statistics

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the proportion of the Northern Ireland population aged (a) under 10 years, (b) under 15 years, (c) under 20 years, (d) under 25 years, (e) under 35 years, (f) over 60 years, (g) over 65 years and (h) over 80 years.

Mr. Needham: The latest available information taken from the 1989 mid-year population estimates is as follows:

	Per cent.
Under 10 years	17·0
Under 15 years	24·9
Under 20 years	33·5
Under 25 years	42·2
Under 35 years	56·7
Over 60 years	16·5
Over 65 years	12·3
Over 80 years	2·5

Derry Youth and Community Workshop

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show, for each year since it was set up, the sums paid from public funds to the Derry youth and community workshop; which body provided funds and for what amounts; for what purposes they were granted and used; and whether the Fair Employment Agency or its successor has carried out or is considering an investigation into this body.

Mr. Needham: The information requested on the sums paid from public funds is set out in the table:

Period Ending	Public Funding £	Source
31 December 1978	140,953	Department of Manpower Services
31 December 1979	272,624	Department of Manpower Services

31 March 1989	1,148,980	Department of Economic Development
31 March 1990	1,301,134	Department of Economic Development

The purpose of this funding was to provide training and work experience for the development of young people in the Londonderry area.

The Derry youth and community workshop has not been investigated by either the Fair Employment Agency or the Fair Employment Commission. The latter determines its own investigation policy.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many permanent employees the Inner City Trust, Londonderry has; and how many are (a) Protestants, (b) Roman Catholics and (c) others; whether the Fair Employment Agency or its successor carried out any investigation into this body or is any investigation contemplated.

Mr. Needham: When registered by the Fair Employment Commission on 6 February 1990 the Londonderry Inner City Trust had 150 employees. The Fair Employment Commission is not releasing information on community composition from individual monitoring returns at present.

Neither the Fair Employment Commission nor the former Fair Employment Agency has conducted investigations into this body.

Health Centres

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) each health centre in the council areas of (i) Londonderry, (ii) Limavady and (iii) Strabane, (b) the number of employees at each such centre, (c) the number who are male and female and (d) the number of

(1) males and (2) females who are (x) Roman Catholics, (y) Protestants and (z) others and if he will indicate how many shown as others were born or educated in (A) Great Britain, (B) the Irish Republic and (C) elsewhere.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The Western health and social services board has made its return to the Fair Employment Commission as required by the fair employment legislation. The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is not required by the fair employment legislation, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has made to the European Commission communication on aging (COM(90)80 FINAL).

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health today.

Blind People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many blind people receive the disability premium.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not available.

Retired Households (Income)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, on the basis of data in the family expenditure survey for 1987, he will state the average percentage income of (a) all retired households, (b) single retired households, (c) retired one-man households and (d) retired one-woman households; in each case in all five quintile groupings, which is derived from (i) original income, (ii) contributory retirement pension, (iii) supplementary benefit and (iv) housing benefit; and what is the total average income of each group in each quintile.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the tables[1].

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those receiving assistance from the independent living fund are (a) in part-time employment or (b) in full-time employment.

Mr. Scott: Information on the employment status of the fund's beneficiaries is not available. However, I understand from the fund that only a small number of beneficiaries is working full or part-time.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what directions have been given by his Department to local social security offices with regard to the publication of local statistics on the numbers of claimants in residential care or nursing homes in receipt of income support payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Statistics which show the characteristics of income support recipients are not generally made available from individual local offices but collated and published centrally in a way consistent with uniformity, the reliability of the data concerned and economical practice. Following recent requests to local offices for information of varying scope and detail about people in homes, local offices have been advised not to respond but to refer them if necessary to headquarters for consideration. Responses to all the referrals so far received have been made.

SCOTLAND

Rents to Mortgages

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if a survey has been conducted of the average incomes of individuals or families who have made inquiries or applications for participation in the rents to mortgages scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes conducted a postal survey in April 1990 of 118 applicants for rents to mortgages. Details of income levels of those who responded are given in the tables. A further, larger survey is being undertaken, the results of which are expected to be available this autumn.

Table 1

Over £401	2	3·0

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of a home purchased under the rents into mortgages scheme; what is the average discount expected on each home; and what is the geographical spread of inquiries/applications for participation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The data available are as yet insufficient to provide a meaningful average house value under the rents to mortgages (RTM) scheme. Scottish Homes' initial estimate of house prices, based on experience of right-to-buy sales indicates a market value of houses sold under RTM of £26,000 in the current year.

Scottish Homes' survey of early applicants suggests that the average discount entitlement in RTM house sales will be 31 per cent.

Inquiries and applications in respect of the RTM scheme have been received from all areas of Scotland but in particular from Lothians and Borders, Renfrew and Inverclyde, Glasgow and central Scotland.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of Scottish Homes' rents into mortgages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Early experience of the rents to mortgages trial scheme is encouraging. More than 1,000 inquiries have been received from eligible tenants, with 154 applications in process and three sales having been completed.

The scheme is being closely monitored. Any modification or extension to the scheme which seems desirable in the light of experience will be introduced as soon as practicable.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from tenants' groups in Scotland regarding the extension of Scottish Homes' rents into mortgages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inquiries have been received from individual tenants about a possible extension to the scheme but no such representations have been submitted by tenant groups.

Protection of Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those areas of special protection for birds as well as those Ramsar sites and areas with dual designation for the protection of birds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The sites designated in Scotland thus far are:

Special Protection Areas
Rhum
Priest Island
Laggan Peninsula
Firth of Forth Islands
Abernethy Forest
Handa Island
Ailsa Craig

Ramsar
Loch an Duin

Combined Special Protection Areas and Ramsar Sites
Loch Druidbeg
Loch of Skene
Loch Gye
Gruinart Flats
Glean Na Muice Duibhe (Duich Moss)
Bridgend Flats
Gladhouse Reservoir
Din-Moss-Hoselaw Loch
Fala Flow
Glac na Criche
Feur Lochairn

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide extra funds to local authorities to enable them to build more sheltered housing complexes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Resources for housing capital expenditure in 1990-91 were allocated to local authorities in March on the basis of their relative housing needs and with reference to their capital programmes and housing plans. It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities for use of these allocations in the light of local circumstances, including the need for sheltered housing projects if this is seen as a priority in their area.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council on the designation of extensive sites of special scientific interest as a means of protecting the natural environment in Caithness and Sutherland; and what response he has made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Nature Conservancy Council provided advice on the need to protect peatland areas of international significance in Caithness and Sutherland in its two publications: "Birds, Bogs and Forestry" and "The Flow Country". The council also gave detailed evidence to the Highland regional council working party on land use strategy in Caithness and Sutherland and set out a two-stage notification programme of SSSIs. The working party report listed the areas of actual and potential SSSI and recommended an indicative forestry strategy. My right hon. and learned Friend endorsed that report and in his announcement of 21 March 1989 encouraged the relevant public agencies to use it as a framework for land use change.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to ensure that the recommendations of the Highland regional council working party report on land use strategy are followed by the Nature Conservancy Council in its proposed descriptions of sites of special scientific interest in Caithness and Sutherland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Nature Conservancy Council was one of the bodies which gave unanimous support to the report produced by the Highland regional council on land use strategy in Caithness and Sutherland. I have no evidence to suggest that any of these bodies, including the Nature Conservancy Council, have taken any action contrary to the indicative forestry strategy recommended in the report and endorsed by my right hon. and learned Friend on 21 March 1989.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that the 20,000 hectares of land in Caithness identified by the Highland regional council working party report on land use strategy as possible forestry area contained in stage 1 SSSI proposals are retained as a reservoir of plantable land eligible for assistance within the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Highland regional council working party report provides a framework within which relevant public agencies can exercise their statutory duties, whether in approving an application for grant under the woodland grant scheme or notifying an area as an SSSI. The total amount of land in the possible and preferable forestry areas, taking account of the whole of NCC's actual and intended notification programme, is greater than the area of land required to establish a viable forestry industry.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional funds to Scottish local authorities to enable them to increase respite care provision for carers of profoundly mentally handicapped persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 July 1990]: It is for local authorities to decide on the allocation of funds to particular services for which they may be responsible. The revenue support grant settlements in recent years will have enabled local authorities to increase their support for carers of handicapped persons where this was deemed a priority.

A1 (Dual Carriageway)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to incorporate a new Haddington bypass to his plans to extend the A1 dual carriageway from Tranent to Haddington; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for this project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Following the routes south of Edinburgh report on public consultation and the Government's decisions published in April, consultants are to be appointed to assess the feasibility of the various dualling options between Bankton (near Tranent) and Dunbar. The Government have concluded that the dualling of the section between Bankton and Haddington should be brought forward in the shorter term.

It is intended that the terminal point for the dualling to Haddington will be to the west of the town and it is envisaged that a new junction will be constructed at this location to cater for the very substantial flow to Haddington itself. It is estimated the total flow on the A1 will drop by one third at this point. At Haddington, several options will be available for the route of a dual carriageway and these will have to be considered so that a robust decision can be taken on the precise junction location west of the town. For this reason, the first report to be submitted under the feasibility study will include recommendations for both the section from Bankton to Haddington and the Haddington bypass. This report is programmed for completion by summer 1991, and it is not possible to give specific details on the termination of the initial dualling and the phasing of the bypass until the detailed engineering and economic evaluations are concluded. However, it is the intention to complete the necessary preparatory work to allow a start of the dualling by the mid-1990s.

RENAVAL Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received a response from the European Commission concerning the eligibility of Strathclyde region under the terms of the RENAVAL programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 June 1990]: The Commission has not yet informed us of its decision on the eligibility application submitted in May 1989 on behalf of the shipbuilding areas of Strathclyde. On receipt of a favourable decision a programme of measures will be prepared and submitted to the Commission for approval.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to encourage tourist agencies, airlines and the Civil Aviation Authority to work together to stimulate new tourist trade by promoting new British destinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority and the regional tourist boards are actively engaged with all interested parties in developing and promoting the tourism industry in all regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage the tourist market from Japan to Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority already actively promotes the United Kingdom as a tourist destination to the Japanese. In addition the BTA has established the "Britain Welcomes Japan" group under the chairmanship of Countess Spencer. This group is looking at ways of encouraging more tourism from this vitally important market, particularly by highlighting the steps the tourism industry needs to take to make Britain more attractive to Japanese visitors. An action plan with recommendations for the industry will be produced shortly.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to encourage air travel tourists to use regional entry points, rather than London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority promotes the advantages and benefits of using regional airports to foreign visitors and airlines. This is particularly important if we are to encourage overseas visitors to the regions and thereby spread the economic benefits that tourism brings.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect that the decline in the number of young travellers between the ages of 16 to 24 years as a proportion of all incoming tourists will have on the tourist market.

Mr. Nicholls: International passenger survey figures show that the number of young travellers between the ages of 16 to 24 years has remained broadly constant over the three years from 1986 to 1988, at about 17 per cent. of all visitors.

One of the key objectives of the European year of tourism is to encourage travel by younger people. It is recognised that the young traveller of today is the mature tourist of tomorrow.

The British Tourist Authority, through its promotion of the United Kingdom, encourages a broad spectrum of age groups to visit this country.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has any plans to further increase investment in the British Tourist Authority from next April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority will receive grant in aid amounting to £27·7 million in 1990-91, an increase of over 11 per cent. compared to 1989-90. Funding in subsequent years will be considered in the light of the Government's overall public expenditure plans.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on encouraging airport and other tourist-related staff to learn European languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is very important that all employees in the tourism industry should be encouraged to learn foreign languages. Foreign language competencies are an important element of the skills they need to welcome overseas visitors to this country. This is fully recognised in the British Tourist Authority's recent report "Lost for Words-Language Skills in the British Tourism Industry" and in its related European tourist year language campaign.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage other British cities to follow Birmingham's worldwide promotion scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority has been actively involved in the "Birmingham Invites You" overseas marketing campaign. A number of other cities have undertaken joint promotions overseas with BTA and the authority is always happy to consider proposals. I would welcome similar initiatives by British cities and recommend they make use of BTA's expertise in promoting Britain abroad.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the accessibility of Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland for the European tourist.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority is keen to spread tourists throughout Britain and widely promotes the attractions of the country worldwide.

The British Tourist Authority continually assesses transport links between all areas of the United Kingdom and points of entry, making appropriate representations to the responsible Government Departments, and potential transport operators.

Employment Credit

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the various employment credit schemes apart from action credit which his Department has been involved with since 1979; the areas where the schemes have run; and for how long.

Mr. Eggar: During the consideration of the action credit pilots, my Department was aware of a small number of "employment credit" schemes in various parts of the country. Officials were not involved with the schemes except to the extent of gaining some information about the way in which they were run and establishing that they complied with social security rules.

Health and Safety

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 435-36, what proportion of the Health and Safety Executive factory inspectorate's resources each year is spent on the identification and inspection of unregistered workplaces.

Mr. Nicholls: Resources devoted to identifying and inspecting unregistered workplaces vary but between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate spent 6·5 per cent. of its resources on this work.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 24 April, Official Report, column 170, if he will give details of the cases prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive which resulted in suspended custodial sentences; and what criteria were used by the Health and Safety Executive in deciding to prosecute.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Two suspended custodial sentences have been imposed. Both followed prosecutions for failing to comply with a prohibition notice.

In 1985 the managing director of an asbestos stripping company was prosecuted for failing to comply with a prohibition notice. He received fines and costs totalling £7,500 and a 28-day suspended sentence.

In 1987 a director of another asbestos stripping company received two suspended sentences of nine months to run consecutively, for contravening a prohibition notice.

The Health and Safety Executive will generally institute criminal proceedings in cases where the offence is of a flagrant, wilful or reckless nature which either has, or could have, resulted in serious injury.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in relation to local initiatives by Health and Safety Executive areas which have concentrated on premises within a particular geographical area or sector of economic activity, what proportion of premises inspected have been found to be unregistered with the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not centrally available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information the Health and Safety Executive's SHIELD database records about the registration of factory premises under section 137 of the Factories Act 1961; whether the information is available on the basis of Health and Safety Executive area by year; and at what cost in terms of person hours and computer time the information is compiled.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's SHIELD database has the facility to record the following information upon receipt of a notice of occupation under section 137 of the Factories Act:

Establishment keyname
Full name and address
Postcode
Local authority code
Main economic activity code
Number employed
Telephone number
Enforcing authority area
Health and Safety Executive area
Date record opened
Ownership code

Information on the registration of factory premises under section 137 of the Factories Act 1961 by Health and Safety Executive area and the cost in terms of person hours and computer time is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate by area the Health and Safety Executive has made of the approximate proportion of factory premises that are not registered with the Health and Safety Executive; and what approximate proportion of the factory work force is believed to work in unregistered premises.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has made no estimate of the number or proportion of unregistered factory premises or the number of employees who work in such premises.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of prosecutions and (b) the average fine under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 for each year from 1983 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the exact format requested in the question. However, the table shows the numbers of informations laid, the number of convictions and the average fine made under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 since they came into force on 1 August 1984.

Prosecution action taken under Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 by the HSE's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates 1984 to 1988-89

Date of hearing	Number of informations laid	Convictions	Average fine on conviction £
1984	5	2	500
1985	82	73	423
1986[1]	15	7	293
1986-87[2]	45	40	350
1987-88[2]	35	30	328
1988-89[3]	14	13	217

[1] 1st quarter of year 1 January-31 March.
[2] Year commencing 1 April
[3] Provisional.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were (a) the numbers of prosecutions and (b) the average fine under the Asbestos Products (Safety) Regulations 1985 for each year from 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

According to the returns made by the enforcement authorities, the number of prosecutions and the fines paid for breaching the Asbestos Products (Safety) Regulations 1985, which came into force on 1 January 1986, as amended by the Asbestos Products (Safety) (Amendment) Regulations 1987, were as follows:

Year	Cases	Fine £
1986	Nil	—
1987	1	3,000
1988	1	500
1989	Nil	—

The regulations have been largely effective in eliminating the use of asbestos in consumer products, and I am not aware of any general problem.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of prosecutions resulting from a fatality within the construction industry for each year from 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Health and Safety Executive field inspectors were (a) appointed, (b) resigned and (c) retired for each year from 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 24 April at column 172.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the date and location by borough of the deaths of construction workers in the London area between the dates of 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for the year commencing 1 April 1988 is shown in the table. Data for subsequent years are not yet available. An analysis of fatal injuries by local authority district could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of prosecutions and (b) the average fine for offences under the Asbestos Regulations for each year from 1974 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the exact format requested in the question. However, the table shows the numbers of informations laid, convictions and the average fine made under the Asbestos Regulations 1969 from 1974 to 1988-89, and the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987 which revoked the 1969 regulations from 1 March 1988.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Health and Safety Executive has any plans to follow up the construction site blitzes; and whether an evaluation has been made of the effect of blitzes.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has no plans to mount another national construction site safety blitz campaign.

The HSE published a summary of the blitz campaign in a free magazine-style report entitled "Build Safety"—130,000 copies of which were distributed.

The HSE's evaluation of the campaign concluded that it was a success and as a result, smaller-scale local campaigns have since been undertaken in various parts of the country.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide an estimate of the proportion of (a) construction sites that are registered and (b) minor and major injuries that were reported to the Health and Safety Executive for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to provide an estimate of the proportion of construction sites which are registered with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). The HSE does not have information on the total number of sites which exist as notification is required only where work is expected to last for six weeks or more.

All fatal injuries in the course of construction activity are reported to the enforcement authorities. The proportion of other reportable injuries which are not reported is not known. It is estimated that non-reporting of such injuries for employees in all sectors is of the order of 50 per cent. Although there is no firm evidence that the problem is more acute in particular sectors there are indications which suggest the degree of under-reporting in the construction industry may be significantly higher.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the number of fines, (b) the average fine and (c) the number of (i) improvement and (ii) prohibition notices issued under the Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980 for each of the years 1980 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. However, the following table shows the number of improvement notices, prohibitions served, informations laid, convictions and the average fine per conviction made under the Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980 since they came into force on 18 August 1981.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many licences were (a) issued and (b) withdrawn for each year from 1983 to 1989 under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. The table gives the number of licenses issued, renewed and revoked under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 by calendar year since they came into effect on 1 August 1984.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stretford, 24 April, Official Report, column 174, for each of the years 1974 to 1989, inclusive, if he will give (a)

the number of Health and Safety Executive prosecutions passed to the Crown prosecution service for consideration and (b) the results of the prosecutions that were passed on.

Mr. Nicholls: Records are not kept of Health and Safety Executive (HSE) prosecutions passed to the Crown prosecution service for its consideration. Most health and safety prosecutions are undertaken by HSE inspectors.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the fatalities of construction workers which led to prosecution by the Health and Safety Executive under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act; under which section of the Act the prosecutions were taken; which of these prosecutions were against individual directors, managers or other employees, rather than against the company itself; and which of the deaths are still under investigation by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate for 1988 and 1989 the number of claimants without paid jobs who (i) had not looked for work in the last week, (ii) had not looked for a job in the last four weeks, (iii) were not available for work within the next two weeks, (iv) were in categories (i) and (iii) and (v) were in categories (ii) and (iii) and in each case, were (a) looking after family/home, (b) long-term sick or disabled, (c) believed no jobs available, (d) retired, (e) studying and (f) other.

Mr. Nicholls: The information cannot be extracted from standard tabulations and is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants in each month since 23 February have been (a) issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudicating officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed and (ii) disallowed, (d) where the claim has been disallowed, the numbers who were (i) successful or (ii) unsuccessful in claiming reduced income support, (e) where an adjudication decision is pending, the numbers who have been (i) successful, and (ii) unsuccessful in claiming reduced income support and (f) have been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing employment; how many of those in (f) have had their benefit disqualified; and if he will provide the figures for Great Britain, each region, and area adjudication sections in London.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman to parts (a), (b), (c) and (f). Parts (d) and (e) are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment using the labour force survey 1989, if he will estimate the number of claimants unemployed who would like work, were available for it and had sought it in the last four weeks, or were waiting to start a new job.

Mr. Nicholls: Information from the 1989 labour force survey indicates that there were 1,270,000 claimants without a paid job who were available for work, and had sought it in the last four weeks, or were waiting to start a job already obtained.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate, using the labour force survey 1989, the number of claimants unemployed who (i) would not like work and of these, the percentages with (a) care responsibilities, (b) long-term sick, disabled, (c) retired, (d) did not want or need work, (e) believed no jobs available and (f) studying, (ii) would like work but are not available in the next two weeks and, of these, the percentages (a) with care responsibilities, (b) long-term sick or disabled, (c) studying, (d) awaiting a job, (e) other and (iii) would like work and are available but have not sought work in the last four weeks, and the percentages (a) with care responsibilities, (b) thought no jobs available, (c) long-term sick or disabled, (d) not yet started to look, (e) retired and (f) other.

Mr. Nicholls: Available estimates from the preliminary results of the 1989 labour force survey are shown in the table:

Notes: Figures are individually rounded to the nearest 10,000.
The reconciliation of the claimant count with the claimant figures obtained from the 1989 LFS has been affected by an improvement in the design of the questionnaire and also by the change in benefit regulations for under 18 year olds in September 1988. As a result, the reconciliation has been restricted to claimants aged 18 and over.

Training, St. Helens

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of 18 to 25-year-olds registered as unemployed in St. Helens over the past two years, (b) the proportion of male to female unemployment in the 18 to 25-year-old group, (c) the number of people in this age bracket on ET schemes, in St. Helens and nationally, (d) the average duration of unemployment for each year in the 18 to 25-year-old age group in St. Helens and (e) the number of YTS trainees both nationally and in St. Helens, and the proportion of these trainees who find jobs with the company or training agency at the completion of their training.

Mr. Nicholls: Unemployment by age is produced quarterly. The following two tables give the extent of the available information and show for the unemployed aged 18 to 24 years (a) the numbers in the St. Helens local authority district together with proportions of male and female unemployment and (b) the median duration of unemployment.

The information requested about employment training is not available.

At 31 March 1990, there were about 359,000 young people undertaking YTS training in Great Britain. The latest information shows that 66·7 per cent. of all YTS leavers go into a job within three months of leaving and very nearly half of these remain with the same employer. Corresponding figures for St. Helens are not available.

[1] The Median duration of unemployment is the length of time spent unemployed, which is exceeded by 50 per cent. of the unemployed.

Note:—Comparisons are slightly affected by the September 1988 change in benefit regulations for under 18 year olds.

European Social Fund

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reason his Department has not yet submitted the operational programmes to the European Commission concerning United Kingdom European social fund objectives 3 and 4 operational programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department submitted the revised ESF operational programmes for objectives 3 and 4 to the European Commission on 15 June.

Pop Concerts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to receive the Health and Safety Executive's report by the working party on new guidelines at pop and rock concerts.

Mr. Nicholls: It is hoped that a first draft of the Health and Safety Executive's guidance on pop concerts and similar events will be available for consultation in early autumn 1990.

Youth Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations from professional football clubs about the future number of youth training places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have had no direct representations from professional football clubs about the future number of youth training places. The Professional Footballers Association, which is the national managing agent for youth training in football, has recently signed a contract to deliver youth training in 1990-91.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of youth training places allocated to each professional football club for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The information requested is commercial in confidence.

HEALTH

Health Authority Chairpersons

11. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the salary levels of health authority chairpersons.

62. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the salary levels of health authority chairpersons.

100. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the salary levels of health authority chairpersons.

122. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the salary levels of health authority chairpersons.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a few letters, but we believe that health authority chairmen carry heavy responsibilities and that the increases recently announced put their remunerations on a more realistic basis.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest in the formation of self-governing hospital trusts have so far been received.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest have been made for hospitals opting out of existing arrangements within the national health service.

21. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last had discussions with the chairman of the Mersey region health authority; if the opting-out of hospitals on Merseyside was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

27. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making in setting up national health service trusts.

29. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the implications for hospitals which choose to become national health service hospital trusts.

59. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress regarding self-governing trusts for hospitals.

71. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest in the formation of self-governing hospital trusts have so far been received.

111. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest in the formation of self-governing hospital trusts have so far been received.

96. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence of the views of community health councils regarding the formation of self-governing hospital trusts is available to his Department.

104. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence of the views of community health councils regarding the formation of self-governing hospital trusts is available to his Department.

117. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence of the views of community health councils regarding the formation of self-governing hospital trusts is available to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave my hon. Friends the Members for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo), and for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Franks) and the hon. Members for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes), for Wigan (Mr. Stott), for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) and for Southport (Mr. Fearn) earlier today.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether national health service trusts will have access to all his Department's guidance; and if they will be required to follow it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All current and future guidance to the national health service will be made available to national health service trusts. It will be for trusts as it is for health authorities to determine the extent to which they follow it. They will be expected to ensure that they take full account of all legal obligations, requirements of statutory bodies, hazard or safety notices, advice relating to patients, public or staff safety, personal privacy and patient confidentiality. The national health service and Community Care Act gives the Secretary of State for Health reserve powers to direct trusts to follow particular guidance should this be necessary.

113. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funds he proposes to make available to hospitals considering trust status to undertake public consultation with local communities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The relevant regional health authorities will be charged with carrying out public consultation on applications for national health service trust status. We are making available additional funds of £500,000 to be used for consultation on first wave applications for trust status.

67. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy to refuse any application for self-governing status for Guy's hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no intention of prejudging any potential application for national health service trust status.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest information on the total expenditure incurred to date on preparation for self-governing hospital trusts.

49. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest information on the total expenditure incurred so far on preparation for self-governing hospital trusts.

106. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest information on the total expenditure incurred so far on preparation for self-governing hospital trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have made no estimate of the cost of preparing applications for trust status.

42. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in Leicestershire have applied for trust status to date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by his Department regarding public consultation prior to the formation of self-governing hospital trusts.

33. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by his Department regarding public consultation prior to the formation of self-governing hospital trusts.

36. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by his Department regarding public consultation prior to the formation of self-governing hospital trusts.

52. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the machinery of consultations that he intends to implement before hospitals can become self-governing trusts.

80. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by his Department regarding public consultation prior to the formation of self-governing hospital trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department issued guidance to NHS managers on procedures for consultation on applications for NHS trust status yesterday. Copies of this guidance have been placed in the Library.

Children Act

23. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress made towards the implementation of the Children Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are consulting on the regulations and guidance necessary to implement the Act in October 1991. New rules of court will be drafted for consultation in the autumn. A comprehensive training and dissemination programme is under way.

Junior Doctors

58. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to meet representatives of national health service junior doctors to discuss their terms and conditions of service.

64. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors in the national health service.

83. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors in the national health service.

102. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the working party investigating the conditions of junior hospital doctors.

108. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors in the national health service.

120. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Lambie) and for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) earlier today.

NHS Inflation

25. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate for national health service inflation for the remainder of the current financial year.

74. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate for national health service inflation for the remainder of the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) earlier today.

Community Care

26. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been received from local authorities regarding the costs of implementing the Government's proposals on community care.

94. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been received from local authorities regarding he costs of implementing the Government's proposals on community care.

119. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what communications have been received from local authorities regarding the costs of implementing the Government's proposals on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) earlier today.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from local authorities regarding earmarked grants for community care.

54. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from local authorities regarding earmarked grants for community care.

66. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from local authorities regarding earmarked grants for community care.

116. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from local authorities regarding earmarked grants for community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received many representations in correspondence and at regular meetings with local authority associations about all aspects of community care finance, including earmarked grants.

48. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the proposed implementation date for the Government's proposals on community care.

50. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the proposed implementation date for the Government's proposals on community care.

109. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the proposed implementation date for the Government's proposals on community care.

123. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the proposed implementation date for the Government's proposals on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The proposed implementation date for the community care proposals is 1 April 1991.

34. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on his plans for community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received many representations both in correspondence and at regular meetings with organisations concerned with our plans for community care.

NHS Patients

28. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of in-patients being treated by the national health service.

40. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in total are being treated by the national health service annually.

69. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients are being treated each year by the national health service.

105. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of patients being treated annually by the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information is contained in a statistical bulletin "NHS hospital activity statistics for England 1979-1988/89" reference 2/1/90, copies of which have been placed in the statistics section of the Library.

Child Care

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the number of statutory child care cases currently unsupervised because of the shortage of local authority social workers.

30. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the number of statutory child care cases currently unsupervised because of the shortage of local authority social workers.

55. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the number of statutory child care cases currently unsupervised because of the shortage of local authority social workers.

110. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the number of statutory child care cases currently unsupervised because of the shortage of local authority social workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally. The regional offices of the social services inspectorate will continue to monitor the situation within their areas.

Patient Care

31. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to promote the quality of care for patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) on 5 June at column 584.

NHS Nurses and Midwives

32. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the pay and conditions of nurses and midwives employed by the national health service since 1979.

51. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the pay and conditions of nurses and midwives in the national health service since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Pay for nursing and midwifery staff has risen by an average of 43 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

In 1983 the Government established an independent pay review body to recommend levels of pay for nursing and midwifery staff. All seven review body reports have been accepted in full, with staging in three cases.

Hours of work were reduced from 40 to 37½ a week during 1980-81 without loss of pay. This was equivalent to a 6·5 per cent. increase in pay.

New clinical and education grading structures were introduced in 1988 and 1989 respectively which provide better and more flexible career opportunities for those staff engaged in clinical and teaching practice. A new pay structure for senior nurse managers has recently been agreed in the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council.

Community Charge Capping

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications of community charge capping for local authority social service provision.

35. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications of community charge capping for local authority social service provision.

76. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications of community charge capping for local authority social service provision.

112. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications of community charge capping for local authority social service provision.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The charge capping which, if the House approves, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment intends to set, represents his view of what is reasonable and appropriate in all the circumstances of the authorities concerned. It will be for each of the authorities to decide how to restrain their excessive budgets to within the level of the cap.

Social Workers (Recruitment)

37. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss recruitment of social workers.

84. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss recruitment of social workers.

95. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss recruitment of social workers.

114. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss recruitment of social workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have regular meetings with local authority associations when they can raise this matter if they wish.

Cot Deaths

39. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what Government support is presently given to the study of sudden infant death syndrome; what plans he has to increase it; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of Health and the Department of Trade and Industry have jointly accepted the responsibility for examining the claim that chemical emissions from cot mattresses may be a contributory factor in sudden infant death syndrome. The Department of Health has requested the Medical Research Council (MRC) to commission a critical review of the research literature on sudden infant death syndrome.

The MRC is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science. In 1988-89, the latest financial year for which figures are available, the MRC spent approximately £62,000 on research into sudden infant death syndrome. In the same year, the MRC spent a further £310,000 on other research which may contribute in part to an understanding of sudden infant death syndrome.

65. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the appointment of a paediatric pathologist for each regional health authority to support cot death research.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information from regional health authority short-term plans for 1990-91 submitted last February shows that there is at least one paediatric pathologist in post in 10 regions: in two others there are vacant posts which are being advertised and in each of the remaining two regions the health authorities plan to introduce a funded post by April 1991.

Regional Health Authorities (Funding)

41. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on funding for regional health authorities in 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 1 May at column 523.

District Health Authorities (Deficits)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current projection for the number of district health authorities that will be in deficit at the end of the financial year.

43. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current projection for the number of district health authorities that will be in deficit at the end of the financial year.

53. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current projection for the number of district health authorities that will be in deficit at the end of the financial year.

89. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current projection for the number of district health authorities that will be in deficit at the end of the financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service management executive is engaged in continuing discussions with regional health authorities. It is not yet possible to identify the number of district health authorities that will have an underlying deficit in 1990-91.

Oakham Hospitals (Ministerial Visit)

44. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is now in a position to announce a date for the proposed visit to hospitals in Oakham, Rutland, of the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell).

Mr. Dorrell: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

District Health Authorities (Financial Year)

45. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when is the beginning of the financial year for district health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The answer is 1 April.

Disabled People (Legislation)

46. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has completed his discussions with the local authority associations on sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

97. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of his consultations on implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

101. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will now implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

121. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in consultation with local authorities on implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friends and the right hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 28 June at column 309.

Premature Deaths (Bootle)

47. Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to combat the high incidence of premature deaths in Bootle caused by lung cancer and heart disease.

Mr. Dorrell: As the responsibility for health promotion and disease prevention services in Bootle is primarily for the health authority locally, the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of South Sefton health authority for details.

Local Authority Homes (Transfer)

57. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications of the transfer of local authority homes into the independent sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper "Caring for People" made it clear that the Government see the future development of community care, including residential care, taking place in partnership between the private, voluntary and statutory sectors. Local authorities will continue to have a valuable role to play in provision. The transfer of some local authority homes to the independent sector may, however, provide more choice for users and also more competition between providers, leading to better value for money and a more cost-effective service.

Speech Therapists

60. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding speech therapists in west Norfolk.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a few letters on the subject.

Health Expenditure

61. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the real terms increase in health expenditure since June 1987.

Mr. Dorrell: Expenditure information is available only for financial years. Planned expenditure for the NHS (England) in 1990-91 is £23·5 billion. This will mean a real terms increase since 1987-88 of 9·7 per cent.

Patient Services (Collaboration)

63. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect of collaboration between the national health service and the private sector on services to patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The independent health sector performs some 510,000 operations and treats 900,000 out-patients each year. It also provides 68,000 nursing home beds, mainly for long-stay elderly patients. This represents a significant additional input to national health care.

The Government's White Paper "Working for Patients" encourages increased collaboration with the independent sector. It is frequently mutually beneficial to share expensive resources, and there are numerous examples of NHS and independent units collaborating in the use of buildings, high-technology equipment, support services and key manpower. Such joint ventures increase the options available to NHS managers as well as to patients, and release or generate resources in the NHS for further improvement in health services for all. The independent sector also makes a useful contribution in helping to reduce waiting times.

107. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examples there are of partnerships between the national health service and the private sector currently operating.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of successful and cost-effective joint ventures are operating between the health service and independent sector which release NHS resources for further improvement to health services for all. Some examples are shown in the table.

Health Authority	Provider	Nature of service
Central Manchester	Nuffield Hospitals	Eye surgery
Coventry	Bioplan	Day surgery and Endoscopy
National Hospital for Nervous Diseases Special Health Authority	BUPA	Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanner
West Lambeth	Churchill Clinic	ENT surgery
West Midlands Region	AMI Priory Hospital Birmingham	Lithotripsy

91. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on collaboration between the national health service and the private sector.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) on 1 May at column 517.

GP Lists

68. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the size of the average general practitioner's list.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 20 February at column 717.

Sports Injuries

70. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase research and training into the treatment of sports injuries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

Hospital Closures

72. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have been closed within the Trent region during the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The following table gives the numbers of hospitals/facilities which we are aware were approved for total closure in the last five years in the Trent region.

Hospital/ facilities closed		Hospital/ facilities opened		In-patients treated	Out-patients treated
Calendar year		Financial year
1989	13	—	—	—	—
1988	9	1988-89	9	626,101	3,335,852
1987	4	1987-88	8	612,890	3,343,899
1986	7	1986	7	592,398	3,400,645
1985	1	1985	8	578,370	3,300,193

It is important to bear it in mind that closures are often balanced by new facilities or other reprovision and that the closure figures in themselves do not necessarily reflect any reduction in overall service provision.

Northwick Park Hospital

73. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has held discussions with interested parties recently on the future of Northwick Park hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr Hughes) on 9 March at column 898, a steering group has been established to look at the implications of the proposed closure of the clinical research centre at Northwick Park hospital. The steering group is chaired by the Department of Health and has representatives from the health service and the Medical Research Council. The steering group will be making its first report to Ministers in the near future.

Eye Tests

75. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to commission a further survey into the impact of eyetest charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

38. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further evidence has been made available to his Department regarding the effects of the introduction of charges on the number of eyesight checks undertaken.

81. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further evidence has been made available to his Department regarding the effects of the introduction of charges on the numbers of eyesight checks undertaken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no new independent evidence on sight test demand since the publication of the independent NOP report earlier this month.

NHS Reforms

77. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement as to preparations for his reforms of the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Royal Assent to the National Health Service and Community Care Act was received on 29 June. Preparations for implementation of the reforms from 1 April 1991 are proceeding according to plan.

Out-patient Services

78. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made to out-patient services as a result of the proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Out-patient departments, like others, will benefit from the emphasis on improved quality of care and efficiency in the delivery of services.

Hospital Doctors

79. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage change in the number of hospital doctors in the national health service since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of hospital doctors in the national health service in England has risen from 39,859 at 30 September 1979 to 45,574 at 30 September 1988, an increase of 14 per cent.

These figures include permanent paid and honorary staff.

Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle upon Tyne

82. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next proposes to visit the new ward block now under construction at the Royal Victoria infirmary, Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present to visit the new ward block under construction at the Royal Victoria infirmary. I understand that he lay the foundation stone for the ward block, which at a cost of £30 million represents the Northern region's largest capital project to date, in October 1988.

Preventive Health Care

85. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage preventive health care for older people.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government fund the Health Education Authority, which is committed to the promotion of good health in old age and ensure that all its relevant programmes address the health education needs of elderly people. In addition, the Department funds a number of voluntary organisations under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, which in various ways promote the physical and mental well-being of the elderly.

Carers

86. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the recommendations of the Social Services Select Committee report on carers.

98. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the recommendations of the Social Services Select Committee report on carers.

115. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the recommendations of the Social Services Select Committee report on carers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In accordance with the accepted convention that responses should not be issued while Parliament is in recess we will publish our response when Parliament reconvenes in the autumn.

Residential and Nursing Care

87. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to increase the beds which will be needed in the residential and nursing care sectors for older people by the year 2000.

Mr. Dorrell: Our policy is to ensure diversity and choice in the provision of high quality services. Residential care may be directly provided by local authorities or secured through arrangements with the independent sector where this offers the best way of meeting care needs.

The provision of continuous residential health care is a responsibility of the health service. The overall level and type of provision are matters for individual health authorities to decide in the light of local circumstances and patients' needs.

General Practitioner Contracts

88. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received on the new form of contract for general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 1 April we have received some 700 letters concerned with the general practitioners' new contract.

Hip and Knee Replacements

92. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the growth in numbers of hip replacement and knee replacement operations carried out in national health service hospitals over the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: From 1979 to 1989 the number of hip replacement operations performed annually rose from 29,500 to 45,600, an increase of 55 per cent. Information on the number of knee replacement operations carried out in 1988-89 is not yet available, but preliminary figures indicate that there were around 10,000 compared with 3,100 in 1979—an increase of 200 per cent.

Health Authority Mergers

93. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is being made to ensure fair and reasonable representation by constituent authorities on new health authorities when two or more are merged.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Proposals for health authorities to merge will be considered only where there is a compelling case for change. The non-executive members of any new authority which is formed as the result of a merger will be chosen solely on the basis of the individual contribution they can make to the new authority and not to represent the interests of any particular section of the population or area. Nevertheless, non-executive members will usually have some connection with the area served by the new authority and an understanding of the needs and issues of the whole district.

Mental Handicap Services

56. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to introduce a specific grant earmarked for mental handicap services.

103. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to introduce a specific grant earmarked for mental handicap services.

118. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to introduce a specific grant earmarked for mental handicap services.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) earlier today.

Chiropractice

96. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his policy towards the report of the Medical Research Council which recommends that chiropractice should be introduced into the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: While we have noted the report with interest, there are no plans to introduce chiropractice into the NHS.

Consultants

99. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of the appointment of the 100 additional consultants, announced in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will be.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 27 February at columns 125-26. Once all 100 new consultants are in post, the annual cost of the scheme will be about £37 million.

Chiropody

124. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the future of the chiropody profession.

Mr. Dorrell: The only representations we have received concerning recognition of qualifications by the chiropody board are those made in my hon. Friend's recent letters. I have agreed to meet my hon. Friend to discuss the issue and my office will be contacting him shortly to arrange this.

Tobacco Advertising

125. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend the terms of reference for the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The terms of reference of the committee were agreed by the Government and the tobacco industry as part of the voluntary agreement on tobacco products' advertising and promotion, and health warnings. We are satisfied that the current terms of reference allow the committee effectively to fulfil its role.

Kevin Keary Trust

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide financial assistance to the Kevin Keary Trust.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received no request for financial assistance from the Kevin Keary Trust direct. I suggest that the trust should consider approaching the local health authority in the first instance.

Greater Manchester Hospitals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about staffing levels in hospitals in Greater Manchester and care of the elderly.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Staffing levels in hospitals and, in particular, the care of elderly people in Greater Manchester is a matter for the local health authorities, taking account of all the guidance and good practice available.

The North Western regional health authority has, in particular, issued guidance in a document entitled "Standards for Nursing Services", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Information Technology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals taking part in the national pilot scheme for information management and technology training; what are the terms of reference; when the pilot scheme will finish; when he expects to publish the results; and if he will indicate which of those hospitals taking part in the scheme have expressed an interest in trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service Training Authority (NHSTA) has responsibility for management of a joint Department of Health/NHSTA information management and technology (IMT) training strategy for England and Wales. There are at present two national pilot schemes in progress.

Project 05. This aims to identify IMT training needs and to produce open learning materials to meet these. The first stage of the pilot project should finish by October 1990 with the learning materials published shortly afterwards.

The sites involved are:

- Barnsley District General Hospital
- Bronglais Hospital Aberystwyth
- Doncaster Royal Infirmary[1]
- George Eliot Hospital Nuneaton
- Glenfield General Hospital Leicester
- Hope Hospital Salford
- Leighton Hospital Crewe[1]
- Northern General Hospital Sheffield[1]
- Riverside District Health Authority (Charing Cross and Westminster Hospitals, District Family and Community Services and Mental Health Units)
- St. Bartholomews Hospital London[1]

[1] Have expressed an interest in trust status.

Project 027 This pilot relates to district health authorities rather than to individual hospitals. It aims to set up the infrastructure for the delivery of IMT training. The pilot scheme is due to run from August 1990 to February 1991 with the results published shortly afterwards.

The district health authorities involved are:

- Cornwall and Isles of Scilly
- Leicestershire
- Macclesfield
- Plymouth
- Portsmouth
- South-East Kent
- West Dorset
- York

and one district chosen and financed by the Welsh Office yet to be decided.

The following interests in trust status have been expressed within the participating districts:

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly: Cornwall Mental Handicap Services, Cornwall Community Services, West Cornwall Acute Services.

Leicestershire: None.

Macclesfield: Community and Mental Handicap Services, District General Hospital Acute Services, Mental Health Services.

Plymouth: Acute Services.

Portsmouth: None.

South-East Kent: William Harvey and Buckland Hospital, District Community Services.

West Dorset: Acute Services, Mental Health Services, Community and General Services.

York: None.

Total Quality Management Initiative

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals that are taking part in the national pilot scheme for the total quality management initiative; when the pilot scheme will finish; when he expects to publish the results; and if he will indicate which of those hospitals taking part in the scheme have expressed an interest in trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of £500,000 was made available in 1989-90 from central funds to assist 17 district health authorities implement total quality management. Funds for 1990-91 projects will be allocated shortly. Many of the existing projects have applied for continued funding, reflecting the long-term nature of implementation.

A first evaluation of the projects will commence this autumn. It is expected that early findings will be made available to the NHS next year.

Expressions of interest in trust status do not necessarily correspond with district-led initiatives on total quality management. Details of hospitals which have taken part in the scheme and also shown an interest in trust status are as follows:

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the European Commission communication on aging (COM(90)80 FINAL).

Mr. Dorrell: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State presented an explanatory memorandum to Parliament on 29 June, copies of which are available in the Library and the Vote Office. We have made it clear that while we support the spirit of the communication, we believe that a number of the proposals are best considered in the context of national arrangements.

Weil's Disease

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what forms of protection are available in the United Kingdom against Weil's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Although leptospirosis is a rare occupational disease, recently there has been increased public concern about the possible risk associated with water sports such as canoeing.

Advice on protection is aimed primarily at prevention. Clubs, local authorities and water companies provide water sports enthusiasts with a leaflet giving advice on how to reduce the risk of infection by taking simple precautions. Open wounds should be covered with waterproof dressing and injuries sustained during the activity should be washed thoroughly and a waterproof dressing applied. If symptoms develop, no matter how minor, medical opinion should be sought.

A vaccine is available in Japan, but it is not generally effective against the strains of the disease found in this country.

Lassa Fever

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Lassa fever have been identified within the United Kingdom for each year since 1982.

Mr. Dorrell: Three cases have been identified in the United Kingdom during the period 1982-1989. One case occurred in 1982, one in 1984 and a third in 1985.

New Medical Practitioners

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has, by region, on the numbers and percentages of all newly registered medical practitioners entering (a) the hospital sector and (b) general practice, in each year since 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ethnic Minority Employees

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on the numbers of ethnic minority people employed in the (a) family practitioner committees and (b) community health service;

(2) what information he has on (a) the number and (b) the grades of ethnic minority people employed in management in the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not hold this information centrally.

Overseas Doctors Association

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times he has met the Overseas Doctors Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Ministers and officials meet the association from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues.

Residential Homes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of places in homes for mentally handicapped people in 1979 and for the latest year for which figures are available in each of the 14 health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the table.

Smoking

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include nicotine tablets on a trial basis among the items available on general practitioners' prescriptions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to Nicorette chewing gum. We do not intend to make this product available on NHS prescription as the advisory committee on borderline substances has consistently recommended that it has no therapeutic use in the treatment of disease.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the chairman and deputy chairman of the new human fertilisation and embryology authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to announce that Professor Colin Campbell, vice-chancellor of Nottingham university and emeritus professor of jurisprudence at the Queen's university, Belfast and Lady Brittan JP, member of the Equal Opportunities Commission, have accepted appointment as respectively chairman and deputy chairman. As the human fertilisation and embryology authority cannot be set up until the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill has received Royal Assent, their acceptance is on a provisional basis until then.

The new authority will have a major task to prepare the way for operating the licensing and other powers for which the legislation provides and I think it right to make these appointments now so that this work can begin. The remaining membership of the authority will be announced later.

In the period before the new authority assumes its full powers, probably in the summer of 1991, I very much hope that the interim licensing authority will continue to perform the functions for which it was set up in 1985 by the Medical Research Council and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists with the same vigour and commitment as it has always shown.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the total annual cost and the average annual cost of full-time posts in the National health service; and if he will break down the average cost for a full-time equivalent post into pay, national insurance superannuation, and other costs such as office space, heating, lighting etc., for 1979-80 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 May 1990]: Information on salaries and wages costs derived from annual accounts and manpower returns submitted to the Department for the financial years 1979-80 to 1988-89 (the latest available) is shown in the table.

The format of the annual accounts of health authorities does not provide for office, other accommodation, heating, lighting and similar costs to be assigned between staff and patients. Similarly, comprehensive data to permit the derivation of annual figures for particular elements within the average total salaries and wages cost per whole-time equivalent are not available centrally.

(b) Department of Health annual censuses of NHS medical and non-medical manpower as at 30 September of each year.

Notes:

1. The figures are gross salaries and wages costs (including employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions) and relate to directly employed NHS staff. The costs of non-NHS staff (agency, etc), locums, and payments to contractors for family practitioner services are excluded.

2. The whole time equivalent figures used are not adjusted for the reduction in nurses' working hours during 1980-81 and exclude certain special health authorities and other NHS bodies such as the Health Education Authority. The comparatively small total whole time equivalent figures for such authorities and bodies were not collected until 1987 and thus for comparability all relevant other data have been excluded.

Listeria

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the number of cases of listeria for each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The number of cases by month for the past 12 months of listeriosis, derived from reports to the communicable disease surveillance centre and to the division of microbiological reagents and quality control at the central public health laboratory, Colindale were as follows:

	Number
1989
June	26
July	44
August	21
September	14
October	9
November	9
December	3
1990
January	7
February	6
March	11
April	9
May	[1]10

[1] Provisional figure.

In the first quarter of 1990 there were 24 cases of listeriosis reported, compared with 67 in the corresponding period of 1989. In 1989 there was a decline in cases reported in the final two quarters of the year for the first time since surveillance began more than 20 years ago. Previously there has always been an increase in summer and autumn.

Public Record Office

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Department complies with the guidelines issued by the Public Record Office on the selection of documents for permanent preservation. Decisions on which documents are transferred to the Public Record Office for this purpose are taken in consultation with PRO inspecting officers.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Department receives and generates many millions of documents in the course of its business, and it would be impracticable, and disproportionately costly, to record these individually. However, the vast majority are placed, with related documents, on registered files in accordance with well-established registry practices.

Hospitals (Air Emissions)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that every precaution is taken in hospitals to prevent release of halons in the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The June 1990 issue of Health Service Estate, published by the Department, a copy of which is available in the Library, contained guidance on the problems and the safe use of chlorofluorocarbons and halons for building.

Regional supplies officers have also been asked to seek alternatives to products which contain halons and CFCs.

Further advice will be issued as necessary.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the need to protect the environment from the emission of dangerous substances used in hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The effects produced by emissions from hospitals are well understood throughout the national health service. Hospitals are required to comply with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act and the Clean Air Act. The removal of Crown immunity will require the national health service to comply with impending comprehensive legislation on environmental protection.

NHS Dentists

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the total fees paid to national health service dentists for work relating to dentures is related to the cost of laboratory work; and if such a specific percentage is taken into account by the dental rates study group in arriving at fee assessments.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1990]: In the current scale of fees for national health service dental treatment, which came into effect on 1 October 1989, approximately 52 per cent. of the total fees available to dentists for the provision and fitting of dentures is attributable to dental laboratory work. The fee for each item of treatment involving laboratory work is, however, calculated separately by the dental rates study group, using a representative sample of current industry catalogues to indicate the cost of the laboratory work involved.

TRANSPORT

Oil Spillage, West Coast

59. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what emergency provisions have been made to cover the event of an oil spillage off the west coast of Scotland.

Mr. McLoughlin: Because it is impossible to predict where or when a tanker accident may occur, the marine pollution control unit's (MPCU) contingency plan consists of highly mobile resources on short-notice standby positioned at various locations around the United Kingdom, from where they can be deployed quickly to the west coast of Scotland or any other part of the United Kingdom that may be threatened by a major oil spillage.

Local authorities on the west coast of Scotland all have their own contingency plans for dealing with coastal pollution and can call on advice and assistance from the MPCU, which in a major spillage would co-ordinate onshore clean-up operations as well as directing offshore activities. This is to ensure a fully integrated response.

The MPCU is this year holding its annual major counter-pollution exercise off the west coast of Scotland to test the effectiveness of plans to deal with an oil spillage in that area. The exercise will take place on 4 and 5 July in the North Minch and will involve local authorities in both the Isle of Lewis and the Scottish mainland.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state what steps he intends to take following the report of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee on access for disabled people to buses and coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The committee worked closely with my Department in drawing up its "Recommended Specification for Buses Used to Operate Local Services", published in June 1988. This includes features such as lower steps, textured and colour-contrasted handrails, bus stopping signs, step edge markings, and bell pushes which can be reached by seated passengers.

Among other initiatives to promote the use of the specification, my Department has produced a video, "Welcome Aboard", illustrating the features recommended by the committee and demonstrating the benefits to passengers with disabilities.

The main DPTAC recommendations have also been proposed by my Department for inclusion in a draft EC directive on bus and coach construction.

Motorway Construction

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway are (a) being planned and (b) under construction for the Greater Manchester county.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 31 miles of new motorway are being planned. In addition we plan to widen 25 miles of existing motorway. No new motorways are currently under construction in Greater Manchester.

Roads, Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the South Molton information signs will be erected on the north Devon link road;

(2) if he will visit north Devon to inspect the north Devon link road one year after completion;

(3) when the 60 mph restriction signs will be erected on the north Devon link road; and if he will make a statement upon the provision of emergency telephones along this road.

Mr. Atkins: The application for information signs on the link road near South Molton is being considered, but the road safety implications of additional signs are a cause for concern.

I have no plans to visit the link road. Nor have I any plans to install 60 mph speed limit signs on the road. The national speed limits already apply: there are reminder posters about the limits at the picnic areas, and reminder signs in the laybys.

New-style emergency phones are being installed by the RAC and AA (with a contribution from the Department). I understand that these will be operational very shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Ozone-depleting Chemicals

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those chemicals which he has assessed to be safe substitutes for ozone-depleting chemicals.

Mr. Trippier: Discussions are taking place today and tomorrow in Brussels on the package of tests which will be necessary for the assessment of the substitutes for ozone-depleting chemicals.

Recycling

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to encourage and support small businesses to establish a door-to-door collection service for the recycling of metal cans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Bill contains a range of measures which will assist and promote the segregation of waste for recycling. Collection authorities will have a duty to draw up recycling plans and when doing so be required to liaise with all relevant organisations in their areas, including private sector companies. Waste disposal authorities will be required to pass to collection authorities the savings that accrue because refuse has been recycled rather than passed to them for disposal—and this may be passed on to benefit both voluntary groups and small businesses. Other provisions of the Bill will allow authorities to specify environmentally favourable options for waste disposal, such as recycling, even if they are not the cheapest in financial terms. Stricter controls on waste disposal by landfill and other means will increase their costs and so make recycling more attractive. The forthcoming White Paper on the environment will set out our further plans for recycling.

The Government are also working with local authorities to develop projects like recycling city in Sheffield and Cardiff where segregated collection systems are being carried out on a trial basis and which can, when fully evaluated, be used as models for future practice. We shall be providing comprehensive advice to local authorities to assist them in the development of recycling projects.

National Rivers Authority

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the level of funding of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 5 June to the hon. Member for Dewbury (Mrs. Taylor) at column 489.

Letting of Rooms

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the statutory provisions applying to residents who wish to let out a room or rooms in their home; and if he has any plans to reform the law.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department receives the occasional letter from hon. Members and the public about the statutory provisions applying to residents who wish to let out a room or rooms in their home. Changes were made in the Housing Act 1988 which completely deregulated such lettings. We have no plans to make any further changes to the legislation.

House Purchase Incentive Scheme

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Department first made available £200,000 to Lambeth council for the cash incentive scheme for tenants wishing to buy properties in the private sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My officials wrote to Lambeth on 27 March 1990 giving approval in principle to a cash incentive scheme in 1990-91 for which £200,000 in supplementary credit approvals will be available as part of the Government's homeless initiative. The supplementary credit approvals will be issued as grants are actually paid out.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which contracts were awarded by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to business ventures on the basis of competitive tendering.

Mr. Chope: No contracts were awarded by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to business ventures on the basis of competitive tendering.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 27 June to the hon. Member for Warrington, North, how the value of services provided to Warrington and Runcorn development corporation by business ventures was assessed in order for the corporation to make appropriate reductions for the use of its property; how the rentable value of that property was assessed by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation; and which business ventures made use of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation property for 30 months.

Mr. Chope: The basis of the fees paid to business ventures by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation was that they should not exceed the costs which the corporation would have had to bear if the function had remained in-house. The fees payable were initially based on payroll costs and direct expenses and were exclusive of accommodation costs. Thereafter, as the business ventures began to undertake work for other clients, the corporation reduced its fee payments to reflect the use made of its accommodation in providing these services. The engineering business venture, involving a merger with Rendel Palmer and Tritton, made use of corporation accommodation for 30 months.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Warrington, North of 27 June, what were the three largest redundancy payments made to Warrington and Runcorn development corporation staff who joined business ventures employed by the corporation; and to which officials they were paid.

Mr. Chope: The three largest redundancy payments made to staff of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation who joined business ventures were as follows:

Chief Estates Officer (Runcorn)	45,328
Chief Engineer	44,264
Chief Legal Officer	43,507

World Cup Hooliganism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations his Department has received on the subject of deportations from Italy for alleged hooliganism at the World Cup tournament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: As of 3 July my Department had received 12 representations concerning the sending home of British citizens during the World Cup.

Waste Collection

Mr. Boscawen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends that local authorities should charge for waste collected from mixed domestic and commercial property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988 for simplicity define all waste arising from mixed hereditaments (now known as composite hereditaments)—that is, properties which are partly residential and partly used for trade or business—as commercial waste. Waste collection authorities do not charge for the collection of domestic waste, but may make a reasonable charge for commercial waste. However, circular 13/88 suggests that authorities, in setting the level of their charges, should recognise that some waste arises from the residential part of a composite property. We consider that all authorities should, once they have received a request to collect commercial waste from such properties, collect or empty free of charge at least one refuse sack or dustbin per week per property and should be prepared to consider alternative or additional arrangements on an individual basis.

Water Metering

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the results of the national water metering trials to be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The second interim report on the national metering trials has been published by the water industry today and I have placed a copy in the Library.

Use of rateable values as a basis for water charges ceases to be lawful from April 2000. Water companies will have to decide what alternative method of charging to adopt for the future; and metering—which is being adopted for many new properties, which do not have a rateable value—is one of the options being considered. Because it relates the size of a customer's bill to the amount of water used, it has been seen as potentially the fairest way of charging. But general metering will involve considerable expenditure, as the report demonstrates.

The trials have now been under way for about 18 months and, in the majority of cases, customers have been charged on their consumption of water for about a year. The full results will not be known until the trials have been completed in about two years' time. In the meantime a considerable amount of information has been collected about the costs and problems of installing meters and this has been assembled in the second interim report.

The report provides valuable information which will contribute to the debate on what future methods of charging the industry should adopt. This will be carried forward by the consultation paper which the Director General of Water Services intends to issue later this year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 25 June, Official Report, columns 44-46, if he will detail the specific grants given to Bradford, Wandsworth and Westminster.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The information, as given on the local authorities' 1990-91 budget returns, is as follows:

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the 92 Football League clubs together with the total season's attendance for Football League matches, total number of arrests made at such matches and the number of arrests as a percentage of the total attendance, for the seasons 1987-88 and 1989-90;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the total attendance at Football League matches in England and Wales, the total number of arrests at such matches, and the number of arrests as a percentage of the total attendance, accurate to four decimal places, for the seasons 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1990, c. 483]: The Association of Chief Police Officers is today publishing figures supplied by individual police forces relating to attendances and arrests at Football League matches in England and Wales during the season 1989-90.

These figures are some guide to the level of offences committed at such football matches. The figures do not record the outcome or seriousness of the cases involved. Figures for individual clubs relate to arrests at the home ground in question, involving supporters of any club.

Total figures for the last three seasons are:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Attendances	17,968,965	18,366,143	19,360,194
Arrests	6,106	6,185	5,945
Arrests as percentage of attendance	0·0340	0·0337	0·0307

This indicates a 5·4 per cent. rise in attendances and a 3·9 per cent. fall in arrests between 1988-89 and 1989-90: overall a reduction of 8·9 per cent. in arrests as a proportion of attendances.

Figures for individual clubs over the last three seasons are:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rural Schools

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special funding he proposes to small rural schools to assist delivery of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are giving local education authorities specific grant support for the introduction of the national curriculum. There will be support for some £120 million expenditure this financial year, rising to nearly £170 million expenditure next financial year. This is in addition to the general revenue support grant funding which local authorities receive in support of spending. It is for authorities to decide how much to spend to help small rural schools to deliver the national curriculum.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Lancashire about the extent to which schools in the county will be affected by plans to extend the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no representations about this.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has reached any conclusions on the future composition and organisation of the pay negotiating body; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is now considering the responses of the teacher unions and employers to his proposals for new permanent pay negotiation machinery. He will announce his conclusions in due course.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet representatives of teachers' trade unions regarding pay and conditions of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has met representatives of the teacher unions on a number of occasions, and would expect to hold similar meetings in the future.

LEA Staff

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) teaching staff and (b) non-teaching staff were employed by local education authorities in each of the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the number of pupils on roll in each year listed.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Figures are given in the table. Information prior to 1970 is not readily available.

Full-time equivalents of teacher staff and pupils on roll in nursery, primary and secondary schools maintained by local education authorities in England in January 1970-1989

Thousands

	Teacher numbers	Pupil numbers	[1]Non-teaching staff
1970	328·7	7,514·2	n/a
1975	417·6	8,458·1	409·4
1980	438·1	8,183·1	400·0
1985	405·3	7,201·6	361·8
1989	397·4	6,761·7	381·3

n/a Not available.

[1] Figures in this column relate to all non-teaching education staff employed by local authorities in England, not to nursery, primary and secondary schools alone. All figures relate to March of each year.

Local Management of Schools

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of education authorities with the percentage of their budget which is allocated in 1990-91 for local management of schools and the percentage retained as a centrally retained resource overhead.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 5 February 1990 at column 451.

School Meals

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the latest figures showing how many children take (a) school meals and (b) free school meals broken down into primary, secondary and special schools; and what proportion of children present they make up in each case.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested for maintained schools in England for January 1989 is as follows:

	Total number of school meals provided	As a percentage of all pupils on roll	Total meals provided free	As a percentage of all pupils on roll
Primary[1]	1,835,516	46	515,395	13
Secondary	1,104,875	38	235,270	8
Special	66,319	71	28,466	31

[1] Includes nursery schools.

Schools Budget (Administration)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science for each county council local education authority, what percentage of the total schools budget, excluding capital expenditure, is spent on administration.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is still receiving budget statements prepared under section 42 of the Education Reform Act from local education authorities. As soon as he receives the great majority of returns the information requested will be published.

Postgraduate Grants

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he expects existing differentials in postgraduate studentship rates to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: During the current academic year the main studentship rate set by the research councils under the schemes which they run has been £600 higher than that under the state studentship scheme run on my behalf by the British Academy. Following representations from the British Academy and others I have today agreed that the rates under the state studentship scheme should be increased for the coming academic year to bring them in line with those currently available under the research councils' schemes. I have also today accepted advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, that some of the as yet unallocated funds within the science budget for 1991-92 should be allocated to help finance a £400 increase in the main studentship rate with effect from April 1991. I have invited the board's advice on how the planned increases in postgraduate awards fit within an overall strategy for postgraduate training and on the quantitative evidence about applications, enrolments, wastage and completion on which the strategies of the individual councils are based. So that scarce resources can be directed to areas of greatest need, I have informed the board that I would expect the councils to consider possibilities for the differentiation in future of studentship award rates, by year of study, by subject or type of training, or by geographical areas. I have invited the British Academy to proceed in the same fashion in relation to any further increase over and above that approved today.

Art and Music

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to set up working groups to recommend attainment targets and programmes of study for art and music within the national curriculum for England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are today establishing working groups for art and music. The members of the groups are:

Art Working Group

Chairman:
Professor Colin Renfrew	Master of Jesus College, Cambridge; Professor of Archaeology, Cambridge
Members:
Giles Auty	Art Critic, The Spectator
Gilroy Brown	Head Teacher, Foundry JMI School, Birmingham
Robert Clement	Adviser for Art and Design, Devon County Council
David Derrick	Head Teacher, St. Clement Dane's C of E Primary School, Westminster
Gillian Figg	Lecturer in Art Education, West Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education
Toby Jackson	Head of Education, Tate Gallery, Liverpool
Professor Leslie R. Perry	Emeritus Professor, University of London Institute of Education, formerly Professor of the Philosophy of Education at Kings College, London
Peter Riches	Head of Faculty of Creative Studies, Eggbuckland School, Plymouth
Ray Smith	Practising artist
Merrick Taylor	Managing Director, Motor Panels (Coventry) Ltd.
Lady Marina Vaizey	Member of Fine Arts Advisory Committee, British Council; member of Crafts Council; art critic, Sunday Times. Broadcaster

Music Working Group

Chairman:
Sir John Manduell CBE	Principal, Royal Northern College of Music, Manchester
Members:
David Adams	Head of Music, Sawston Village College, Cambridge
Dr. Kevin Adams	Head of Music, Maesteg Comprehensive School, Mid Glamorgan
Michael Batt	Freelance musician and composer
Michael Brewer	Director of Music, Chetham's (independent Specialist music) School, Manchester
Philip Jones CBE	Principal, Trinity College of Music
Gillian Moore	Education Officer, London Sinfonietta
Professor George Pratt	Head of Music Department, Huddersfield Polytechnic
Mrs. L. Read	Head of Infant Department, Elburton Primary School, Devon
Julian Smith	Director, W. H. Smith & Sons Ltd.
John Stephens	ex-LEA Senior Staff Inspector for music, and ex-HMI. Director of Education, Trinity College of Music from September 1990
Christine Wood	Lovely Music, Tadcaster (specialist suppliers of music to schools)

The groups will advise on the attainment targets and programmes of study for art and music to be included within the national curriculum in England and Wales. We are grateful to the chairmen and members for having agreed to serve on the groups. An announcement on a working group for physical education will be made very shortly.

Copies of the terms of reference for the art and music working groups have been placed in the Library. These make clear that the attainment targets and programmes of study will not be prescribed in as much detail as for other foundation subjects.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about value added tax on fuel consumed by vessels plying the United Kingdom coast and continental ports.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have received a few representations about the change in VAT liability of fuel which takes effect on 1 July 1990 and the possibility of VAT stores relief for fishing and other vessels after that date.

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what adjustments were made for each of the years from 1960 onwards to the negotiated pay in the home civil service for pension benefits.

Mr. Major: Civil service pay is determined within what is affordable according to the need to recruit, retain and motivate staff. A number of factors including pensions are taken into account in the pay negotiations.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from regional bodies on public expenditure in the current year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend receives many representations on a variety of subjects.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the public spending planning total for 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The public expenditure planning total for 1990-91 published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" is £179 billion.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington, 20 December 1989, Official Report, column 242, whether he has now received a report from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee.

Mr. Major: I have today received a report from the RPI Advisory Committee. It examines how to incorporate the price of holidays into the RPI and certain other issues in its work programme. On the price of holidays the report recommends that the CSO should collect data and examine a new methodology which will have to be subjected to further scrutiny before it could be incorporated into the RPI. I will present the report to Parliament and announce the Government's decision on the recommendations in due course.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he now has plans for direct British aid to Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 18 June.

WALES

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the directors of the Corlan housing association,.

Mr. Grist: The present members of the committee of management of Corlan housing association were appointed recently by Housing for Wales under the provisions of section 17 of the Housing Associations Act 1985. They are:

Mr. N. Bacon
(Deputy Chief Executive, National Agriculture Centre Rural Trust)
Mr. T. Blanch
(Director, Rhondda Housing Association)
Mr. R. Head
(Director, Family Care Housing Association)
Mr. M. Savage
(Solicitor)
Mr. A. Shewring
(Chartered Accountant)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what purchases of land were made by the Corlan housing association and at what price, over the last five years.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not readily available. The affairs of Corlan housing association are the subject of an investigation instituted by Housing for Wales under the provisions of section 28 of the Housing Associations Act 1985.

Food Safety Bill

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional funds his Department is to earmark for local authority implementation of the Food Safety Bill, and additional local authority current costs as a result of the Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In the annual round of consultations leading to the 1991-92 local authority revenue settlement, the local authority associations have assessed the costs necessary to implement the food Bill in that year at £1·35 million. This will be taken into account in determining the revenue support grant 1991-92. I expect that Government support for implementation of this Bill will be via unhypothecated grant, which will give councils the flexibility to direct resources in the light of local circumstances and priorities.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Committee

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider giving financial assistance to the myalgic encephalomyelitis committee in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The association received £5,000 grant aid from the Department in 1988-89 and £7,500 in 1989-90, but returned £2,500 of the latter following the resignation of the officer whose post had been supported. No formal application for further grant has been received, but any future applications would be carefully considered.

Gwynedd Health Authority

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the report by consultants on the financial position and performance of Gwynedd health authority, which has been recently submitted to him; and what steps his Department intends taking in the light of this report.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I look forward to receiving the authority's procurement and business plan and its related proposals for restoring financial balance.

When the proposals have been submitted, we will meet the chairman and other representatives to discuss them. I shall not be in a position to comment on the way ahead until that meeting has taken place.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange a conference of community health council and area health authority chairmen to discuss his plans for community health councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. A wide-ranging consultation exercise has been completed, with both community health councils and district health authorities, among many others, commenting fully on the proposals.

My right hon. Friend hopes to announce a decision on the future structure of the community health councils in Wales shortly.

Clwyd Health Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit (a) Clwyd South community health council and (b) Clwyd North community health council to discuss his plans to merge community health councils.

Mr. Grist: A wide-ranging consultation exercise has been completed on the review of community health councils in Wales. Clwyd South and Clwyd North community health councils have taken the opportunity to comment fully on the proposals and my right hon. Friend and I are well acquainted with their views.

My right hon. Friend hopes to announce a decision on the future structure of the community health councils in Wales shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many community health councils he has visited in Wales; and which community health councils he plans to meet before October.

Mr. Grist: None.

War Memorial Hospital, Wrexham

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the previous cases in Wales heard by that inspector who decided application number WRR 16029 relating to the decision to allow demolition of the War Memorial hospital at Wrexham.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Flat Ownership

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General when the Lord Chancellor intends to make a statement on changes in the law of the ownership of flats.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 18 June 1990 at column 389.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases in 1989 involving persons injured by plastic bullets in Northern Ireland have been considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland; and what action was taken in each case.

The Attorney-General: Figures for cases considered during 1989 by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland involving persons killed or injured by the alleged use of baton rounds are as follows:

	Number
Cases	12
Persons injured	14
Persons killed	1
Prosecutions directed	0
No prosecution directed	12

Legal Aid

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if interest accruing when the statutory charge is postponed by virtue of regulation 97 of the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989 is chargeable before the Legal Aid Board has paid the assisted person's legal advisers; if the board has the discretion to waive or postpone such interest until the time for payment to the legal advisers; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The position set out in regulation 97 of the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989 is that interest is payable from the date the charge is registered. The Legal Aid Board does not have a discretion to waive or postpone the interest due from that date.

Offences, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases concerning scheduled offences were referred to the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal in 1989; and in how many of these referred cases the original conviction has been (a) quashed and (b) upheld.

The Attorney-General: In 1989 a total of 103 cases concerning scheduled offences were referred to the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal. Of these 103 cases, convictions were quashed in three: the sentence was varied in six; 55 appeals were dismissed and 39 appeals abandoned.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General how many applications for bail by those held on remand for scheduled, non-scheduled offences, and both together, were refused bail in 1989.

The Attorney-General: In 1989 the number of High Court bail applications by those held on remand for scheduled offence cases were refused was 560.

The number of High Court bail applications by those on remand for non-scheduled offence cases, which were refused, was 197.

Information is not available in relation to unsuccessful applications in this category in the magistrates courts.

PRIME MINISTER

Fission Products

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), Official Report, 28 June, columns 484-85, if she will give a full breakdown of the costs for the disposal of the fission products of nuclear power; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The costs of disposing of the products of nuclear generation can be expressed in purely monetary terms since the technology of waste disposal is sufficiently developed. These have been quantified, for example, in the 1988-89 accounts of the CEGB by provisions for reprocessing of spent fuel and associated waste management, and disposal costs amount to £6·4 billion at 31 March 1989. The costs of dealing with the effects of global warming as the result of the emission of greenhouse gases are not known, but could be extremely large.

Japanese Fishing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make representations to the Japanese Government in respect of (a) their policy of scientific whaling, (b) their overfishing of smaller cetaceans and (c) their use of monofilament nets.

The Prime Minister: We have already made known to the Japanese, through the International Whaling Commission, our firm view that whaling for research should not be conducted unless the research can be fully justified scientifically. The research would have to provide vital information which could not be obtained by non-lethal means, and would not endanger the relevant whale stocks. We shall be following this policy at the meeting of the IWC currently taking place in the Netherlands.

We have already raised the matter of the killing of small cetaceans with the Japanese Government. In 1989 the Japanese Government introduced new regulations which will reduce the number of Dall's porpoises caught.

We fully share the concern about large-scale indiscriminate drift net fishing practised by the Japanese in the South Pacific. The nations concerned were able to agree last year to a United Nations resolution which calls for an end to large-scale drift net fishing in the South Pacific by 30 June 1991 and, unless scientifically proved unnecessary, a global moratorium by 30 June 1992. The United Kingdom with its EC partners was able to play a major and constructive role in these discussions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has received any correspondence from the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Department receives correspondence from the Association of Chief Police Officers on a variety of subjects on a regular basis.

AIDS (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice in the form of booklets or medical instruction is given to prison officers who, in the course of their duties, may come into contact with inmates who have AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: The staff training package "AIDS Inside", which has been in use since August 1987, includes a video film and a leaflet prepared by a committee of medical and other experts for the information of all prison service staff. For health care staff the most recent source of advice on safe practice is "Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers: Protection Against Infection with HIV and Hepatitis Viruses" issued by the United Kingdom health departments in January this year. Such staff also receive training, where appropriate, in the clinical management and care of patients with AIDS and AIDS-related illness.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the known numbers of AIDS inmates held in prisons in England and Wales on 25 June.

Mr. Mellor: On the date mentioned the prison population of England and Wales included 56 prisoners reported by medical officers as having been identified as HIV antibody positive. AIDS had been diagnosed in two of these cases.

Prison Officers, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the London prisons the amount of prison officer accommodation that is available for officers serving at London prisons to occupy and the present number of quarters that are empty.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information, as at 1 April 1990, is as follows:

Total number of quarters available

Prison	Number	Empty
Brixton	221	(3)
Holloway	152	(3)
Pentonville	111	(1)
Wandsworth	187	(5)
Wormwood Scrubs	212	(None)

Trevi Group

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions the Trevi group of Ministers has had about arranging exchanges with officials from EEC states in order to obtain information on law enforcement, legal systems and innovations in technology;

(2) what discussions the Trevi group of Ministers has had about introducing uniform legal provisions in the relevant parts of domestic law in each member state of the EEC;

(3) what discussions the Trevi group of Ministers has had about EEC co-operation at frontiers and borders in relation to (a) problems of illegal immigration, (b) crossing common land when following suspects of serious crime and (c) the possibility of a new treaty to deal with these problems.

Mr. Waddington: The position reached by Trevi in discussing matters of police co-operation among European Community member states is recorded in the programme of action approved in Dublin on 15 June, a copy of which is in the Library. Problems of illegal immigration are primarily a matter for the EC ad hoc immigration working group, which is currently considering a draft convention on the crossing of external frontiers of the Community.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many black and ethnic minority employees the Metropolitan police employs in its civilian staff above the grade of executive officer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commissioner has told me that in August 1989, the latest date for which the information is available, there were 36 civilian staff from ethnic minority communities of higher executive officer grade and above in the Metropolitan police service as well as 127 executive officers. This does not include traffic wardens and industrial grades.

Nuclear Emergency Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nuclear emergency centres there are in the United Kingdom; how many are currently inoperative; and for what reasons.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the most recently reported position in respect of local authority emergency centres, including the most common shortcomings found in those which were not operational, was given in "A Report on Implementation of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 in England and Wales at 30 September 1989". The report was published in May and a copy is in the Library.

Prison Staff

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of staff in each prison establishment in each of the last 10 years with less than two years total experience in the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held on remand in prisons in England and Wales on Monday 25 June.

Mr. Mellor: At the end of May, the latest date for which the information is available, 9,495 male and 347 female untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners were held in prison service establishments or in police cells.

Criminal Verdicts

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of criminal verdicts of manslaughter or murder and the relevant verdict at the inquest for each of the years 1974 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Waddington: The number of criminal verdicts is given in table 4.2 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", and the number of inquest verdicts is given in table 5 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Deaths reported to Coroners, England and Wales". Copies of both these publications are in the Library.

The inquest verdicts exclude cases where court proceedings have been instituted. In these cases a coroner will not resume an inquest which he has adjourned, to avoid the need for two tribunals to consider the same evidence.

Deaths (Records)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a national register of persons who have died and whose next of kin cannot be ascertained to enable next of kin to identify their relatives; and whether he will make the register open to the public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. All deaths are registered locally by the registrar of births and deaths and subsequently notified to the Registrar-General who maintains a central record. We are currently considering the establishment of a national "missing persons" register which would assist in identifying bodies which are found without any form of identification and relatives could make inquiries of the register via the police.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what records are kept on the number of persons found dead each year where no relatives can be traced by the responsible authorities; and how many there are for the latest year available;

(2) after what period of time those responsible for ascertaining and informing the next of kin terminate their inquiries;

(3) what procedures are followed in order to ascertain the next of kin of a person found dead;

(4) who is responsible for locating and contacting next of kin once death has been confirmed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no central records of persons found dead where no relations can be traced, nor is there any statutory requirement for an individual or authority to report a death to the next of kin. In practice, responsibility for notification is normally assumed by whoever has the duty of care at the time of death; there are no time limits on their inquiries. There are no set procedures to follow, but the identification of the dead person must be known before relatives can be traced. If the person's identity is known or can be established, the amount of time needed to trace the next of kin depends on the circumstances of each case, for example the available documentation on the body. Where identity cannot be established, the police will arrange for details to be circulated to other forces and to New Scotland Yard to check against their missing persons records. There is no predetermined time limit for each case.

Television Company Franchises

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning negative bidding for television company franchises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning negative bidding for television company franchises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A few responses to the broadcasting White Paper suggested the possibility of negative bidding for regional Channel 3 licences.

Prisoners

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the accommodation of prisoners as close as possible to their families, taking into account considerations of security and accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Four main principles govern the allocation of sentenced prisoners to training establishments: the needs of security, the needs of control, the needs of the individual prisoners and the need to make the best use of accommodation.

In applying these considerations, we of course recognise that it is in the interests of most prisoners to be located as near to their home area as is practicable, to ease visiting arrangements for families and friends and to help prisoners in the last part of their sentence in preparation for release.

Prisoners held in prison service custody on remand are generally held in those establishments which are nearest to their courts of remand or trial.

Proportional Representation

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward a Bill to introduce an electoral system based on proportional representation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

World Cup (Deportations)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations his Department has received on the subject of deportations from Italy for alleged hooliganism at the World Cup tournament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Department has received three representations relating to refusal of leave to enter Italy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 19 March, Official Report, column 429, he is yet in a position to announce his Department's actions relating to Lonrho plc's non-compliance with schedule 7, paragraph 9 to the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Lonrho plc has informed my Department that it employs fewer than 250 persons, and is therefore not subject to the provisions of paragraph 9 of schedule 7 to the Companies Act 1985.

Glamorgan Building Society

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 9 March, Official Report, column 883, whether any partner from the firm of Mr. Anton was criticised by the joint disciplinary committee in its report on Glamorgan Building Society.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. An individual who was a partner in the Cardiff office of Deloitte Haskins and Sells at the relevant time was the subject of criticism by a committee of inquiry appointed by the executive committee of the joint disciplinary scheme in relation to matters arising in connection with Glamorgan Building Society. He is no longer a partner in Mr. Anton's firm which, following a merger with Coopers and Lybrand, is now known as Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 19 March, Official Report, column 429, he will introduce legislation to require the auditor's letter of engagement to be communicated to shareholders by being read at the annual general meeting.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Condoms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the annual production figure in the United Kingdom of condoms and how many were for sale in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and what is the estimate for each of the next five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available.

Link Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the proportion of outturn expenditure on each link scheme met by industrial and private sector sponsorship.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 24 link programmes have been announced so far. The financial arrangements for link programmes are standard in that Government outturn expenditure in all cases is 50 per cent. of gross incurred project costs.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the programmed and outturn expenditure for each link scheme in each year of operation;

(2) what is the programmed public expenditure provision for link schemes in each full year the scheme has existed, together with the actual outturn expenditure in each year; and what is the second figure as a percentage of the first.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Whilst 24 link programmes have been announced, most of the 65 current research projects under way have become active only within the last 12 months. For example, on 6 April 1989 there were only 12 active research projects, whereas by 29 May 1990 the number had risen to 65. In addition, on 29 May 1990 a further 57 were through all stages of technical approval and were awaiting final financial clearance, or the Department was waiting for the industrial partners satisfactorily to conclude crucial collaborative agreements. Two other factors complicate providing detailed outturn expenditure figures for the two financial years April 1988 to March 1989 and April 1989 to March 1990. First, there are now six Government Departments and four research councils funding link programmes and they all have their own procedures and protocols. Secondly, industrial grants are paid in arrears, that is, after costs have been incurred, and particularly in the early days of a project claims may not be submitted for up to 12 months after the work has taken place. The outturn for the financial year 1988-89 was therefore a nominal figure. The outturn for the financial year 1989-90 has been provisionally estimated at £7 million, and was announced at a link press briefing on June 13 1990. It is not considered practical to provide detailed outturn figures for each link programme until the end of the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all link schemes so far established, together with the participating companies and academic institutions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The first five link programmes were announced on 3 February 1988. Since then a further 19 programmes have been launched. The programmes are listed in the table:

Molecular Electronics
Advanced Semiconductor Materials
Industrial Measurement Systems
Eukaryotic Genetic Engineering
Nanotechnology
Biotransformations
Personal Communications
Selective Drug Delivery and Targeting Construction Maintenance and Refurbishment
Food Processing Sciences
Ventilation, Air Conditioning and Refrigeration
Optoelectronic Systems
Design of High Speed Machinery
Structural Composites
Protein Engineering
Biochemical Engineering
New Catalysts and Catalytic Processes
Power Electronic Devices and Derived Systems
Control of Plant Metabolism
Molecular Sensors
Technology for Analytical and Physical Measurement
Transport Infrastructure and Operations
Asymmetric Synthesis
Crops for Industrial Use

A total of 140 companies are now involved in the 65 research projects already active and of these 37 are small or medium-sized companies (indicated in the list by an asterisk). Following the list of companies involved in link projects are lists of the 40 scientific institutes involved.

Domestic Waste (Recycling)

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total identifiable expenditure on research into developing technology aimed at recycling domestic waste in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for 1989.

Mr. Forth: The 16th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1989 to 31 December 1989. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

ENERGY

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will separate (a) any (b) all of the costs of the Sizewell B power station from the non-fossil fuel levy at any future date.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated date of commissioning of Sizewell B; and what definition of commissioning is to be used.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for Nuclear Electric. However, the company informs me that it is committed to a timetable for the Sizewell B project that will lead to fuel loading in August 1994 and full commercial output in February 1995. The project is currently well ahead of that programme. Commissioning is complete at the time of full commercial output.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 332, if he will state in detail what measures he has introduced to record cattle breeding records.

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the consultation document which details the proposed measures.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of the implications of the discontinuation of the use of chemical solvents by the meat rendering industry for the spread of BSE and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: An assessment is being made of the changes in rendering practices in the 1970s and early 1980s to determine what part this might have played in the emergence of BSE.

Canthaxanthin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the use of Canthaxanthin in animal feedstuffs; and if he has any proposals to restrict its use.

Mr. Maclean: Canthaxanthin is permitted in poultry and fish feedingstuffs under EC directive 70/524 for the purpose of enhancing the colour of egg yolks and fish flesh. It is mandatory for all member states to allow canthaxanthin to be freely marketed and used in such feedingstuffs according to the limits laid down in the directive. Representations for and against these uses have been received.

In the United Kingdom, the use of the colourant canthaxanthin in poultry and fish feed is under review and I understand the EC Commission has also asked its Scientific Committee for Food and Scientific Committee for Animal Nutrition to do the same.

Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Curry: All research and development which the Department funds, with the exception of research funded by the MAFF grant in aid at the royal botanic gardens, is on a customer-contractor basis. The detailed information requested is as follows:

Financial Year	MAFF Expenditure on Research and Development (£ million)	Percentage of Research and Development awarded on Customer/ Contractor Basis	Percentage of Total MAFF Budget Expended on Research and Development
1979-80	66·2	97·4	17·7
1980-81	83·0	97·3	15·5
1981-82	106·8	96·7	19·9
1982-83	113·9	97·5	19·6
1983-84	118·6	97·6	22·2
1984-85	119·4	96·6	21·8
1985-86	118·4	96·3	22·3
1986-87	118·3	95·09	22·7
1987-88	113·8	95·3	25·8
[1]1988-89	115·0	95·0	23·9
[1]1989-90	114·0	94·8	22·0

[1] Provisional.

Departmental budget is net expenditure, as published in the appropriation account, for which the Minister is the accounting officer.

Whaling

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his position in respect of the review of the moratorium on commercial whaling to be carried out by the International Whaling Commission in July.

Mr. Gummer: The history of whaling has been one of consistent over-exploitation of one species of whale after another. The moratorium on commercial whaling which should have operated since 1986 has in fact been fully respected only for the last two years. I am determined that whale species should not again be placed at risk by a hasty resumption of whaling.

At the International Whaling Commission we will be carefully studying the work of the scientific committee and if there is any doubt at all about the capacity of any whale stock to bear a resumption of whaling we will firmly oppose any suggestion that whaling recommence. In any case we will insist that the International Whaling Commission must adopt a revised management procedure which will ensure that all whale stocks remain at healthy levels even if whaling is resumed in the future. I am determine that the history of over-exploitation of whale stocks must never be repeated.

Veterinary Products

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances products yet to pass the required tests of safety and efficacy are allowed to be sold for public consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Except for certain products prepared to a veterinary surgeon's order, no veterinary medicinal product may be sold in this country unless it has a product licence issued under the Medicines Act.

HEALTH

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will oblige health authorities to itemise separately in their accounts the amount spent on management consultancy;

(2) what is his Department's estimate for the total amount spent by health authorities on management consultancies for the last full year for which an estimate is available.

Mr. Dorrell: The employment of management consultants is a matter for individual health authorities. Information on the expenditure incurred or on which to base an estimate of the total involved is not routinely collected centrally.

We do not intend to oblige health authorities to itemise separately any such information in their accounts as the amount paid to individual consultants is subject to commercial confidentiality.

Infectious Diseases

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to publish an analysis of responses to the "Review of Law on Infectious Disease Control" published in October 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: More than 500 organisations and individuals have submitted responses to the consultation document "Review of Law on Infectious Disease Control". It is clear that very careful and comprehensive consideration has been given to the options on which views were invited and we need to consider in detail the comments before deciding what action to take.

Immunodeficiency Viruses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which directly funded Government facilities research into AIDS, HIV and related viruses is being carried out; and what was the cost of this research in the last full year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The majority of Government-funded research into AIDS, HIV and related viruses is commissioned by the Medical Research Council (MRC) as part of its "Directed Programme" for AIDS research. Details of this work are contained in the MRC publication "AIDS Research 1990", a copy of which is available in the Library. A total of £6 million was devoted to the programme in 1989-90.

In addition, the public health laboratory service and the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control undertake such research; funding for 1989-90 was £1·1 million and £440,000 respectively.

Cryptosporidiosis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of cases of cryptosporidiosis caused by a waterborne parasite; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 29 June at columns 363-64.

Smoking

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to the national health service of each smoker.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to estimate the cost of smoking to the NHS accurately, but it may be of the order of £500 million each year. It is not meaningful to apportion this cost among individual smokers, as the amount involved will depend on the nature of each individual's habit and whether it leads to sickness or death in any particular year. An estimated 110,000 deaths per year are caused by smoking-related diseases.

Health Promotion Clinics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he has established for what constitutes a health promotion clinic.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In order to qualify for a sessional payment, health promotion clinics must meet the criteria laid down in paragraph 30 of the GPs' "Statement of Fees and Allowances" (a copy of which is held in the Library). The main requirements are (a) the purpose of the clinic is approved by the family practitioner committee, (b) each clinic normally attracts a minimum of 10 patients and (c) it lasts for a minimum of one hour.

In-patient Statistics

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patient cases were treated per available bed in 1979 and for the latest year for which figures are available in each of the 14 health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table:

Average daily available beds[1] and in-patient cases treated, NHS hospitals, by regional health authority, 1979 and 1988-89

Operations

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of hip replacement operations carried out in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available in each of the 14 health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities in England reported the following figures for 1988-89. The figures for 1979 are extracted from the 1979 hospital in-patient inquiry.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by county, and by year for the last five years, the number of cases of cryptosporidiosis reported.

Condoms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department proposes any action to increase the production of condoms in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department does not seek to influence commercial decisions.

However, Government information about condoms, and their effectiveness in reducing the risks of infectious diseases, may increase public demand and lead to increases in production.

Pharmacists

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the remuneration of community pharmacists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Negotiations with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee (PSNC) on the remuneration of community pharmacists for the year beginning 1 April began last December. Since then my officials have held numerous discussions with the PSNC and I have myself met the chairman of the PSNC on two occasions, once accompanied by members of his committee and once alone. I am disappointed that after months of negotiations, during which we have made significant concessions, the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee was unable to agree what I regard as a fair and reasonable offer, and has declared a state of dispute. I am not prepared to see negotiations drag on indefinitely, depriving the smaller independent pharmacies in particular of the increases due to them. I have therefore reluctantly decided to implement new fee scales from 1 August, backdated to 1 April. I have written today to the chairman of the PSNC informing him of this decision.

The settlement to be implemented is for a global target sum of £555·5 million, giving an increase in remuneration of 7·5 per cent. over the target for 1989-90. The increase in professional fees, the main element of remuneration, will be 7·5 per cent. over 1989-90 levels. Following a discount inquiry last year, a new discount scale of 9·67 per cent. will be implemented at the same time. My officials have today written to the PSNC seeking its urgent final comments on the detailed fee and discount recovery scales proposed within the global total, to enable them to be published in time to take effect from 1 August. Both scales will be backdated to 1 April, and to avoid hardship I propose to make interim payments based on estimates of the backpay due at the same time as the new rates are paid on 30 October. Adjustments in payments due following detailed recalculation will be made in payments due on 1 January. As part of the settlement I will honour two further concessions made in negotiation, that there should be a mechanism for collecting any over- or under-payment against the target for the year during the following year, triggered by variations greater than £250,000; and the establishment of a joint working party on the role of pharmacists, to reflect the wider definition of pharmaceutical services made possible by the National Health Service and Community Care Act.

In declaring a state of dispute, the PSNC also made a reference to the pharmacists' review panel. The PSNC has already made it clear that its long-term aim is to establish a review body and reference to the pharmacists' review panel would be a step towards this. That is something I cannot accept. In my view the terms of the reference by the PSNC would represent a significant departure from the way in which the pharmacists' review panel has previously operated, and it would not be appropriate for it to accept the reference. Should it do so, my Department will of course co-operate fully and I will study any view reached by the panel, but only as background to discussions on remuneration in future years.

Tampons

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of deaths over the last five years arising from fulminating staphylococcal toxic shock syndrome related to using tampons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 22 February at columns 874-75.

District Nurses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of district nurse training places which are currently unfilled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand from the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting that in England in 1989-90 824 people undertook district nurse training courses and 406 people undertook district enrolled nurse training courses. The total numbers of training places approved by the board were 1,014 for district nurse training and 495 for district enrolled nurse training.

Juvenile Muscular Degeneration

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of juvenile muscular degeneration are known to his Department; and approximately how many new cases are reported each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Information in this form is not held centrally. I am advised that there are many degenerative diseases of either the central nervous system or muscle which affect children and are mostly of genetic origin. The most common is muscular dystrophy which affects about one in 3,500 boys from early childhood onwards. At the current birth rate we would expect there to be about 100 new cases reported each year.

Registration of Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the position of those persons wishing to register the birth of their child through the medium of Welsh if they are (a) domiciled in Wales but their child is born in England, (b) domiciled in England and the child is born in Wales, (c) domiciled in England and the child is born in England or (d) domiciled in Wales and the child is born in Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: In England and Wales the law requires that a birth must be registered by the registrar for the registration of sub-district in which it occurs, regardless of the domicile of the parents. An informant wishing to register the birth of a child through the medium of Welsh may do so provided that the informant can speak and understand Welsh and the registrar to whom the information is given can also understand Welsh. The particulars required to be entered in the register in respect of a birth in Wales may be recorded in both English and Welsh provided these conditions are met and the information is given in both lauguages to a registrar in Wales who can write Welsh. However, the birth entry of a child born in England will contain particulars recorded in English only.

Medicines Resource Centre

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will carry legal responsibility for the information carried by the medicines resource centre.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: Under the present administrative arrangements, legal responsibility for the information published by the medicines resource centre lies with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Cope: The information is as follows:

Year	Expenditure on R and D (£ million)	Percentage of Budget (per cent.)
1979-80	11·0	0·442
1980-81	14·5	0·503
1981-82	9·7	0·302
1982-83	9·4	0·267
1983-84	14·3	0·380
1984-85	11·5	0·287
1985-86	13·8	0·326
1986-87	17·0	0·381
1987-88	16·8	0·351
[1]1988-89	19·4	0·359

[1] (Provisional).

With the exception of the science base, all Government R and D is now awarded on a customer-contractor basis. Disaggregation for the years 1983-84 onwards are published in the annual review of Government-funded R and D.

Rural Regeneration

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the composition of the interdepartmental committee on rural regeneration which commenced its work in January.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The interdepartmental committee on rural development is chaired by the permanent secretary of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. Its members are drawn from the six Northern Ireland Government Departments and from other statutory agencies with an interest in rural matters including the Industrial Development Board, the Local Enterprise Development Unit, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Primary Schools, Portadown

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the capital expenditure on developments over the last five years and projected expenditure on approved developments at Bocombra primary school, Moyallon primary school, Seagoe primary school an Edenderry primary school, Portadown; and what is the expected expenditure from public funds involved in the proposed integrated school at Kernan, Portadown.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	Last five years £	Projected £
i. Bocombra Primary School	19,800	Nil
Moyallon Primary School	7,200	500,000
Seagoe Primary School	6,900	900
Edenderry Primary School	59,700	Nil

ii. Grants in respect of capital expenditure at the grant-maintained integrated school at Kernan in Portadown will not be payable until the school has demonstrated its viability

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the security statistics for 1989 are now available together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Mr. Cope: The statistics for 1989 are as follows (statistics for earlier years can be obtained from the Library):—

Statistics on Security (January—December 1989)
Part I—Statistics of terrorist activity

	Number
Shooting incident[2]	(160) 406

Part III—Convictions and sentences for scheduled offences

Notes on the tables
1. The offence classifications are based on those used by the Crown Court in their annual return.
2. The tables relate to persons convicted at the Belfast Crown Court. This covers all scheduled offences tried on indictment.
3. Some jury trials are included in cases where the Attorney-General certified out of the scheduled mode of trial, ie non-terrorist serious offences.
4. Where a person has been convicted of more than one offence only the most serious or that which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

Female Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in each month since January; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making a remand appearance at court, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Cope: Details of the number of, and reasons for strip searches of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry, from July 1989 to November 1989 were provided on 18 December 1989 (Vol. 164, No. 20, Col. 14-16). The statistics from December 1989 to May 1990 are as follows:

Number of searches	December 1989	January 1990	February 1990	March 1990	April 1990	May 1990
Total number of searches carried out	24	15	21	31	21	37

No prohibited article was found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched.

Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were proceeded against for scheduled offences in Northern Ireland in 1989; and how many persons pleaded guilty to the principal offence; and how many persons in such contested cases were found not guilty of the principal offence.

Mr. Cope: Four hundred and fifty-eight persons were proceeded against for scheduled offences, of whom 375 pleaded guilty. Of the remainder, 42 persons were subsequently found not guilty of the principal offence.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 giving separately figures for (a) salary and benefits, (b) transport and communication, (c) new construction, (d) other costs, (e) total gross expenditure and (f) total net expenditure after deduction of receipts.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is contained in the Police Authority for Northern Ireland annual statement of account, which is published and presented to the House each year. The cost of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in 1988-89 is as follows. The statement of account for 1989-90 has not yet been published; however, the estimated outturn is as follows:

	1988-89 £ million	[1]1989-90 £ million
Salaries and benefits	320·89	353·96
Transport and communication	14·74	16·75
New construction	19·68	22·30
Other costs	46·12	47·64
Total gross expenditure	401·43	440·65
Total net expenditure after deduction of receipts	383·50	420·85

[1]Estimated.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the manpower strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its reserve as between full-time, part-time, male and female operatives as at 31 December 1989.

Mr. Cope: The information is as follows:

Strength of the RUC and RUC Reserve as at 31 December 1989

	Male	Female	Total
RUC	7,571	688	8,259
RUC Reserve (Full time)	2,980	38	3,018
RUC Reserve (Part time)	1,219	387	1,606

Security Staff Premium

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the amount of the security staff premium paid by the Government in each of the fiscal years since 1984-85.

Mr. Cope: The following amounts were paid under the security staff grant scheme:

Year	Grant paid (£ thousand)
1984-85	1,299
1985-86	1,100
1986-87	1,255
1987-88	153
1988-89	221
1989-90	245

The decrease from 1987-88 reflects a decision to limit payments to passenger ferry companies only.

Compensation Payments

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973 in 1989.

Mr. Cope: No payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973 have been made since 1978 because of the repeal of the compensation provisions of that Act by the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978.

Northern Ireland Subvention

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the amount of the direct subvention by the British Exchequer to Northern Ireland in the financial year 1989-90 as well as amounts budgeted for in future periods.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is as follows:—

	Subvention Provisional Outturn (£ million)
1989-90	1,721

This figure excludes a payment of £265 million in connection with Shorts plc.

Figures are not available for future years.

Compensation Payments

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in the fiscal years 1989-90 of payments made to (a) civilians under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (b) members of the security forces under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (c) compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (d) compensation payments under the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 and subsequent legislation.

Mr. Cope: The information is as follows:

	1989-90 £
Compensation payments to civilians under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	[1]13,001,515
Compensation payments to members of the security forces under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	[2]3,424,485
Compensation payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978	1,149,435
Compensation payments under the criminal damage (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977 and earlier legislation[3]	22,124,107

[1] Includes £1,594,353 paid under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1988.
[2] Includes £1,087,647 paid under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1988.
[3] The current criminal damage legislation is the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in the latest available year.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In 1989-90, £25,000 was spent on new energy efficiency measures in the Northern Ireland Government office estate.

It is not possible to disaggregate costs for the Northern Ireland Office in London.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide figures updating those contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 2 May, Official Report, columns 557-58; and if he will expand upon the difference in administrative arrangements to which he refers.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Up to 1 June 1990, just over 6,700 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland were interviewed specifically about their efforts to find work. As a result, 100 claims were referred to the adjudication officer, and of these 28 were allowed and 72 disallowed. In addition, a further 13 claims were referred to the adjudication officer on grounds of refusing employment and, of these, five were disallowed.

Whereas in Great Britain the Department of Employment is responsible for the payment of benefit to the unemployed, in Northern Ireland all social security benefits, including unemployment benefit, are paid by the Department of Health and Social Services. Employment matters are the responsibility of the Department of Economic Development.

Friendly Societies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish the names of the directors of the Foyle Co-op in the Official Report;

(2) if he will publish the names of the directors of (a) the Derry Community Workshop and (b) the North West Centre for Learning and Development.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The information requested is held by the Registrar of Friendly Societies at 64 Chichester street, Belfast, and the registrar is required to make it available to the public, during office hours, on payment of a fee.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Parliamentary Questions

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that replies to written parliamentary questions will continue to be published in full in the Official Report following the move towards agency status of parts of his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 6 June at col. 615.

Pensioners' Christmas Bonus

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase the Christmas bonus for pensioners in December.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so.

Families (Benefits)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many families with children in low-paid work have (a) gained, (b) lost and (c) experienced no change of income from the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986, including both the changes to family credit and housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Illustrative information is set out in the publication "Impact of the reformed structure of Income Related Benefits" (October 1987), copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportions of (a) lone parents and (b) couples with children are reliant on income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that income support contributes to the household incomes of around two in three lone parents and just under one in 10 families with dependants.[1]

[1] The term "dependants" has been used as not all dependants fall within the strict definition of children, i.e. that they are aged under 16.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much retirement pension would be for (a) a single person and (b) a couple if it had been uprated by earnings or inflation, whichever was the higher, since 1980.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At April 1990 the retirement pension would have been £58·65 for a single person and £94·05 for a couple, had the retirement pension been raised by the higher of the movement in earnings or prices since 1980.

It should be noted that any such cost would attract consequent increase in the national insurance contribution. It is estimated that the necessary increase in contribution rate to support the additional cost in 1990 would be 1·25 per cent. and 1·45 per cent. on the basic rate of employees' and employers' contributions respectively, increasing them to 10·25 per cent. and 11·9 per cent. respectively. This would have meant, for example, a contribution increase for an employee on average earnings of £3·18 per week, together with an additional contribution of £4·35 per week for his employer.

SCOTLAND

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

15. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has on the progress of installation of flue gas desulphurisation equipment in Scotland, and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand there are no plans at present to install flue gas desulphurisation equipment in combustion plants in Scotland.

The level of emissions from power stations in Scotland is already very low in comparison with the major base-load coal-fired stations in England and Wales.

Youth Training

16. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage change in both actual and real terms between the sum spent on the YTS in Orkney and Shetland in 1989-90 and the proposed sum to be spent on youth training in the two islands areas in 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: Reflecting changing need, funding of youth training in Orkney has been reduced by 15·5 per cent. in cash terms and 20·7 per cent. in real terms, and in Shetland by 23 per cent. in cash terms and 27·5 per cent. in real terms.

Acute Services, Lanarkshire

17. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the acute services strategy submission from Lanarkshire health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board is preparing an approval in principle submission for its preferred option. I shall consider this carefully once it is submitted to me.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of self-employed in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Self-employment in Scotland is at its highest ever recorded level. The number, estimated to be 242,000 in December 1989, has grown by more than 50 per cent. in the last decade. This is an excellent reflection of the spirit of enterprise in Scotland.

Roads, Borders Region

19. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate a timetable for future road developments in the Borders region following his appointment of consultants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The A68 Dalkeith bypass is being progressed as the most important immediate improvement to serve the Borders and it is hoped that this scheme will commence late next year. Consultants are also to be appointed to confirm that an environmentally acceptable dualling of the A7 in the longer term from Edinburgh to the Borders can be defined. In the short term, work will commence on the package of accident remedial measures on the A1, A7, A68 and A702 and on the programme of smaller improvement schemes on the A1 and A7 south of Hawick.

Steel Industry

20. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time he met the chief executive of the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) to discuss the steel industry.

Mr. Lang: I met the chief executive two days ago, when we discussed a number of matters, including the steel industry.

23. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the effect of the closure of Ravenscraig on the local economy.

Mr. Lang: British Steel has confirmed that its undertaking to continue steel-making at Ravenscraig until at least 1994 still stands. In the light, however, of its proposals for the hot strip mill my right hon. and learned Friend has asked his officials and the Scottish Development Agency to consider, on a contingency basis, what could be done to encourage new employment and investment in Lanarkshire in the event of closure of the hot strip mill.

46. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future of the steel industry in Scotland.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his efforts to procure information from British Steel on its reasons for the closure of the Ravenscraig strip mill.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Members to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid) earlier today.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the total amount of poll tax unpaid in Scotland for 1989-90; and if he will express this as a percentage of the total amount of poll tax payable for that year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that around 87 per cent. of budgeted revenue has been collected by local authorities to date.

57. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about his consideration of proposed changes in the poll tax legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and I and colleagues are looking at a number of aspects of the existing community charge arrangements. We have made it clear that we are prepared to make changes if they are required.

A1

22. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the implications for road safety of the proposal that a new dual carriageway section of the A1 should end at the border.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: An A1 steering group has been formed to monitor traffic growth and to develop an appropriate programme of route improvements and accident remedial schemes between Newcastle and Edinburgh. Following the inaugural meeting of the group on 21 June, the Scottish Development Department and Department of Transport agreed to look at the possibility of further improvement to the existing road immediately north of the Marshall Meadows dualling scheme, for which a public inquiry is likely to be held later this year.

Eye Tests

24. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many national health service sight tests were conducted between (a) April 1988-89 and (b) April 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures are 1,168,610 and 475,479 respectively.

36. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of people taking sight tests in 1987, 1988, and 1989 and 1990 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the total number of people taking sight tests in Scotland is not available centrally.

Housing Associations

25. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the chairman of Scottish Homes to discuss housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and I meet Sir James Mellon, chairman of Scottish Homes, and his board members as required. No meeting is presently scheduled to discuss housing associations.

Road and Rail Services

26. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in the current year about investment in road and rail infrastructure in the north-east of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations in 1990 from a number of organisations and individuals, including Members of Parliament, on the electrification of the east coast main line between Edinburgh and Aberdeen, capital allocations for local roads and transport, improvements to the A96, road links to the channel tunnel and road safety.

Self-governing Hospitals

27. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from consultants concerning self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations have been made on behalf of consultants on a number of aspects relating to self-governing hospitals. Four expressions of interest are currently being pursued.

54. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the precise method and scope for consultation before a hospital can become self-governing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Applications must be routed through health boards which, before conveying their views to the Secretary of State, are required to consult all interested parties, including potential customers, staff interests and local health councils.

Small Businesses

28. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Britain's small businesses is located in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The statistical coverage of small businesses in Scotland is less comprehensive than that of the United Kingdom as a whole. Nevertheless, the Department of Employment has estimated that of the 1,574,000 United Kingdom businesses registered for VAT at the end of 1988, some 6·9 per cent. were in Scotland. The overwhelming majority of these will be relatively small businesses.

Disabled People

29. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the legal quota for the employment of registered disabled people in his Department; what is the current figure employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department, in common with other Government Departments, accepts the same responsibilities for employment of the disabled as other employers of 20 or more staff. We work to a target of 3 per cent. of total staff for the total of registered disabled people. Currently the Scottish Office and associated Departments employ 82 registered disabled staff—1·4 per cent. of the total work force.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Link)

30. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department has commissioned into the effect on the Scottish economy of a fast link from the channel tunnel to London.

Mr. Lang: My Department has not commissioned any such studies. However, a study on the impact of the channel tunnel on the Scottish economy was commissioned by the Scottish Development Agency from Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers and was completed in 1988.

Community Care

31. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the chairmen of regional health boards in Scotland and with COSLA on proposals for community care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I hold regular meetings with Scottish health board chairmen and my hon. Friend the Minister of State met COSLA on 15 May 1990 to discuss the Government's community care proposals.

50. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he is making in implementing the Government's plans for the reform of community care.

Mr. Lang: Three consultation papers have already been issued, in regard to my right hon. and learned Friend's proposals, for the inspection of residential care homes, community care plans and the payment of a specific grant to local authorities with social work responsibilities for mental illness projects. Responses to these papers are currently under consideration with a view to the preparation of formal guidance for local authorities. There will be consultations on further matters including the assessment of community care needs, co-operation between housing authorities and local authorities and arrangements for purchase by local authorities of services from private and voluntary sector agencies.

58. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with regional and island authorities regarding community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have had two meetings on this subject with representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities social work committee—one on 8 September and the other on 15 May 1990. Both these discussions were useful and constructive. The more recent one served in particular to confirm that local authorities share fully in the positive response to the proposals in the White Paper "Caring for People".

Crafts Industry

32. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he anticipates announcing his proposals for future support of the crafts industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I expect to take decisions shortly.

European Regional Development Fund

33. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of grants that Scotland has received from the European regional development fund since its inception.

Mr. Lang: Awards totalled £869 million between 1975 and 1989.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

34. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals the Commission of the European Economic Community is making to revise the fishing vessels decommissioning scheme; if his Department is participating in discussions on this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Commission has made a number of proposals for amending the existing fleet structure regulations (EEC No. 4028/86). The main proposals involve:

— extending to smaller fishing vessels the availability of Community financial aid for restructuring and renewal, modernisation and adjustment of capacity; — greater incentives for exploratory fishing and joint ventures through higher grant assistance;
— the introduction of redeployment operations: the exploitation of non-Community fishery resources with a view to supplying the Community market;
— new rates of grant for decommissioning.

Under the proposals Community reimbursement for decommissioning would be increased to 70 per cent. of eligible expenditure where vessels are scrapped; and remain at 50 per cent. for withdrawal for purposes other than fishing or for permanent export to third countries. Levels of eligible expenditure would vary depending on age and tonnage of the vessel concerned.

All member states and their respective industries have been invited to comment on the proposals and the Government have submitted a number of points to the Commission. Given the level of overcapacity in the Community fleet generally, we have questioned the extension of grant aid to the construction of smaller fishing vessels, and have taken the view that the additional measures should be accommodated within the existing financial provisions for these activities. As far as the capacity of the United Kingdom fleet is concerned the Government remain of the view that a decommissioning grant scheme does not provide value for money and this view has been reinforced by the proposal to increase rates of grant.

Hospital Services, Forth Valley

35. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet received from Forth Valley health board its proposals for the future of hospital services arising from option appraisal study.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Nuclear Waste Dumps

37. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time he met the convenor of Highland regional council to discuss the siting of nuclear waste dumps.

38. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time he met the convenor of Highland regional council to discuss the siting of nuclear waste dumps.

44. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time he met the convenor of Highland regional council to discuss the siting of nuclear waste dumps.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the convenor of Highland regional council to discuss this matter.

Unemployment Trends

39. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed unemployment trends with the Scottish Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have had no recent discussions with the SDA about unemployment trends. However, my hon. Friend will welcome the continued fall in levels of unemployment in Scotland. In the year to May 1990, unemployment rates in both Scotland and the Dumfries travel-to-work area (TTWA) fell by around 16 per cent., faster than in the United Kingdom as a whole. The rate of unemployment is now down to 5 per cent. in the Dumfries TTWA. This is below both the Scottish and United Kingdom averages (unadjusted).

Child Abuse

40. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will institute an appeal mechanism in association with the administrative system of compiling the at risk register of children established by his Department in conjunction with the regional authorities and the health boards.

Mr. Lang: Child protection registers are an essential component in the arrangements for protecting children from abuse or from risk of abuse. A child's name is normally entered on the register when a multi-disciplinary case conference concludes after assessing all the available information that an inter-agency plan is required for the care and protection of the child. We see no need to introduce a formal right of appeal against the administrative decision to register a child. Parents have full statutory rights of appeal to the sheriff court, against any decision made subsequently by the children's hearing to impose compulsory measures of care for a child.

Law Reform

41. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Law Society of Scotland to discuss progress on the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so, although he always values the Law Society's contributions to debates on the issues covered in the Bill.

Police Staffing

42. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to increase the complement of new police officers available to the Lothian and Borders police force; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lothian and Borders police board has submitted an application to the Scottish Home and Health Department for an increase of 50 police constables in the authorised police establishment, together with an increase of 20 in the civilian establishment. In accordance with the usual practice, this application is being considered in consultation with Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. The Scottish Home and Health Department expects to be in a position to respond to the board in the near future.

Speech Therapy

43. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further plans he has to develop the speech therapy service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Quotas on the intake of students have been lifted, refresher courses are being organised and a new manpower planning steering group has been established.

Football Hooligans

45. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the incidence of football hooliganism at Scottish football grounds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am encouraged by a continuing decline in hooliganism at Scottish football grounds. Since the Government took powers under the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 to ban alcohol at designated sporting events, there has been a 55 per cent. reduction in arrests at Scottish football grounds, despite a 70 per cent. increase in attendances over the same period. Scottish football supporters also continue to behave well abroad and I note that with approximately 20,000 Scottish supporters in Italy for the World Cup there were no incidents and no arrests involving Scottish supporters.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

47. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the knitwear, lace-making and textile industries in Scotland to discuss the effects of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Lang: I met the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun, and representatives of the knitwear, lace-making and textile industries' interests.

Scottish Government

48. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce any democratic reforms into the arrangements for governing Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no plans for making any alterations in the arrangements for the government of Scotland which, they believe, provide for Scotland to take its rightful place in the United Kingdom.

Fatal Accident Inquiries

51. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of fatal accident inquiries arising from road accidents within the Clydesdale constituency each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These statistics are not centrally held and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

53. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next hopes to meet the procurator fiscal in Kilmarnock to discuss the procedures for fatal accident inquiries.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate meets procurators fiscal from time to time. He has no immediate plans to meet the procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock.

Hospital Services, Lothian

55. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future of hospital services in Lothian.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board announced on 24 May proposals for the rationalisation of acute services which are currently subject to public consultation.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current waiting list length and average waiting time in Lothian region for (a) cervical screening, (b) breast screening, (c) cervical treatment, (d) breast treatment, (e) hip replacement surgery, (f) gynaecology operations, (g) plastic surgery, (h) geriatric assessment, (i) geriatric long-stay hospital accommodation and (j) psychogeriatric hospital accommodation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information for Lothian health board is set out in the table:

	Waiting list at 30 September 1989	Median wait (in days) at December 1988
Cervical Screening	[1]	[1]
Breast Screening	[1]	[1]
Cervical Treatment	[1]	23
Breast Treatment	[1]	16
Hip Replacement Surgery	[1]	90
Gynaecology Operations	[1]	21
Plastic Surgery	1,008	70·5
Geriatric Assessment	48	3
Geriatric Longstay	160	[1]
Psychogeriatric	125	[1]

[1] Information not held centrally.

National Health Service

52. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairmen of the area health boards to discuss the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I meet the chairmen regularly. The last meeting was on 29 June.

CBI

56. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland; and whether economic growth in Scotland was discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are in frequent touch with the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland on a range of matters concerning the Scottish economy. I am sure the CBI shares our satisfaction that economic growth in Scotland in 1988 was at its highest level for 15 years, and is expected to outpace growth in the United Kingdom economy in 1989 and 1990.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

USSR (EC Aid)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on European Community economic aid to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the House on 28 June on the Dublin European Council which addressed the question of EC aid to the Soviet Union.

Children's Rights

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet set a timetable for ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 9 May.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the aspirations of some east European states to join the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We were the first to advocate association agreements for the emerging democracies of central and eastern Europe seeking a bridge to the Community. This is now established EC policy and the Commission should soon begin discussions with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Vietnam

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British policy towards Vietnam.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have normal diplomatic relations with the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. On 17 May, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development announced a package of humanitarian assistance for Vietnam. We now expect Vietnam to respect its obligations under international law and accept back all its citizens who are not refugees, which remains an obstacle to the development of our relations.

Antarctica

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Australian Government on the future of Antarctica.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 13 June to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells).

Soviet Union

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his counterpart from the Soviet Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met Mr. Shevardnadze at the two-plus-four talks on 22 June, when they discussed that meeting and related security issues.

Political Co-operation

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet other EEC Ministers to discuss political co-operation.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet other European Economic Community Ministers to discuss political co-operation.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will be meeting our EC colleagues on 16 July in Brussels when there will be discussion of political co-operation matters.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has made any representations to the Government of (a) Sri Lanka and (b) India concerning the recent escalation of violence in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British High Commission in Colombo is in regular contact with the Sri Lankan Government, and we have also made contact with the Indian Government. We are deeply concerned by the renewed fighting in Sri Lanka and by the suffering and loss of life that this is causing. We are dismayed by the decision of the Tamil Tigers to break off negotiations with the Sri Lankan Government and to resume fighting.

Irish Terrorism

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of co-operation exists with the authorities in the Netherlands in the fight against Irish terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are co-operating fully with the authorities in the Netherlands and will continue to do so.

Soviet Nuclear Testing

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has expressed any views to the Soviet authorities concerning the closure of the Semipalatinsk nuclear test site and the concentration of Soviet nuclear testing at Novaya Zemlya.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Libya and Iraq (Component Sales)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has been in contact with his EEC counterparts in regard to the halting of sales of components that could aid Libya and Iraq in their respective programmes to produce nuclear weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. However, these issues are regularly discussed in the framework of European political co-operation in the working group on non-proliferation.

Belize

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with a view to facilitating the long-term security of Belize without necessarily a United Kingdom military presence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom is an additional participant in the Belize-Guatemala joint commission and has supported the efforts being made to reach a negotiated settlement between Belize and Guatemala. Such a settlement would contribute significantly to the long-term security of Belize.

World Cup (Deportations)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations his Department has received on the subject of deportations from Italy for alleged hooliganism at the World Cup tournament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sixty of those persons removed from Italy have so far approached the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for assistance in recovering their personal possessions from Italy.

In addition, I received a call on 2 July from the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell).

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take to recover the belongings of innocent British citizens deported from Italy for alleged hooliganism at the World Cup tournament.

Mr. Sainsbury: British consular officials are helping the Italian authorities to identify and locate the personal possessions left in Italy by British nationals who were removed following recent disturbances at Rimini. To assist in this exercise, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has written to all those who gave proper addresses to the Italian police.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Italian authorities over the deportation of innocent British citizens from Italy for alleged hooliganism at the World Cup tournament.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. We have not received any evidence about the circumstances of the removal of the British citizens from Italy which would justify representations.

Specialist Advisers

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether external specialist advisers to his Department or the Overseas Development Administration are required to declare their pecuniary interests before appointment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Special advisers, as employees of the Crown, are asked to declare their pecuniary interests before appointment.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 399, whether he has asked the Government of Syria to help in connection with the investigation of the Lockerbie air disaster.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. We would expect Governments to volunteer information in their possession of relevance to the international investigation.

Somalia

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he is having with those local authorities which are giving help to refugees from Somalia now living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply. The Home Office is, together with other relevant departments, considering the present arrangements for asylum seekers, including those from Somalia, to see whether any changes are necessary. Local authority associations will be involved as appropriate in future, but no discussions are taking place with them at the present time.

EMPLOYMENT

Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each of the dates since 1982 on which the Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances met, which members of the committee representing which organisations were present, and what main items of business were discussed.

Mr. Nicholls: I have placed details of the information requested in the Library.

Employment Service

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether his Department's report into the attractiveness of employment credit schemes for the long-term unemployed is to be published; and if he will make a statement on its findings;

(2) if he will list the number of unemployed claimants whose unemployment benefit or income support has been suspended arising from doubts about their availability for work in the six months prior to the enactment of the Social Security Act 1989 and, in the subsequent six months, the numbers of suspensions, and the proportion of suspensions upheld by subsequent adjudication, arising from doubts about whether the claimant is actively seeking work for (a) Great Britain, (b) the south-west region and (c) Avon.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Tourism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Development of Tourism Act 1969, to enable the Wales tourist board to promote itself overseas; and if he will make a statemer.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no such plans.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stretford, 24 April, Official Report, columns 170-1, if he will list (a) the number of trainees as part of the total number of inspectors within the Health and Safety Executive and (b) as a proportion of all inspectors for 1974-1989, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows (a) total inspectors within HSE and (b) trainee inspectors included in the total, for each year since 1977. For earlier years, figures for trainees could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Only two grades of staff in the Health and Safety Executive are designated as training grades: factory inspectors class II (for their first two years) and assistant agricultural inspectors (first three years). There are no trainee grades for mines, quarries, nuclear or specialist inspectors, who are recruited for their specialist knowledge and whose initial training varies according to their needs. Accordingly it would not be meaningful to express trainees as a proportion of total inspectors.

	(a) Total inspectors within HSE[2]	(b) Of which trainee inspectors[3]
[4]1977	1349·5	213
1978	1392·5	179
1979	1388·5	114
1980	1441·5	140
1981	1405·5	101
1982	1331·5	29
1983	1281·0	—
1984	1247·0	—
1985	1237·0	45
1986	1231·5	91

1988	1170·5	102
1989	1188·0	99

[1] The Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.

[2] The total number of HSE inspectors includes those working outside inspectorates eg contributing to policy, standards work etc.

[3] The figure for 1977 includes trainee factory inspectors at 1 April. The figure for 1987 includes trainee factory inspectors at 31 March.

[4] 1 March.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each of the years 1974 to 1989 inclusive if he will give (a) the number of prosecutions passed on from the Health and Safety Executive to the Crown prosecution service and (b) the results of these prosecutions.

Mr. Nicholls: Records are not kept of Health and Safety Executive (HSE) prosecutions passed to the Crown prosecution service for its consideration. Most health and safety prosecutions are undertaken by HSE inspectors.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) female and (b) male employees were covered by the Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980; and what was the number of (a) and (b) suspended because of high blood lead levels for each year 1980 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no requirement for employers to notify the number of persons in their employ covered by the Control of Lead at Work Regulations. However, the number of workers under medical surveillance under the regulations from 1982 onwards are available and are given in the table. Additionally, the table gives details of the number of persons suspended under the regulations from 1982.

Year	Workers under medical surveillance		Suspension from work with lead
	Male	Female	Male	Female
1982	20,948	1,269	258	33
1983	22,121	1,333	198	20

[1] In 1986 there was a reduction in the maximum blood lead levels for suspension for work with lead.
[2] Year commencing 1 April.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) industrial deaths, (b) HSE prosecutions, (c) the fines for these deaths and (d) the verdicts at an inquest for each of the years 1974 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of industrial deaths for the years 1975 to 1988-89 is shown in the table. The other information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of expenditure on the sponsored placement scheme in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On Friday last, 29 June, the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" was published which contains proposals for a rebalancing of the sheltered employment programme, in favour of sheltered placements, over a transitional period of five years. There is to be a six-month period to allow interested parties to comment and at present I am therefore unable to estimate future expenditure on this aspect of the programme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on the latest available figures what was the number of registered unemployed aged (a) 16 years, (b) 17 years and (c) 18 years.

Mr. Nicholls: Unemployment by age is produced quarterly. The table shows in April 1990 the number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom aged 16, 17 and 18 years respectively:

Age	April 1990 Total
16	314
17	1,189
18	56,771

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many children have (a) one parent and (b) both parents who are unemployed.

Mr. Nicholls: The labour force survey cannot provide the information in the form requested. However, the LFS can provide data that show the number of families in which one or both parents are unemployed (using the ILO definition of unemployment).

In Great Britain in spring 1989, there were 6,532,000 families with one or more dependent children. Of these, 648,000 have one parent unemployed and 32,000 have both parents unemployed.

Skill Centres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the negotiations with the Lakin consortium for the purchase of four skill centres, listing significant dates.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Lakin consortium's original bid for part of the STA was unsuccessful. However, the consortium contacted Deloittes on 14 February to register that it was interested in purchasing some of the skill centres which remained unsold following the announcement of the sale on 13 February. Negotiations then took place and the consortium's offer for the purchase of Cumbria, East Lancashire, Ipswich and St. Helens skill centres was accepted on 28 February.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure, income and surplus or deficit forecasts from the skill centre sold to (a) Astra Training Services Ltd., (b) Training Business Group Ltd., (c) METEL and (d) the Lakin consortium.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The income, expenditure and operational deficit for skill centres grouped by purchaser for the year 1989-90 were:

	Income £,000	Expenditure £,000	Deficit £,000
a. Astra Training	33,013	46,894	13,881
b. The Training Business	404	1,036	632
c. METEL	548	786	238
d. The Larkin Consortium	1,149	2,108	959

The expenditure figures relate to skill centres only and take no account of the contribution which skill centres were normally expected to make towards the cost of STA's head office and regional offices. They therefore understate the true deficit.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the sale price of Liverpool skill centre and the asset value of the site.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: No sale price was fixed in advance for this or other centres. Bids were invited for the training business and associated assets, and the ones that best met the Government's objectives for the sale were accepted. In the case of Liverpool this involved a payment to the Government of £65,000.

However, I am assured that the asset value given by the Government's advisers compares favourably with the value ascribed to it by the successful purchaser and was taken fully into account in arriving at the final consideration.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the directors of Training Business Group Ltd. and purchasers had any previous experience of providing training prior to their bid for the Lambeth skill centre; what were the names of the predecessor companies to Business Training Group Ltd; and whether the accounts of these companies have been examined at Companies House.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Training Business Group had experience of providing training prior to its bid for Lambeth skill centre.

My Department's advisers, Deloittes, investigated the standing of all purchasers including the Training Business. I have no knowledge of any predecessor companies.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what assessment was made of the potential purchasers of the skill centres before the recent privatisation;

(2) what assessment was made of the potential purchasers of the skill centres, with regard to (a) previous experience of training, (b) financial viability and (c) involvement with other companies.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In assessing the final offers for Skills Training Agency training businesses, the Department's professional advisers, Deloittes, undertook an analysis of the individual bidders' background, viability, their business plans and their compatibility with the Government's objectives for the sale. This analysis formed part of Deloittes' final recommendation to the Secretary of State.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether companies or individuals who had unsuccessfully bid for any or all of the skill centres were contacted about the further sales of four skill centres which were subsequently transferred to the Lakin consortium.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Apart from the Lakin consortium, three companies which had put in final offers made inquiries about some of the four skill centres eventually sold to Lakin, but did not pursue this interest or put in a bid.

It was not judged necessary to approach bidders who had sought to purchase a large network of skill centres as during earlier negotiations it was apparent that they were interested only in purchasing large networks.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any of the bidders for any of the skill centres was asked to resubmit bids after the final bids were received by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The final bids received by my Department were subject to some modifications during the negotiations.

After the announcement of the main sales on 13 February 1990, negotiations took place between my Department's advisers and some companies that had made unsuccessful bids, but that subsequently expressed interest in unsold centres.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of employment training expenditure to the Skills Training Agency skill centres in 1988-89, the outturn expenditure for 1989-90 and the estimated expenditure for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: When employment training was first introduced in September 1988 contracts for the provision of training were awarded by the Training Agency on the basis of free competition. Contracts won by Skills Training Agency skill centres resulted in expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 by the Training Agency of £8·6 million and £16·8 million respectively. Contracts extant at the time of the sale were transferred to the purchasers of STA skill centres or renegotiated, at which time they moved out of the public sector domain. Payments on contracts in 1990-91 for employment training still held by skill centres up to the date of sale and those not included in the sale to the private sector are expected to amount to £3·2 million. Unsold skill centres are to be wound up once their contract liabilities have been discharged; no expenditure is expected beyond the autumn of 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there were any positive cash amounts bid for any of the four skill centres subsequently transferred to the Lakin consortium.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: At the final offer stage a positive bid was received for one of the skill centres (East Lancashire skill centre) which were eventually purchased by the consortium headed by Mr. Lakin. This bid formed part of a network offer which was unsuccessful, and the potential purchasers were not prepared to buy the single skill centre alone. No other positive offers were received at the final offer stage of the sale.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) meetings held with potential bidders for the skill centres and (b) the dates on which letters were sent to prospective bidders, about the privatisation of the skill centres, in the period 19 February 1988 to November 1990.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I regret that the full information asked for can be obtained only at disproportionate cost, and some, including details of negotiations, must be regarded as commercially confidential. However, letters were sent to all bidders between 2 October 1989 and 27 October 1989, and also on 17 November 1989, 21 November 1989, 6 December 1989, 11 December 1989, 19 December 1989, 20 December 1989, 22 December 1989, 4 January 1990, 5 January 1990, 11 January 1990, 22 January 1990, 12 February 1990 and 13 February 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the dates on which the bids from (a) Astra Training Services Ltd., (b) METEL, (c) Training Business Group Ltd. and (d) the Lakin consortium for the purchase of skill centres were accepted.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The offers from the successful bidders for STA training businesses were accepted on the following: Astra Training Services Ltd.—12 February; Merseyside Education Training Enterprise Ltd.—12 February; Training Business—2 March; the Lakin consortium—28 February.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who were listed as shareholders of Astra Training Services Ltd. in its bid for the purchase of skill centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Astra Training Services Ltd. set up a company prior to the indicative offer stage of the sale. It was formed solely as a vehicle to enable the management buy-out team to launch a bid and was called Vetin Ltd. The shareholders were listed as:

Stuart Bishell
Trevor Kent
Phillip Wells

The name of this company was later change to Astra Training Services Ltd.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations have been received from Edinburgh chamber of commerce concerning the Edinburgh skill centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I have received one letter about the STA privatisation from the Edinburgh chamber of commerce and manufacturers.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the operating deficits of each of the skill training centres for each of the standard regions of Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Provisional unaudited figures for 1989-90 indicate that the following operational deficits were incurred by skill centres in Wales and Scotland:

	£'000
Wales
Cardiff	310
Gwent	302
West Glamorgan	65
Wrexham	323
Scotland
Bellshill	329
Dundee	219
Dunfermline	344
Edinburgh	659
Hillington	611
Irvine	151

The figures relate to skill centres only and take no account of the contribution which skill centres were normally expected to make towards the cost of STA's head office and regional offices. The true deficit is therefore understated.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total number of employees in the Skills Training Agency; (a) immediately prior to privatisation, (b) the number of redundancies announced since and (c) the current level of employment for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: There were 2,363 staff employed in the Skills Training Agency immediately prior to privatisation. There are now 135 staff employed in the unsold units and the redundancies of 40 of these have been announced. A further 70 staff have been invited to apply for voluntary redundancy.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will publish the 1989-90 accounts for the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The STA trading account 1988-89 stated at note 18:

"Separate STA Trading Accounts will no longer be produced. Accounts for STA activities from 1989-90 onwards, to the date of transfer or disposal, will be included in the Training Agency White Paper Accounts."

This decision was taken with the agreement of the Treasury and National Audit Office.

The White Paper account 1989-90 for the Training Agency will be published by my Department before the end of 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the £8·6 million described as an extraordinary item of expenditure in the 1988-89 accounts of the Skills Training Agency; and what this item of expenditure has been used for.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The extraordinary item of £8·6 million in the 1988-89 trading accounts of the Skills Training Agency represented the estimated cost involved in operating a voluntary early retirement scheme as a means of reducing STA staff numbers to a level compatible with the then anticipated future business activities. This is described in note 11 of the accounts.

In accordance with statements of standard accounting practice 2 and 17, and following normal commercial accounting conventions, STA management made provision for future early retirement and associated payments based on the best information then available. The £8·6 million represented the estimated cost of payments to be made in 1989-90 and in subsequent years.

Payments of £4·088 million were actually made in 1989-90. The balance will be expended as payments in lieu of pension until those in receipt reach the age of 60, when they will receive their civil service pension.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the new guidelines prepared for the clawback of development gain as part of the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency were discussed with the National Audit Office.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The clawback arrangements on any development gain were not discussed with the National Audit Office as the responsibility for policy in this area does not lie with it. However, full account was taken of the NAO's views on clawback, as stated for example in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General: "Ministry of Defence; Further Examination of the Sale of Royal Ordnance plc" (June 1989).

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the role of Mr. Bishell, Mr. Kent and Mr. Wells in the Skills Training Agency between April 1989 and 19 February 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Mr. Bishell was head of skill centre operations, Mr. Kent head of financial services and Mr. Wells head of product development. Throughout the period April 1989 to 19 February 1990 they continued in these posts, but because of their declared interest in bidding for the business, special arrangements were made from the start of April 1989 to ensure that they were not allowed to authorise expenditure, or instruct others to incur expenditure, on behalf of the agency, or to take decisions affecting personnel. In addition, every care was taken to ensure that they were insulated from any knowledge of the STA privatisation which was not available to other prospective purchasers.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of the building assets of the Skills Training Agency obtained in the period between the final accounts for 1988-89 and the preparation of the privatisation prospectus by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The Skills Training Agency obtained no building assets in the period between the final accounts for 1988-89 and the preparation of the privatisation prospectus by Deloittes.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what approval was given in relation to the disposal of assets to bodies other than Government Departments at less than full market value in respect of the sale of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: In accordance with the Government's objectives for the sale, all parts of the Skills Training Agency were offered for sale by competitive tender as training businesses on a going-concern basis. Their assets were integral parts of those businesses. The bids received reflected the current market value of the businesses as a whole.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total expenditure involved in the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency for the most recent dates available.

Mr. Tim Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Total expenditure directly attributable to the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency brought to account up to 31 May 1990 is £1·444 million. This figure covers fees paid to advisers and the departmental staff costs incurred up to that date.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of the equipment of the Skills Training Agency obtained in the period between the final accounts for 1988-89 and the preparation of the privatisation prospectus by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The STA privatisation prospectus was prepared in September 1989. The total value of capital equipment obtained by the Skills Training Agency between 1 April 1989 and that date was £104,000.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the clawback procedure covering development gain is written into the contract agreements with METEL, Astra Training Scheme Ltd., the Training Business Group Ltd. and the Lakin consortium for purchase of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Clawback has been applied to all the freehold and long leasehold properties acquired by Astra Training Services Ltd. and is covered by contract. Clawback does not apply to METEL's purchase of Liverpool skill centre nor the Lakin consortium's purchase of Cumbria skill centre. The Government received professional advice that in each of these cases there was little or no potential for development gain so that clawback was inappropriate. The remaining Lakin acquisitions and the Training Business Group purchase of Lambeth skill centre involved short to medium-term leases and clawback was therefore inappropriate.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to the expenditure of £8·6 million included as an extraordinary item in the 1988-89 accounts of the Skills Training Agency; how many early retirements were to be covered by this expenditure; and how much had been spent by 31 March 1989.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The extraordinary item of £8·6 million included in the STA accounts for 1988-89 was intended, in accordance with normal accounting practice, to make provision for anticipated early retirement costs as a result of a reduction in staff numbers to a level compatible with levels of business.

Out of the forecast surplus staff of 571, it was estimated that a reduction of 270 would be achieved by early retirement. No expenditure on these early retirements was incurred before 31 March 1989.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the total appropriations in aid, broken down by (a) fees from employers, (b) receipts from Government and (c) income from others for the Skills Training Agency for each of the years 1984-85 to 1988-89, including provision and outturn; and what is the estimated total appropriation in aid for 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: I regret that information in the form requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I can give the following:

Income

Total STA income appearing in the trading account for years 1984-85 to 1988-89 and internal management accounts for 1989-90 is as follows:

£ million

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Fees from employers[1]	4·6	5·6	8·3	11·1	16·5	20·2
Adult training from Government[2]	71·3	63·1	65·4	60·1	38·4	17·7
YTS[3]	3·8	1·6	1·5	1·4	1·4	1·4
Income from others[4]	2·0	2·1	2·8	3·4	3·7	1·9

[1] Covers fees from employers, ET placement providers, CITB and overseas customers.
[2] Covers adult training contracted by Training Agency. The figure for 1988-89 includes residual job training scheme for the whole year and employment training from September 1988.
[3] Covers YTS income from other managing agents and work placement providers in addition to the fees from Training Agency.
[4] Covers sublet of property, sale of non-capital items and non-training income from Training Agency.

The figures for 1989-90 are provisional and subject to audit.

Provision was shown in the published estimates for each year from 1984-85 to 1989-90 as follows:

£ million

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Fees from employers[1]	4·1	7·7	11·5	12·0	8·7	11·8
Receipts from Government[2]	97·2	73·9	65·9	64·9	30·3	29·8
Income from others[3]	1·5	0·7	2·2	2·3	1·7	2·1

[1] Covers fees from employers and overseas customers, and youth training scheme receipts from employers and other managing agents but does not include employment training receipts from other training managers and placement providers.
[2] Covers adult training and youth training contracted by Training Agency, also employment training receipts from other managing agents and placement providers.
[3] Covers receipts from sublet of property, sale of non-capital items and non-training income from Training Agency.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total amount of income received from the sale of the Skills Training Agency for the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The most recent date of information is 31 May 1990, at which point the total income received amounted to £65,000. While the sale of the STA as training business is complete, there are property interests which are about to be marketed for sale.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of the land assets of the Skills Training Agency obtained in the period between the final accounts for 1988-89 and the preparation of the prospectus by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The STA privatisation prospectus was prepared by Deloittes in September 1989. The only land asset obtained for the Skills Training Agency between 1 April 1989 and that date was the freehold interest in a leasehold site, at a cost of £297,000. The purchase of the freehold interest enabled the Department to avoid large expenditure on dilapidations on surrender of the lease.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on objective (III) contained in his Department's press notice dated 13 February entitled "Management Buyout of Skills Training Agency".

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The key objectives for the sale of the Skills Training Agency (STA) training businesses were that as much as possible of STA's training business should transfer to the private sector, and that the training businesses sold should have good prospects of viability. Objective (III) was to maximise the net proceeds of the sale, consistent with these objectives. I am satisfied that this has been achieved. The disposal of the remaining property of the STA will help bring a positive return for the sale as a whole.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the total expenditure on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency, inclusive of transfer of assets, financial assistance, administration costs and any other transfers of expenditure within the Department of Employment group budget.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: It is not possible to estimate the total expenditure on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency as the process is not yet complete; the Government's remaining property interests, for example, have yet to be sold. However, the total expenditure to date is approximately £14·94 million. This includes the payments to Astra Training Services Ltd., the Lakin consortium and the Training Business Group; advisers' fees; help with unsuccessful management buy-out costs and staffing costs.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was transferred from the employment training sub-head to cover the increase in expenditure and the reduction in income in the Skills Training Agency sub-head in the supply estimates between March 1989 and February 1990.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The spring supplementary estimates of the supply estimates class VII vote 1 published on 13 February 1990, introduction paragraph 3 (iii) stated:

"Transfer of provision from Section B1 (Employment Training) of £19,183,000 to Section G (Skills Training Agency) to cover excess expenditure on running costs and £19,227,000 to cover reduced income."

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total of (a) running costs, (b) capital expenditure and (c) expenditure on purchases of equipment, repairs etc. for the Skills Training Agency in each of the years 1984-85 to 1988-89, including both provision and outturn; and what is the estimated provision for 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The totals of (a) running costs, (b) capital expenditure, (c) expenditure on purchases of equipment, repairs etc. for the Skills Training Agency in each of the years 1984-85 to 1988-89 and the expected outturn for 1989-90 are as follow:

	a £,000	b £,000	c £,000
1984-85	64,077	6,011	12,593
1985-86	61,655	8,363	10,781
1986-87	56,155	4,602	10-044
1987-88	57,173	3,247	9,283
1988-89	60,723	1,244	6,536
1989-90	49,161	909	6,586

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received any representations from potential bidders and unsuccessful bidders about the process involved in the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Ministers received correspondence from a small number of potential bidders and unsuccessful bidders about the sale process involved in moving the Skills Training Agency to the private sector.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by local education authority, the amount of money made available or planned for the technical and vocational education initiative in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1990, c. 464]: I regret that the information given in my reply of 18 June 1990 was incomplete. The correct information is as follows.

Following is a table showing by local education authority the budgets available or planned for technical and vocational education initiative extension in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

The additional information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reason for the delay in replying to the letter to him from the chief constable of Staffordshire on 8 May concerning residency qualifications for applicants to the police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chief constable's letter concerned a citizen of Nigeria who wishes to join the police. His residency qualifications and his later application for leave to remain in this country have been the subject of detailed inquiries. This was explained to the chief constable in an interim reply on 24 May. A substantive reply will be sent as soon as practicable.

Begging, London

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the steps he is taking to protect the public from intimidatory begging on the streets of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Decisions about the deployment of resources to tackle crime are an operational matter for the commissioner. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the police will arrest for begging where there is some element of threatening or intimidating behaviour.

Irish Terrorism

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the level of co-operation between police forces in the United Kingdom and those in Belgium in the fight against Irish terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Police forces in the United Kingdom are co-operating fully with those in Belgium and will continue to do so.

Homosexuals

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has any plans to require police forces to monitor and record areas of violence against homosexuals where there is evidence of homophobic motives.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for police action to protect lesbians and gay men from violent attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Decisions about police action against specific offences are an operational matter for chief officers of police, but they attach a high priority to tackling violent crime.

Bomb Incidents

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has held discussions with the Metropolitan police following the recent bomb incidents in London.

Mr. Waddington: As I told the House in my statement on 26 June, I had a discussion with the commissioner that morning.

Vagrancy Act

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions were brought under the Vagrancy Act 1824 in 1989 (a) in the Metropolitan police district and (b) in other parts of England and Wales.

Mr. Waddington: Information for 1989 will not be available until the autumn.

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the operation of the Security Service Act.

Mr. Waddington: The Security Service Act 1989, which came into force on 18 December last year, provides for effective oversight of the service.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of imprisoning a fine defaulter in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The average cost of imprisonment in 1988-89 was £288 per inmate per week. No separate records are held for different categories of offender.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters were committed into custody in England and Wales during 1988 and 1989; what is the current daily population of fine defaulters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Information on persons received into prison service establishments in default of payment of a fine is published anually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales"—table 7.3 of the volume for 1988, Cm. 825—copies of which are in the Library. The provisional receptions figure for 1989 is 17,700 and the average population was about 460.

Psychiatric Hostels

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many psychiatric hostel places were available for offenders in England and Wales for the latest date available; what percentage were occupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddingdon: There are no places specifically designed for offenders in need of psychiatric support in the statutorily approved probation/bail hostels, but only those suffering from severe subnormality or psychopathic disorder are statutorily precluded from admission to these hostels. There are 212 bed spaces specifically available for discharged prisoners in need of psychiatric support within the Home Office voluntary after-care accommodation grants scheme (VACAGS). The latest available figure, which relates to 1989, for occupancy of these bedspaces is 72 per cent. I am aware that a number of other projects within VACAGS occasionally accept such residents, as do other special needs accommodation projects not funded by the Home Office.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly cost for the latest available date of a psychiatric hostel place in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office gives a contribution to the total income received by accommodation projects within the voluntary after-care accommodation grants scheme. The average weekly cost of a psychiatric hostel place requires information on total costs and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A, category B, and category C places were available in each prison region in England and Wales for the latest date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The certified normal accommodation of category B and category C training prisons in each of the four regions in England and Wales on 31 March 1990 was as follows:

	Certified normal accommodation in
	Category B prisons	Category C prisons
North	2,140	3,228
South-East	2,687	2,912
South-West	1,038	1,517
Midland	565	3,088

Category A places are provided in some category B training prisons and some local prisons and remand centres. These places are upgraded as and when necessary for the secure custody of category A prisoners.

Some 14,704 places are provided for male prisoners in local prisons and remand centres. These establishments hold prisoners identified as being within a variety of security categories and unsentenced prisoners who are unclassified for security purposes.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners currently under sentence or on remand in England and Wales are (a) mentally ill or (b) have a psychiatric history for the latest date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The number of inmates with a psychiatric history is not recorded centrally. On 30 September 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, 329 inmates—140 sentenced and 189 unsentenced—were reported by prison medical officers to be mentally disordered as defined by the Mental Health Act 1983. Of these, 264—90 sentenced and 174 unsentenced—were reported to be mentally ill.

On 30 June 1979 prison medical officers considered that 557 inmates were detainable within the terms of the legislation then in force. On the census dates in recent years the number has fluctuated between 250 and 350.

The Government encourage the diversion of mentally disordered offenders from the penal system whenever custody is not necessary in the public interest.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many psychiatric reports were prepared on remand prisoners in England and Wales for the latest year available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: A court requiring medical advice on a defendant's mental condition may remand that person to prison for a report. During the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 a total of 6,081 psychiatric reports to court, including 512 offered where not specifically requested were prepared by prison medical officers.

The Government encourage the use of other means of obtaining such reports including bail or remand to hospital where custody is not necessary in the public interest.

Children Leaving Home

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a national record of children under 16 years of age who leave either their own or local authority homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently examining different ways of establishing a national register of all vulnerable missing persons, including missing children. He hopes to announce his conclusion shortly.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the consequences for forensic science of the changes at the natural history museum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not anticipate that the organisational changes being made at the natural history museum will have significant consequences for forensic science.

Mrs. Sarah Conlon

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to compensate Mrs. Sarah Conlon for the false imprisonment of her husband, Giuseppe, and her son Gerard;

(2) how much he plans to pay Mrs. Sarah Conlon for the cost of the return of her husband's body to Belfast.

Mr. Waddington: I explained to the House on 14 June at column 454 that in the light of the view of the Director of Public Prosecutions the convictions of the Maguire family and their co-defendants are unsafe and unsatisfactory. The correct course would probably be for me to refer the case to the Court of Appeal, but I did not think it was right to do so until all the submissions on that issue had been presented to the May inquiry and Sir John May had had an opportunity to respond to them. As soon as I receive Sir John May's report on the relevant evidence so far presented to his inquiry, I will consider referring the cases to the Court of Appeal under section 17(i)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

Should the late Mr. Giuseppe Conlon's conviction be set aside, I will consider any application which Mrs. Conlon may make for compensation in respect of her husband's conviction. The amount of any such payment would be determined by an independent assessor, who in reaching his decision would consider detailed submissions as to the matters to be taken into account.

On the advice of the independent assessor, an interim payment of compensation has already been made to Mr. Gerard Conlon in respect of his wrongful conviction for offences arising out of the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings. Further payment will be made on the advice of the independent assessor.

Drug Rehabilitation Places

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residential and non-residential drug rehabilitation places in both the statutory and voluntary sectors are available for offenders in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: There are no places specifically designated for drugs offenders in the statutorily approved probation/bail hostels, but there are 577 bed spaces specifically available for such discharged prisoners within the Home Office voluntary after-care accommodation grants scheme. I am aware that a number of other projects within the scheme occasionally accept such residents as do other special needs accommodation projects not funded by the Home Office. It is not possible to calculate the number of drugs offenders attending non-residential facilities.

Prison Building

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to date of the prison building programme; what is the estimated cost of the remaining planned institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The total capital cost of the 8 prisons already constructed is £223 million, at outturn prices. The costs of the remaining 16 prisons in the current prison building programme are estimated at £1,132 million, also at outturn prices, of which £336 million had been spent up to the end of March 1990.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what allocations have been made from the £1 million pledged for 1990-91 for international agencies working in Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: Following discussions with international agencies active in Cambodia, Britain will grant £500,000 to UNICEF for its programmes in health, nutrition, water and sanitation. This will enable further progress to be made in priority activities to which Britain recently contributed £250,000. A further £300,000 will be provided to the World Food Programme to purchase rice in support of UNICEF's well and pond digging programme. This is an essential component of a nutrition programme already benefiting 7,480 families. Malaria is a major cause of morbidity and mortality in Cambodia. I have therefore decided to provide £200,000 to the World Health Organisation for their new anti-malaria programme.

I am sure that our contributions will make a significant impact on these key programmes of humanitarian assistance to the people of Cambodia. We shall monitor progress very closely.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the specified radius in nautical miles of low-flying avoidance around towns and villages;

(2) what definition is used for major conurbations and built-up areas in the instructions to pilots concerning overflight of major conurbations and built-up areas in the United Kingdom low-flying system;

(3) if simulated attacks on moving civilian road traffic are permitted in the United Kingdom low-flying system;

(4) what are the regulations concerning simulated attacks on targets of opportunity in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Neubert: The points raised are the subject of recommendations by the House of Commons Defence Committee whose report on low flying (HC 120) is currently being considered by the Government and to which a response will be made in the normal way.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list all the avoidance sites which have been disestablished in the tactical training areas since 1984;

(2) if he will list all the avoidance sites which have been newly established in the tactical training areas since 1984.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to release detailed information on flying restrictions in individual areas.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if all users of the United low-flying system are required to plan and brief an exact route for their sortie before take-off; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the maximum permitted lateral deviation from planned route for aircrew attempting to maintain visual meteorological conditions in poor weather at low level.

Mr. Neubert: Comprehensive planning is required for all sorties in the United Kingdom low-flying system. The precision with which the actual route is planned will vary with the type and role of aircraft and with the nature of the low-flying exercise which is to be undertaken. Aircrew will take account of the possibility of adverse weather in their planning but no maximum permitted lateral deviation is laid down.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which types of aircraft's noise levels produced by NATO allied air forces which are common users of the United Kingdom's low-flying system, will be included in the forthcoming noise survey to be conducted by his Department.

Mr. Neubert: The noise measurement trial conducted at the Royal Aerospace West Freugh range last month covered the following common users of the United Kingdom low-flying system: F-111, Hawk, Harrier GR5, Jaguar, Tornado and Tucano aircraft.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature, purpose and title of the low-flying exercise to be held in the vicinity of Swanton Morley, Norfolk, between 25 June and 20 July; how many and what types of aircraft are due to take part; what is the minimum altitude authorised for (a) helicopters and (b) fixed-wing aircraft participating in the exercise; and what notification has been given to the public of this exercise.

Mr. Neubert: There are no plans to hold a low-flying exercise in the vicinity of Swanton Morley over the period in question.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date that part of the London/Thames valley avoidance area encompassing Braintree, Witham and Heybridge, Essex, was abolished; what was the reason for its abolition; if he will list the parliamentary constituencies over which low flying is newly permitted, or within which the area available for low flying is extended, as a result of this measure; and what instructions are now issued to military pilots concerning low flying over (a) Witham (b) Braintree and (c) Heybridge.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 July 1989 at column 1031.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of aircraft permitted to operate at low level at any one time in the hilly areas of Wales; if this restriction applies to the whole of low-flying area 7; and if he will list any changes made to this maximum number since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: No more than 30 aircraft, excluding helicopters, are permitted to book into low flying area 7 at any one time during the period 0700 to 1800 local time Monday to Friday. No changes have been made to this figure since its introduction in 1987.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received about military low flying over the national eisteddfod at Glyn Llifon agricultural college, Caernarfon, between 28 May and 2 June.

Mr. Neubert: I am not aware of any such complaints.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has further to reduce the number and size of low-flying avoidance areas covering special rules airspace around civil airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 26 July 1989, Official Report, column 317.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature, purpose and title of the low-flying exercise held in the vicinity of the Llyn Brianne reservoir on 11, 12 and 13 June; how many and what types of aircraft took part; what was the minimum altitude authorised for (a) helicopters and (b) fixed-wing aircraft participating in the exercise; and what notification was given to the public of this exercise.

Mr. Neubert: Fighter evasion training involving one Hunter aircraft and two Lynx helicopters was conducted in the area of the Llyn Brianne reservoir over the period concerned within the normal minimum height constraints applicable in the United Kingdom low-flying system. No notification was given to the general public of this routine training activity.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties took place over the United Kingdom during this year's Exercise Central Enterprise.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date flow control for low-flying military aircraft in a southerly direction between the city of Hull and danger area D. G306 was first established;

(2) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low-flying system in a south-westerly direction (a) between RAF Marham and the Stanford practical training area and (b) in the vicinity of Harlesdon, Norfolk;

(3) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low flying system in a north-westerly direction in the vicinity of (a) Watton, Norfolk and (b) Diss, Norfolk;

(4) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low-flying System in a northerly direction between (a) Brancaster and Blakeney Point, Norfolk and (b) the city of Northampton and Sywell airfield;

(5) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low-flying System in a north-easterly direction between (a) RAF Cottesmore and RAF Wittering, (b) King's Lynn and RAF Sculthorpe and (c) on the north side of the RAF Wattisham military air traffic zone;

(6) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low-flying system in (a) a southerly direction in the vicinity of Cromer, Norfolk, and (b) a westerly direction between Peterborough and RAF Alconbury;

(7) on what date the anti-clockwise flow control was first established around the town of Sculthorpe in the United Kingdom low-flying system;

(8) on what date flow control was first established in the United Kingdom low-flying system (a) between Harworth and Carlton-in-Lindrick, Nottinghamshire, and (b) in the vicinity of Ackworth, west Yorkshire.

Mr. Neubert: Unidirectional traffic flows have been in use since before the introduction of the current low flying system in 1979 and I regret that the information requested could not be provided without disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to pilots concerning the minimum height and maximum speed to be flown over the Billing and Boothville suburbs of Northampton, when flying through the channel in the United Kingdom low-flying system in a northerly direction between the city of Northampton and Sywell airfield.

Mr. Neubert: Aircraft flying in the area concerned are subject to the normal rules of the United Kingdom low flying system.

Research and Development

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given within the options for change exercise to the mechanisms for returning research and development scientists and facilities to civilian manufacturing.

Mr. Neubert: The implications of options for change for the defence equipment programme, including the research programme, are being studied, but it is too early to say what their impact will be.

Exercise Panoramic II

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many aircraft, and of which types, will participate in Exercise Panoramic II; and from which bases they will operate;

(2) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the forthcoming exercise entitled Panoramic II;

(3) if he will make a statement on the measures taken to ensure the safety of civilian sea and air traffic during Exercise Panoramic II.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Panoramic II is a trial designed to investigate the performance of air-to-air missiles. The trial, which began on 2 July and will continue until 13 July, involves four Tornado F3, one Phantom, one Victor, one VC10, one Nimrod and one Canberra aircraft. All the aircraft are operating from RAF Leuchars, with the exception of the Nimrod, which is operating from RAF Kinloss.

Missile firings are taking place within a special airspace reservation area north-west of Saxa Vord. The Nimrod carries out a search for shipping and ensures that the area is clear before any firing takes place. A coastal navigation warning has been issued by the Royal Navy hydrographer. All civilian air traffic routes through the area have been closed for the duration of the trial.

Airborne Anti-armour weapon

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the advanced airborne anti-armour weapon SR(A)1238.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have decided not to proceed with the advanced airborne anti-armour weapon to SR(A) 1238 at this stage; further decisions will not be made until the way forward from the "Options for Change" exercise is clear. In the light of altered circumstances, we may wish to consider designs to less stringent criteria than had previously been required.

ENVIRONMENT

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the incidence and levels of (a) tetrachloroethylene, (b) trichloroethylene and (c) polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in drinking water; if the levels detected have in any case exceeded World Health Organisation guidelines; and if he will discuss with his European Community counterparts the establishment of maximum advisable concentrations in respect of each of these chemicals.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 set standards for tetrachloroethylene and trichloroethylene of 10 and 30 microgram/litre respectively as annual averages. These are based on tentative guideline values promulgated by the World Health Organisation. No specific standards for tetrachloroethylene and trichloroethylene are laid down in the EC drinking water directive.

Comprehensive information about the current incidence and levels of tetrachloroethylene and trichloroethylene in drinking water is not, at present, held centrally. The drinking water inspectorate is aware of a few public supplies which exceed the standards for these substances. The water companies concerned have either taken the supplies out of service or have given undertakings under section 20 of the Water Act 1989 to introduce treatment by 1994 in order to reduce the levels. Because of the safety margins allowed, medical advice is that public health is not endangered by those supplies which are continuing in use.

The Water Quality Regulations incorporate the standard of 0·2 microgram/litre for six specified polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH) laid down in the EC directive. They also set a national standard, based on the WHO guideline value, of 0·01 microgram/litre as an annual average for benzpyrene, an individual PAH.

At the request of my Department and the Welsh Office water undertakers carried out a comprehensive survey of their supplies in early 1989 to establish levels of PAH in drinking water. Of approximately 6,250 samples, 44—0·7 per cent.—contained concentrations in excess of standards mentioned above. These results indicate that there is not a general problem with PAH in drinking water. Where a high concentration of PAH is confirmed water companies carry out remedial programmes comprising relining or replacing water mains or flushing.

I see no need at present for any additional EC standards for these substances.

River and Harbour Pollution

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest available figure for the average fine imposed by magistrates courts in the south-west of England for river and harbour pollution.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Information collected by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department shows that, for cases brought under sections 31 or 32 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 as the principal offence, the average fine imposed by magistrates courts in 1988 for water pollution offences in the south-west was £570.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the salary, expenses and other emoluments paid annually to the chairman of the London residuary body, and the estimated figures for 1991, following the reappointment announced on 26 June for the period to March 1993.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The chairman's current annual emoluments—salary and pension scheme contributions—are £63,530 and will rise to £64,165 from 1 January 1991. The total expenses paid to the chairman and LRB board members in 1988-89, the latest year for which information is available, was £6,430.

Ventilation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that an adequate number of fans are made available to hon. Members and staff working in those parts of the Palace where ventilation systems have been closed down for repair during the summer recess.

Mr. Chope: The Parliamentary Works Office has made arrangements for engineers control on extension 4747 to issue fans on request to those who need them.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Governments of Iceland, Denmark, Norway and the Faroes regarding proposals to increase the volume of reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at Dounreay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the Environmental Ministers of Iceland, Denmark, Norway and the Faroe Islands about reprocessing and radioactive waste disposal at Dounreay. He has also discussed this subject with the Danish Environment Minister.

Big Ben (Chime)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the hour chime of Big Ben to be restored.

Mr. Chope: I hope early in August. The work to forge the new hammer arm has taken longer than expected.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the letter to him from Councillor Stewart Foster, of Leicester city council, dated 18 June, concerning student nurses and the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have written to Councillor Foster today.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the address and telephone number of each of the bodies responsible for hearing community charge appeals against decisions of charging authorities in London.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 July 1990]: I have today placed copies of the information requested in the Library.

Quarrying, Marnhull

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to refuse any application for quarrying in Marnhull, Sturminster Newton, Dorset.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 4 July 1990]: No. I cannot give such a general policy assurance. Any application coming before the Secretary of State for determination is considered on its merits.

WALES

MIND

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grant he has given to MIND in Wales for 1990-91; on what date MIND was notified of this grant; what was the grant in preceding years; and whether there is any change in the conditions for 1990-91 under which grant payment is offered.

Mr. Grist: Wales MIND applied on 4 June 1990 for a grant under section 64 of the Health Service and Public Health Act 1968. A decision will be notified shortly. Previous years' section 64 funding was as follows:

1987-88	59,550
1988-89	57,863
1989-90	57,166

In addition, £96,500 has been allocated to Wales MIND in the current year in respect of developments to facilitate implementation of the Welsh Office mental illness strategy on an all-Wales basis.

The only change in condition in 1990-91, common to all section 64 funding, is the introduction of a requirement that grant-aid made in respect of a capital asset has to be repaid if the asset is disposed of.

Registered Child Minders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered child minders there are in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave on 22 May 1990, at column 123.

NHS and Community Care Act

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he intends to circulate to people in Wales regarding the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act; and what budget he has allocated for this purpose.

Mr. Grist: The booklet for circulation in Wales will explain the main changes taking place in the national health service and reflect the particular circumstances in the Principality. It is being prepared in a bilingual version. We shall provide a budget sufficient for distribution of the booklet to all households throughout Wales.

General Practitioners (Prescribing)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines his Department has issued in the past 10 years in respect of (a) over-prescribing and (b) under-prescribing by general practitioners; and if he will place in the Library a copy of all such guidelines currently in force.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Nurseries and Playgroups

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of (a) registered pre-school nurseries and (b) registered playgroups for each academic year from 1970-71 to 1988-89 in (i) Wales as a whole and (ii) each county.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The available information on the numbers of registered pre-school nurseries and registered playgroups is shown in the table. Data prior to 1975 are not readily available.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on core community care services in Wales for each year since 1979; and how much and what percentage of the total was in respect of (a) community health, (b) his departmenal and (c) local authority expenditure.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The information is not available in precisely the form requested.

Expenditure by district health authorities in Wales on community health services[1] is shown at Table 1:

Table 1

	Expenditure £ million
[2]1981-82	44·1
1982-83	48·5
1983-84	51·5
1984-85	56·4
1985-86	61·5
1986-87	67·7
1987-88	84·7
1988-89	99·6

[1]Community health service costs consist of preventative health services (such as fluoridation, vaccination and immunisation, health education and health visiting), school medical and dental services, family planning services and primary district nursing services. Figures are extracted from "Key Statistical Indicators for National Health Service Management in Wales" published annually.

[2]Data for earlier years on a comparable basis are not available except at disproportionate costs.

Expenditure by local authorities in Wales on residential and domiciliary care is as follows:

Table 2

Local authorities	Expenditure £ million
1979-80	58·9
1980-81	70·5
1981-82	79·8
1982-83	87·8
1983-84	97·5
1984-85	103·7
1985-86	109·9
1986-87	117·7
1987-88	133·7
1988-89	150·0

The expenditure shown in tables 1 and 2 was supplemented each year by direct Welsh Office funding under a number of arrangements, but details of all these amounts are not available except at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

European Court of Justice

Q51. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister, what recent discussions she has had with the heads of other European Community Governments concerning the powers of the European Court of Justice; and if she will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has not yet had any formal discussions on this issue with the heads of other European Community Governments.

Environmental Co-operation

Q169. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the United Kingdom's contribution to international co-operation on environmental issues.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

The Government work to protect the global environment through a wide range of international organisations including the European Community, the United Nations and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. We are playing an active part in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and we have led the call for an international convention on climate change. On 25 May this year my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that provided others are prepared to take their full share, Britain is prepared to set itself the very demanding target of returning carbon dioxide emissions to their current levels by 2005.

Last week the Government hosted on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme the second meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol which agreed important new measures to protect the ozone layer and to enable developing countries to play their part. It demonstrated the international co-operation we need to safeguard the global environment. We will continue to give support to UNEP's valuable work in this and other areas. We will also play a full and constructive role in preparations for the United Nations conference on environment and development which will be held in Brazil in 1992.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 July.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is hosting the NATO summit meeting. This evening she will be attending a dinner for NATO given by Her Majesty the Queen.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department is supporting the designation of a European Year of Elderly People; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We intend to play a full part in the discussions on this and on other aspects of the Commission's communication. We shall do so on the basis that elderly people are as diverse as any other group in society and most lead active, independent lives.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the European Commission communication on aging (COM(90)80 FINAL).

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Health on 3 July, Official Report, column 548.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the CSCE conference on the human dimension at Copenhagen; and what has been the reaction of Her Majesty's Government towards the San Marino proposals for the Council of Europe to become the parliamentary dimension of the CSCE process.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome the successful conclusion of the second meeting of the conference on the human dimension, held in Copenhagen from 5 to 29 June. The meeting agreed a concluding document which represents a historic advance in CSCE participants' human rights commitments. It enshrines specifically proposals which the United Kingdom, together with other western countries, put forward, laying down the conditions which should be fulfilled for elections to be considered free and fair, and enumerating the principles for a sound legal system. The document also extends existing CSCE undertakings on freedom of expression, of association and peaceful assembly, and of movement, and reaffirms the participating states' respect for the rights of minorities. The explicit and universal adherence to these principles which the Copenhagen concluding document represents will be of great benefit in sustaining the process of democratic reform in eastern Europe. Copies of the concluding document are being placed in the Library of the House.

The Copenhagen meeting also discussed participating states' implementation of their CSCE human rights commitments and reviewed the mechanism established at the 1989 Vienna CSCE follow-up meeting allowing participating states to monitor each others' human rights performance.

The United Kingdom and other CSCE member states will be considering the ways and means in which the Council of Europe can contribute to the human dimension of the CSCE process.

Romanian Children (Adoption)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on any action taken by the Romanian Government or any other agencies in that country to place a blockade or other hinderance upon the adoption of Romanian children by suitably qualified couples in the United Kingdom, including couples which have lodged suitable adoption papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that final approval of adoption from overseas has been temporarily halted until the new Romanian Parliament decides which authority is to be responsible for the final approval. This decision should be taken soon. If necessary, we shall ask the Romanian authorities to allow adoptions for which Romanian and United Kingdom procedures have already been started, and which satisfy the stated requirements of both countries, to be completed and the child concerned released to the adoptive parents.

Burma

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Burmese Government about the recent elections in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The State Law and Order Restoration Council's abuse of the human and political rights of the Burmese people is well documented and has been repeatedly condemned. The surprisingly free and fair way in which the actual polling was conducted on 27 May was, therefore, all the more welcome. The official results now confirm that the main opposition party, the National League for Democracy, has won an overwhelming victory.

On 29 May, the British Government urged the SLORC to give effect to the clearly expressed wish of the people of Burma and called for the early release of the imprisoned leaders of the democratic parties and for the unconditional lifting of martial law.

On 6 June, the European Community called on the military regime to respect the results of the elections by handing over power to a Government chosen by the newly elected Parliament without delay and to release political leaders in detention immediately.

The British Government again call on the military regime to respond to the clearly expressed wish of the Burmese people for change. Along with our EC partners, we are ready to co-operate with the new Government, once it is formed. Meanwhile, existing policy will continue until the regime takes concrete steps to end the military rule which the Burmese people have so decisively rejected by initiating a constructive dialogue with opposition leaders at an early date.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Civil Research and Development

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of Britain's gross domestic product is devoted to civil research and development; and what information he has as to comparable figures for France and West Germany.

Mr. Jackson: A report published last year by the OECD showed that in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available 1·8 per cent. of the United Kingdom's GDP was attributable to estimated gross domestic expenditure on civil research and development. The corresponding figures for France and West Germany were 1·8 and 2·6 per cent. respectively.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to take further action to encourage schools to seek grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: The 1988 Act gives parents and governors the opportunity to seek grant-maintained status for their school. There has been a rapid expansion in the number of grant-maintained schools and a lot of interest among parents and governors. I anticipate that there will be many more applications for GM status.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to make all local education authority secondary schools grant maintained.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for parents and governors to decide whether to seek grant-maintained status for their school. My right hon. Friend will consider every application on its merits.

Financial Support, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding financial suppport for education in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters on this issue and I recently received a deputation from Bradford which included the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

Bradford has done well out of the change from the grant-related expenditure assessment for education to the standard spending assessment—the education component of its SSA is £179 million and is substantially higher than the comparable GRE figure for 1989-90. This assessment should mean that the authority has a solid funding base for its education service in 1990-91.

Bradford's annual capital guideline for 1990-91 was over £9 million. LEAs have been invited to submit their education capital expenditure plans for 1991-92 by 15 September. Bradford's needs will be considered sympathetically against an objective set of criteria, as will the needs of all other LEAs.

School Psychological Service

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to reduce the waiting lists for the school psychological service for pupils in Preston.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The operation of the school psychological service is a matter for local education authorities. I understand that the Lancashire LEA has recently reorganised the service and is in the course of making a number of additional appointments. The authority is currently reviewing the process by which pupils are referred to the service.

Student Grants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in respect of the academic years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 the number of grants made available for students to study for vocational qualifications at colleges in Scotland in respect of each course at each college.

Mr. Jackson: Information about the number of grants made available by local authorities in England and Wales for students to study for vocational qualifications at colleges in Scotland is not available. Information about the number of such grants made available by the Scottish Education Department is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made any assessment of the effect of community charge capping on the provision of further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has considered all the representations made to him by the capped authorities, including those about service delivery, together with all other information he considers relevant, and he is satisfied that the final caps he is proposing will permit them to maintain their services at a reasonable level.

Local Management of Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities which have had their schemes for local management of colleges turned down by his Department.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not turned down any schemes for the local management of colleges, though a number have been approved with modifications or conditions. The schemes for Barnet, Hereford and Worcester and Staffordshire have yet to be approved, though Hereford and Worcester and Staffordshire are operating schemes in advance of statutory approval.

Management Information Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the allocation of education support grant funding to local education authorities in England and Wales for the development of management information systems in further education colleges.

Mr. Jackson: Between 1985-86 and 1989-90 education support grant allocations to local education authorities in England for the development of computerised management information systems in further education colleges supported £12·5 million expenditure. Commitments for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 support a further £21 million.

Allocation of education support grant funding for local education authorities in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give details of his Department's role on the question of quality assurance relating to management information systems development.

Mr. Jackson: With local education authorities, the Department is responsible for monitoring and evaluating the use of education support grants to support expenditure on computerised management information systems (CMIS) in further education colleges. This is achieved by means of annual progress reports from LEAs, national surveys of developments in colleges, the observations of Her Majesty's inspectorate and studies by consultants. The Department is also in contact with the major suppliers of CMIS software to discuss their products.

School Reorganisation

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what guidance he gives to local education authorities as to under what sections of and schedules to the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 they should conduct the selection procedure for the headships of schools which have been part of a major schools reorganisation programme;

(2) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself under the terms of section 68 of the Education Act 1944 that Leeds education authority is acting reasonably in the way it has decided to conduct the appointment of headships as part of the city's reorganisation of schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department's Circular 7/87 provides general guidance on the provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 relating to the appointment of head teachers. Where a local education authority is reorganising its schools by closing two or more of them and opening new schools in their place paragraph 23 of schedule 2 to the 1986 Act allows the local education authority, in consultation with the temporary governing bodies of the new schools, to appoint one of the head teachers of the schools which are closing to be the first head teacher for the new school, provided that a substantial number of the pupils at the discontinued schools, taken together, are expected to transfer to the new school. In these circumstances the authority is empowered to make the appointment in this manner as an alternative to the procedures usually applying to the appointment of head teachers. These are set out in section 37 of the Act and provide for the local education authority to advertise the post and hold a selection panel comprising persons appointed by the authority and no less a number of governors. It is my understanding that in carrying through its reorganisation of its schools the Leeds education authority has elected to adopt the paragraph 23(2) procedures.

Bursaries

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce the postgraduate bursary rates payable in the academic year 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor: I propose to set the main maintenance rates for bursaries offered under my Department's postgraduate awards scheme in the academic year 1990-91 as follows:

London	2,775
Elsewhere	2,195
Parental home	1,655

These represent increases above the current year's rates broadly in line with those for corresponding mandatory undergraduate awards. For the studentships in librarianship and information science administered by my Department, the rates for 1990-91 will be the same as those under the state studentship scheme run by the British Academy, which I announced in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on Wednesday 4 July, Official Report, column 575.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Office Searches (EC Inspectors)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which the private offices of the chairman of British Airways were searched by European Community inspectors; what authority the inspectors had for entering the premises and studying documents; and which court authorised these searches.

Mr. Ridley: I am not responsible for the activities of the European Commission.

Postal Monopolies

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he expects the publication by the European Commission of its proposed Green Paper on postal monopolies.

Mr. Forth: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 2 July, Official Report, column 426.

Copyright (Television Programmes)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place in the Library a copy of counsel's opinion asked for by him on the protection granted to television programme formats under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It would not be appropriate to place in the Library a copy of counsel's advice to me.

Cars

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the European Economic Community to make a decision on the arrangements for trade in cars, with particular reference to the import to the continent of British cars manufactured by Japanese-owned firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Following the informal discussion among Community Ministers on 19 June, the Commission is to have talks with the Japanese authorities, and is expected to report back to Ministers in July. I should like to see a firm agreement reached as soon as possible. However, I believe that the Government's position that cars manufactured in the EC by Japanese-owned companies should continue to enjoy unlimited free circulation throughout the Community is unassailable and has now been accepted by other member states.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy on treating cars produced in the United Kingdom by Japanese-owned firms in the same way as other British-produced cars of the European Commission's recent declaration concerning imports of Japanese motor vehicles.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Formal agreement has still to be reached among member states and with Japan on the future treatment of cars produced by Japanese-owned companies. I am insisting and I remain confident that all cars produced in Britain, including by Japanese-owned companies, will continue to enjoy unlimited free circulation throughout the Community after 1992.

Import and Export Licences

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what form information on the granting of licences under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 is kept by his Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Information relating to import and export licences is kept in paper form and is subject to the Official Secrets Act. Since January 1990 certain export licence information has been preserved on microfilm. Some information pertaining to import licensing is held on computer.

Biological Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which section of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 is concerned with biological weapons.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Biological weapons are controlled by entry ML7 of group 1 of part 2 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989, as amended by the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No. 2) Order 1990.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, following the conversion in 1991 of the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to a Government company, it will be necessary for the new company to establish at least one year's commercial accounts before its full privatisation.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: No.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in identifying an eventual buyer, or buyers, for the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Decisions have not yet been taken about the proposed method of sale of the insurance services group. No decisions have been taken about possible buyers.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what method will be used to recruit a chief executive for the privatised insurance group of the ECGD.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: This will be a matter for the new owners of the privatised business.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with the European Commission regarding the prospective bidders for the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and competition policy.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Decisions have not yet been taken about the proposed method of sale of the insurance services group and no decisions have been taken about possible purchasers. The Government will, however, take into account the views of the European Commission in reaching decisions.

TRANSPORT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to encourage regional airports to recognise the importance of a quality welcoming system for visitors.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are keen to see the maximum use of airports in all parts of the country but the facilities referred to by the hon. Member are a matter for the commercial judgment of individual airport managements.

Private Aircraft

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received in favour of introducing compulory third party liability insurance for private pilots.

Mr. McLoughlin: Over the past year my Department has received five communications supporting the introduction of compulsory third party insurance for civil aviation, including private aircraft.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total value of damage sustained by third parties as a result of accidents involving private aircraft for each of the last three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce compulsory third party liability insurance for private pilots.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has received, in response to a request to the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, initial advice from the authority on the issues which would have to be dealt with by a compulsory scheme, for which legislation would be needed, and he is now considering that advice.

Taxi Licences

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the introduction of the single European Act will affect the number of taxi licences available to United Kingdom citizens (a) in respect of Hackney cabs and (b) in respect of private cabs.

Mr. Freeman: The European Commission has not yet formulated definite proposals relating to Hackney carriage and private hire vehicle licensing. Unless or until such time as the EC issues a directive, the domestic licensing laws of each member state will apply to applicants for licences.

At present in Scotland, England—outside London—and Wales local authorities may not refuse a hackney carriage licence unless they are satisfied that there is no significant unmet demand for hackney carriage services in the area, but no numerical controls are allowed on private hire vehicles. In London there are no numerical controls on hackney carriage licences; private hire vehicles—minicabs—are not licensed. In Northern Ireland no numerical controls are allowed on either hackney carriages or private hire vehicles.

Roads, Folkestone and Southampton

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects a continuous dual carriageway road to be operational between Folkestone and Southampton.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has no proposals for a continuous dual carriageway road between Folkestone and Southampton but with schemes completed or under construction and the further schemes announced in the Roads Report "Trunk Roads, England Into the 1990s", the M27—A27—A259 south coast trunk route is being progressively improved. It will be dual carriageway standard between Southampton and Polegate in East Sussex, and a mixture of dual and single carriageway between Polegate and Folkestone, depending on the variation in forecast traffic flows along the route.

M20, Ashford

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what design work is taking place on the Lacton interchange on the M20 in Ashford to improve the junction's traffic flow and capacity.

Mr. Atkins: Kent county council, as highway authority for the junction roundabout, is undertaking preliminary design of possible options to improve the capacity and traffic flow at M20 junction 10. Subject to my Department being satisfied about the effects to traffic on the motorway and its connecting roads, the choice of any scheme to be promoted rests with the county council.

Russell Scott School (Land Sale)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete the sale of land at the side of the M67 and the former Russell Scott school in Denton; and when negotiations for sale started.

Mr. Atkins: Negotiations will open shortly. It is too soon to say when a sale might be completed.

Passenger Coaches (Seat Belts)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his policy on the fitting and wearing of seat belts in passenger coaches.

Mr. Atkins: I am strongly in favour of the fitting of good quality seat belts on all seats in coaches and of the belts being worn wherever provided. I am very glad that the Bus and Coach Council is now recommending that all new coaches should be fitted with seat belts. We are discussing further with them the fitting of belts on existing coaches.

We are continuing to press for early agreement in the European Community to the mandatory fitment of seat belts on all seats in new coaches.

Aviation

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 2 July, Official Report, columns 428-29, if he will make a statement outlining the nature and extent of the changes which will result from the commitment to establish a single market in aviation by the end of 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The agreement reached by EC Transport Ministers on 18 June set the Community firmly on course to complete a single market in aviation by the end of 1992. As well as setting out a second stage of EC liberalisation, this agreement incorporates into EC law the earlier Ministerial commitment to the key ingredients of a single market: the abolition of bilateral capacity sharing and the introduction of the double disapproval system for the setting of fares by 1 January 1993, and the adoption of uniform licensing criteria by 1 July 1992. The United Kingdom has welcomed these commitments and will continue to take a leading role in negotiations on the completion of a liberal EC market in air transport.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to establish why the French Government blocked the proposal last month by British Midland Airways for a cheaper business fare from London to Paris; and if he will initiate proceedings against the French Government.

Mr. McLoughlin: The French Government initially maintained that the three-day business return fare of £149 proposed by British Midland for its London-Paris service was not reasonably related to the costs of the airline.

Under the EC arrangements for fare approval, which provide criteria for the assessment of fares proposals and for consultations in cases of disagreement, the Department of Transport met the French authorities on 2 May in Paris.

At these consultations the French agreed to accept a fare structure on British Midland's Heathrow-Paris service which would include a new three-day business return of £165. This is higher than first proposed, but is still substantially lower than existing business class return fares on the route of around £240. I understand that British Midland was content with the result.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 2 July, Official Report, columns 428-29, if he will make a statement explaining the nature and extent of the greater freedom being made available to commercial airlines in consequence of the Transport Ministers Council of 18 June.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am particularly pleased that the EC Transport Council adopted a second package of measures which seals the commitment to the liberalisation of air transport in the European Community by the end of 1992, and provides for arrangements which will function in the interim.

The new package builds on the first set of measures agreed in 1987. It contains arrangements for setting fares which introduce an element of double disapproval and simplify the existing zonal system. It further relaxes the limits on capacity sharing by progressively increasing the maximum share of capacity enjoyed by the airlines of any one state to 75 per cent. The package also eases access to the market by creating third and fourth freedom traffic rights between virtually all Community airports, relaxing restrictions on fifth freedom services within the Community, and progressively lowering the thresholds for multiple designation. The Council accepted the need to deal quickly with predatory practices; and agreed principles against which air cargo services should be further liberalised by March 1991. Ministers also reached agreement on a mandate for the opening of aviation negotiations for EFTA.

Road Defects

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's current estimate of the cost of making good all defects in local authority adopted roads (a) in total and (b) by local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Transport does not have the detailed condition data that would be necessary to estimate the cost of rectifying all defects in roads that local authorities are responsible for maintaining. Central Government's contribution to local authority road maintenance is made as part of the annual revenue support grant settlement, and to structural maintenance of local authority bridges through the transport supplementary grant settlement. Local authorities are consulted through their representative bodies as part of the process of deciding on these levels of funding.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority regarding the transportation of spent fuel rods of highly enriched uranium to the United Kingdom from research reactors in Spain, the Netherlands and West Germany under contracts proposed between the authority and the relevant body in each country.

Mr. Atkins: While we are aware that such contracts are being sought, to date no application relating specifically to the transport of this material has been received. All shipments of spent fuel are required to be carried in containers which have been approved and certified by my Department as complying fully with stringent national and international transport safety regulations.

Lockerbie Disaster

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will meet the costs of legal representation for the relatives of victims of the Lockerbie disaster at the forthcoming Scottish fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes. I am writing to the Secretary of the Lockerbie air disaster group of solicitors' firms to say that my Department will meet the reasonable costs incurred on behalf of the British relatives of the victims of the Lockerbie disaster by one team of legal representatives in carrying out the necessary work in preparing for and attending the inquiry.

This offer of financial assistance reflects the exceptional nature of the disaster, a crime perpetrated by international terrorists which resulted in the destruction of a large passenger aircraft in British air space. There are therefore very special reasons for departing from the practice that relatives' costs are not met in fatal accident inquiries or inquests.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Personal Pension Plans

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 28 June, Official Report, column 350, he will now include the Consumers Association in those interested bodies who have been asked for their views on the existing regulations on the disclosure of information to members of occupational and personal pension schemes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Consumers Association has now been asked whether it wishes to make any comments.

Pensioners (Investment Income)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of investment income, excluding savings, of pensioners with a weekly pension income of (a) less than £50, (b) £50 to £100, (c) £100 to £200, (d) £200 to £500 and (e) over £500; and if he will indicate the number of pensioners in each group.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information from the 1987 family expenditure survey is set out in the table. The figures provided assume weekly pension income to consist of national insurance state retirement pension and supplementary benefit. There are no cases of people with this income in the levels of the top two bands specified in the question.

Retirement pension supplementary benefit[1]	Percentage of pensioners in each group	Average savings/ investment income per week[2]
less than £50	65	13·85
50 to 99·99	35	33·60
100 to 199·99	less than 1	[3]58·05
200 to 499·99	0	nil
500 and over	0	nil

[1] Pounds per week at 1987 prices
[2] It is not possible to separately identify savings income from investment income except at disproportionate cost. Savings are generally accepted to be bank and building society deposits whereas investment income includes (for example) premiums on stocks/shares.
[3] Only two cases were found within this group which do not represent an adequate sample size.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to implement the recommendation in commissioners' decision CIS/18/88, and amend the income support regulations to provide in the case of a pensioner moving from hospital to residential care, that income support commences immediately on discharge from hospital instead of on the following retirement pension pay day.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to implement the suggestion of the appeal tribunal mentioned in CIS/18/88. For those over pension age, income support is paid in advance from the first pay day on or after the date of claim. Similar arrangements apply when income support is reduced or ceases, so equity is preserved.

Students

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to lay regulations concerning students' entitlement to benefits and to publish the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the draft regulations.

Mr. Scott: Draft regulations on students' entitlement to benefits were submitted to the Social Security Advisory Committee on 19 February. The committee subsequently reported its conclusions at the end of April. However, amendments to the Social Security Bill have since been carried in the House of Lords which would affect the Government's proposals. The Government will be asking the House to disagree with their Lordships' amendments when these are considered by the House of Commons.

The Social Security Advisory Committee report will be formally published and presented to Parliament with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's formal response when the main set of regulations is laid in due course. However, in order better to inform the House in advance of their consideration of the Lords amendments, we have today made special arrangements to place in the Library proof copies of the report on the draft regulations together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's initial comments on that report.

Subject to further consideration of the Social Security Bill the Government intend to make two important changes to the draft regulations submitted to the Social Security Advisory Committee. First, the Government propose to introduce in all the income-related benefits a £10 weekly disregard on income received from top-up loans so long as the loan recipient continues as a student. Secondly, we intend to consult the local authority associations on a separate regulation which will extend the proposed definition of a disabled student to include students who are eligible for an award under the local education authorities disabled students allowance scheme by reason of deafness. Subject to the views of the local authority associations, we intend to lay this regulation as soon as possible after the main set of regulations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rathlin Island Trust

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has given any financial support to the Rathlin Island Trust; what representations he has received concerning the trust; and on what basis others are represented on the trust.

Mr. Needham: Financial support has been provided to the Rathlin Island Trust from a number of Government sources, as follows:

i. The Department of the Environment has paid £8,000 in historic building grant towards the repair and maintenance of the manor house.

ii. The Training and Employment Agency of the Department of Economic Development has paid £214,800 over the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 and are prepared to pay £64,000 in 1990-91 for ACE projects which include the refurbishment of the manor house, conversion of the tithe barn to create a dive centre and an environmental clean-up on the Island.

iii. An offer of grant of almost £54,000 towards the cost of developing an activity centre at the manor house complex has been made by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, acting as agent for the International Fund for Ireland, under the tourism amenities scheme.

iv. The trust has also applied to the Department of Economic Development for grant aid from the European regional development fund under the tourism operational programme. The application which relates to other proposed works associated with the manor house development is at present under consideration.

In recent years several representations from the Rathlin Island Trust and others have been received by Ministers about provision of services on Rathlin island; no representations about the trust have been received. I am not aware of the way in which membership of the trust is gained.

Protection of Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those areas of special protection for birds as well as those Ramsar sites and areas with dual designation for the protection of birds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lough Neagh and Lough Beg is a Ramsar site. We are working on further special protection.

Radioactivity

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many areas of what size in Northern Ireland are still under food protection emergency prohibitions as a consequence of the Chernobyl incident; how many breeding sheep are still grazing on each such area; by how much radioactivity has decreased in each such area by reference to (a) sheepmeat, (b) vegetation and (c) soil/peat; and when he now expects all restrictions on sheep to be removed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Testing of marketable lamb at slaughterhouses throughout Northern Ireland continues to show that lamb is safe. Restrictions on movement and slaughter of sheep in Northern Ireland apply in the following areas:

	Glenshane County Londonderry	Belraugh County Londonderry	Glenwherry County Antrim
Acreage	10,744	2,247	8,620
Estimated number of breeding sheep	11,300	3,000	7,000

Monitoring of radioactivity levels in survey flocks has demonstrated no significant fall in radioactivity levels.

The available research data from sampling of vegetation and soil/peat do not allow firm conclusions to be reached.

It is not possible to predict how long restrictions will need to stay in force. They will be lifted as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the safety of the food chain.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the directors of the Inner City Trust in Londonderry.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The information requested is held by the Registrar of Friendly Societies at 64 Chichester street, Belfast and the registrar is required to make it available to the public, during office hours on payment of a fee.

Emergency Provision Legislation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were detained under Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts in 1989; and how many of these persons were subsequently charged with (a) scheduled offences, (b) non-scheduled offences.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: Eighty seven people were arrested under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 and six were subsequently charged with scheduled offences.

Female Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average length of custodial sentence of female prisoners in Northern Ireland in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: Three hundred and twenty four days, excluding those committed to prison on default of payment of a fine.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average period of custodial remand for female custodial remand prisoners in Northern Ireland in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The average length of time spent on custodial remand by female prisoners who were tried in 1989 and were in custody at the time of trial was 28 days.

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answers of 11 June, Official Report, column 30 and 21 May, Official Report, column 30, about energy consumption, what is the square footage of office space to which these figures relate.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 June 1990]: The total area of the Government office estate in Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Office in London in 1988-89 was just over 2·9 million sq. ft.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, further to his reply of 11 June, Official Report, column 54, concerning the progress of job interview guarantee, he will give the latest figures for the participation of unemployed people for each of the various options available under job interview guarantee, and for the numbers of participants who have been placed in jobs, by each area.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Training

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of Government spending in the last financial year was devoted to training in each Group of Seven and European Community country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures showing public expenditure on labour market programmes as a percentage of GDP and which separately identify labour market training for adults and young people, are published in "Labour Market Policies for the 1990s"—OECD 1990. This OECD publication also draws attention to the methodological difficulties in attempting to arrive at internationally comparable data, the principal one stemming from the different institutional arrangements in individual countries, and it advises caution in interpreting the figures.

Tourism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects his Department's review on tourism to be completed; and if he will consider publishing its full contents.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 July 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley, (Mr. Bevan) on 28 November 1989, Official Report, column 212. There are no plans to publish the consultant's report that informed the review.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the London tourist board on his Department's review of tourism.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 July 1990]: None.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received over modifications to the Development of Tourism Act 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 July 1990]: I have received no such representations. Within the framework of the Act, the recent review of tourism has concentrated on refocusing the Government's support for tourism.

ENERGY

Renewable Energy Projects

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will classify the number of renewable energy projects submitted to his Department for approval in the first tranche of renewable energy, according to which renewable technology and the total electrical capacity proposed for each category of renewables.

Mr. Peter Morrison: By the beginning of 1990 sponsors of some 350 projects, totalling around 2 GW of nominal capacity, had informed the precursors to the public electricity suppliers of their interest in contracting for renewables within the initial non-fossil fuel obligation.

This total included a certain amount of double-counting, since some projects were regarded by their sponsors as alternatives while others were competing projects from different sponsors. Other projects have not, in the event, been ready to contract within the initial order. Subject to those qualifications, the main categories of projects submitted were: landfill gas (80 projects, 110 MW nominal); waste incineration (60 projects, 800 MW nominal); and wind (130 projects, 500 MW nominal). Other projects submitted were for hydro, biogas, and tidal schemes.

My right hon. Friend plans to make an order setting the initial level of the non-fossil fuel obligation in respect of renewables-sourced electricity generation in the late summer. Projects that are not ready to contract under that order will have the opportunity to do so under subsequent orders.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update the information given in his answer of 3 November 1989, Official Report, column 374, to the hon. Member for Gordon, (Mr. Bruce) to give the annual load factor achieved by (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board, and (b) the South of Scotland electricity board nuclear power stations for each month from April 1989 to March 1990, inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 11 June 1990, Official Report, column 7.

Sizewell B

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the decision of Nuclear Electric to charge £199 million on costs associated with Sizewell B to revenue will have on the level of the non-fossil fuel levy.

Mr. Wakeham: None. The size of the levy depends largely on the price charged by Nuclear Electric in its contract with the 12 regional electricity companies. This is not affected by changes in Nuclear Electric's accounting policies.

HEALTH

Kidney Disease

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of renal units in England and Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, there are currently 84 renal and kidney transplant units in England and Wales.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list all the meetings involving his Department and Porton International Ltd., and the attendance at each;

(2) if he will list the dates and attendance list of meetings between the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research and Porton International Ltd.

Mr. Dorrell: A list of the liaison meetings between officers of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research (CAMR), the public health laboratory service (PHLS) and Porton Products Ltd. (PP), a member of the Porton International group, is at table A; and a list of meetings of the CAMR committee, a sub-committee of the PHLS board including representatives from the Department of Health and PP, is at table B. In addition, there have been a number of other meetings between the Department and Porton International since 1983.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether a valuation has been carried out of the cancer cell culture collection at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Dorrell: No separate valuation has been carried out of the European collection of animal cell cultures.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the internal and external audit responsibilities are exercised at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research; and who has the responsibility for carrying out these audits.

Mr. Dorrell: The Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research is part of the public health laboratory service (PHLS). The external audit of the PHLS' annual accounts is the responsibility of the Comptroller and Auditor General. The advances and receipts of the PHLS also form part of the Department's appropriation account for the hospital and community health service, the family practitioner service and other services, England—class XIV, vote I. Internal audit arrangements are the responsibility of the PHLS board.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the agreement between his Department and Porton International Ltd involving the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research terminates.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no agreements between the Department and Porton International plc but there are various agreements between the public health laboratory service board and companies in the Porton International group concerning the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research. The agreement concerning distributorship and marketing of certain products may be terminated on or after 13 October 1998.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the date on which the agreement was made between his Department and Porton International Ltd. giving that company exclusive rights over the commercial work of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Dorrell: No such agreement exists. However, an agreement between the public health laboratory service board and Porton Products Ltd., a company in the Porton International group, concerning the distributorship and marketing of certain products of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research was signed on 22 March 1985.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the patents and exclusive licences held by the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Dorrell: The public health laboratory board holds some 57 current licences and patents on behalf of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research. Details are commercially sensitive.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any (a) internal review or (b) value-for-money evaluation of the agreement between his Department and Porton International Ltd. involving the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research has been carried out.

Mr. Dorrell: The operation of the agreements between companies in the Porton International group and the public health laboratory service board, involving the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, is kept under continuous review by the board.

Operations

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of coronary artery bypass grafting operations carried out in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available in each of the 14 health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The only figures on the number of coronary artery bypass grafts performed in 1979 are those for the United Kingdom collected annually by the Society of Cardiothoracic Surgeons. According to the society's returns, the number of grafts carried out in 1979 was 3,538; in 1987, the latest year for which comprehensive figures are available, the number was 12,820. This represents a rise of 262 per cent. over the period.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of operations for chronic renal failure carried out in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available in each of the 14 health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information from the United Kingdom transplant service the number of cadaveric kidney transplants carried out in the 14 regional health authorities in 1989 was as follows:

Region	Cadaveric kidney transplants
Northern	97
Yorkshire	104
Trent	131
East Anglian	60
North West Thames	93
North East Thames	165
South East and South West Thames	191
Wessex	90
Oxford	83
South Western	96
West Midlands	146
Mersey	61

Region	Cadaveric kidney transplants
North Western	138
Total	1,455

Regional figures are not available for 1979.

Information on any other operations for chronic renal failure is not collected centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has received from the chief medical officer about the possible spread of HIV and AIDS via dentistry practice; whether any consideration has been given to the use, on one occasion only, of disposable drills; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Current evidence supports the view that there is little risk of transmitting infectious diseases, including HIV and AIDS, during dental treatment provided that recommended cross-infection control procedures are practised during the treatment of all patients. The chief dental officer of the Department of Health issued advice, explaining that infection with HIV was less easily transmitted than the hepatitis B virus and reminded practitioners of the recommendations of the expert group on hepatitis in dentistry—1979 HMSO—on the need for proper precautions. The chief dental officer reiterated his advice in May 1988. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Most dental drills—burs—are made of carbon steel, tungsten carbide or diamond and are not suitable for single use. They can most conveniently be sterilised by saturated steam in an autoclave.

Residential Homes

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to ensure that persons with criminal convictions do not run residential homes for the elderly and disabled.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he now intends to take to ensure that persons with a criminal record are not knowingly engaged in supervising and managing old persons' homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have decided, with the agreement of the Association of Chief Police Officers, to make arrangements for registration authorities to be able to obtain from the police details of any conviction recorded against a potential owner or manager of a residential care or nursing home. The arrangements will be similar to those already operating for the protection of children. They will cover both local authority and registered homes; and will apply to small homes once those homes are brought under regulatory control. Our aim is to bring the scheme into operation by 1 April 1991.

In addition, regulations will be made under the Registered Homes Act so that applicants for registration will be required by law to disclose any previous conviction. Where checks are made the individuals concerned will be notified if police records differ from the information supplied by them.

Free Milk

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his reply of 16 May, Official Report, column 417, of those 90,000 registered to receive free milk for children under five, how many are (a) child minders, (b) playgroups and (c) day nurseries.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available in the format requested.

Ward Closures, Camberwell

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposed closures of wards and beds by Camberwell health authority require his consent.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the terms of the Community Health Council Regulations 1985 a health authority proposing substantial development or variation in the health service is required to consult the community health council. If the community health council does not agree to proposals involvimg the closure of a health building it has the right to have the decision reviewed by the regional health authority. If the regional health authority supports the original decision, the matter can be referred to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. A health authority may implement a closure if it is satisfied that, in the interests of the health service, a decision has to be taken without allowing time for consultation. In any such case, however, the health authority is obliged to notify the community health council immediately of the decision taken and the reason why no consultation has taken place.

Health Service Funding

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what prohibitions have been placed on health authorities from using non-recurring finance to support patient-related activities in the 1990-91 financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have issued no such prohibitions to health authorities.

Pegina

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those members serving on the Committee on the Review of Medicines when the herbal medicine Pegina was reviewed who have expertise in the pharmacy of plant materials;

(2) what reasons the Committee on the Review of Medicines gave to him for their decision not to renew the licence for the sale of the herbal medicine Pegina.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The advice given by the Committee on the Review of Medicines is based upon corporate decisions for which the Committee as a whole takes responsibility, there was a member with expertise in the pharmacology of plant materials at the relevant time. We are unable to provide details about the review of the herbal product "Pegina" since section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 generally prohibits disclosure of information obtained by the licensing authority in pursuance of the Act.

Advertising

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which advertising agency has been advising in respect of health service publicity; and what brief it was given.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The two advertising agencies appointed following advice from the Government's Independent Advisory Committee on Advertising and currently used by the Department are TBWA Advertising Ltd and Yellowhammer.

TBWA Advertising Ltd advised on advertising campaigns to recruit nurses and to raise awareness of the need for blood and organ donors. Yellowhammer advises on the national campaign on the prevention of drug misuse.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget he has authorised to pay for the advertising, publication and distribution costs of the leaflets to be published by his Department to explain the Government's health service reforms; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cost of the production and distribution of "The NHS Reforms and You" booklet is estimated at £2·75 million; this works out at 10p per household, which is good value bearing in mind that the average family spends £35 per week on the NHS. This cost includes the distribution of the booklet to each household in England and nine ethnic minority language versions which are available on request. The languages are Bengali, Cantonese, Greek, Gujerati, Hindi, Polish, Punjabi, Turkish and Urdu.

There are no plans to advertise the booklet.

Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each new regional and district authority (a) the criteria for selection of the new membership, (b) details of the process used for selection, (c) the timetable used to implement this process and (d) the names of those who have accepted invitations to join the authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for appointing non-executive members of regional health authorities. Regional health authorities are responsible for appointing non-executive members of district health authorities. The chief officer and the chief finance officer are ex-officio executive members on all RHAs and DHAs. The remaining executive members are appointed by the chairman, the non-executive members and the chief officer.

The main criteria used in the selection process are the personal qualities and experience of the individuals concerned. All suggestions are welcomed and given consideration, from whatever source they originate. Regional health authorities are to be reconstituted from 26 July 1990 and district health authorities from 17 September 1990. No appointments have yet been made.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special hospital places are currently available in England and Wales; how many are occupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: There are some 1,750 places currently available at the three special hospitals—Broadmoor, Rampton and Ashworth—which cover England and Wales, of which 1,616 were occupied on 30 June 1990. A further 91 patients were away from hospital on trial leave. If the hon. Member requires more detailed information, I suggest that he writes to the chairman of the Special Hospitals Service Authority, Dr. David Edmond, who is responsible for the operational management of the special hospitals.

Secure Units

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regional secure unit places are currently available in England and Wales; how many are occupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In June 1989, the most recent date for which information is available, there were 660 places in regional secure units, including interim facilities, in England. Occupancy figures are not held centrally. Health service provision in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hypothermia

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many death certificates showed hypothermia as (a) the cause of death and (b) a contribution to the causes of death in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of deaths (a) with hypothermia as underlying cause of death and (b) with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, England and Wales, 1980-89

Year	Underlying cause[1]	Mention
1980	261	596
1981	276	685
1982	326	664
1983	221	538
1984	266	555
1985	440	827
1986	437	837
1987	269	559
1988	194	440
[2]1989	166	375

[1] Assigned to the International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 9th revision codes 778·3 and 991·6.

[2] Provisional.

Note:

For 1986 to 1989 neonatal deaths are included in the mentions but NOT in the underlying cause of death (neonatal deaths were not given an underlying cause of death from 1 January 1986 onwards).

Ice Cream

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce specific measures to eliminate the health hazards posed by the sale of ice cream; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The reported incidence of food poisoning does not show that ice cream poses particular health problems. Ice cream, like any other food that may pose a health risk, will be subject to the new provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990. Among other things, the Act provides for tighter controls when food is found to be unfit; for improved food law enforcement; for a system of registration of food traders and for the training of those who handle food commercially.

A recently publicised survey has produced some evidence of bacterial contamination of ice cream at the point of sale. In 1989 the Department collaborated with the Ice Cream Alliance, the Ice Cream Federation and the Institute of Environmental Health Officers to produce a code of practice to address this problem. The Department will bring the contents of the code to the attention of all ice cream vendors.

Births

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give a breakdown by district health authority of (a) the total number of births and (b) the total number of directly national health service employed midwives, excluding agency and student midwives, in each of the last six years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by district health authority of the average numbers of births per directly employed national health service midwife, excluding agency and student midwives, in each of the last six years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 21 June 1990]: Details for 1988, the latest year available, are shown in the table and have been placed in the Library. Providing the information by district health authority for six years would incur disproportionate cost.

Comparisons between different district health authorities need to be interpreted with caution, as they are not indicative of how well services are being provided. Health authorities will have regard to a number of different factors in setting staffing levels for their maternity services in addition to the expected number of births. These include the proportion of midwives to nurses, the size, number and layout of units and the pattern of community care, and the type of area.

SCOTLAND

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library current information on work commissioned and completed on ethnic minorities in Scotland, in the areas of employment, pay, population and unemployment;

(2) if he will list work commissioned and completed on ethnic minorities in Scotland, in the areas of employment, pay, population and unemployment.

Mr. Lang: A firm of independent consultants has conducted a major survey, funded by the Scottish Office, of the circumstances and experiences of Scotland's principal ethnic minority groups to identify whether and to what extent these differ from those of the majority white population. The report of the survey, which will be published later this year, will be used to inform policy and to enable monitoring of future changes in areas such as ethnicity, housing, employment, education, health and crime. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library in due course.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the location, area of planting and area of natural regeneration for each scheme that has been approved by the Forestry Commission under the native pinewood section of the woodland grant scheme since its introduction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows.

(hectares)

Location of scheme	Area of planting		Area of natural regeneration
	New planting	Restocking
Corrielair, Skye and Lochalsh	257·9	—	25·5

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total area in Scotland of all applications approved under the woodland grant scheme in each year since its introduction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table.

Period	Total area covered by approved applications (hectares)
21 June 1988-31 March 1989	19,761	[1]10,060
1 April 1989-31 March 1990	51,668	[1]18,827
1 April 1990-31 May 1990	9,350	[1]2,457

[1] Including proposed for new planting.

Applications covering a further 48,521 hectares, including 20,911 hectares of new planting, were awaiting approval at 31 May 1990.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total area and number of applications that the Forestry Commission has received for native Scots Pine since the availability of the broadleaved rate of grant for this species under the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission has received 35 applications for establishing native Scots pine under the woodland grant scheme since the introduction of the higher rates of grant in June 1988. These applications cover a total area of 6,582 hectares, including 2,942 hectares of new planting, 685 hectares of restocking and 122 hectares of natural regeneration.

Radioactive Caesium

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by county, and by year for the last five years, the number of reported cases of radioactive caesium in people.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Low concentrations of caesium radionuclides are detectable in people generally as a result of atmospheric fallout and releases from nuclear installations.

Following the Chernobyl accident, the Scottish universities research and reactor centre was commissioned on behalf of the Scottish Development Department to undertake a study of the levels of radiocaesium in representative members of the population of Scotland. The results of the first phase of this study have been published in a report—"DOE Report No. DOE/RW/88.103, Measurement of radioactivity from Chernobyl in population groups in Scotland"—which is available in the Library.

Scottish Airports

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans his Department has to encourage further investment in Scottish airports and flights, especially in relation to 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's policy of liberalising air services has led to the expansion of direct air services between Scotland and Europe and will continue to encourage operators to provide improved services where demand exists. BAA plc, which owns and operates Scotland's major international airports, has invested and is continuing to invest in facilities to meet the increase in demand. This substantial investment is being funded from the company's own resources.

The Scottish Office already provides support to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. in respect of its airports and to Loganair in respect of a lifeline air service to Tiree and Barra.

Care and Repair Projects

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) the identity of each care and repair project sponsored by his Department, (b) the total annual revenue budget for each year of such projects, (c) the amount of annual contributions to each of these projects made by (i) the Scottish Office and (ii) local authorities, (d) the identity of individuals or organisations appointed by his Department to evaluate the projects, (e) in each case the cost or estimated or tender costs of such evaluations, and (f) the basis on which the persons or organisations appointed to evaluate the projects were selected.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The care and repair initiative in Scotland is funded jointly by the Scottish Development Department and Shelter (Scotland) and is managed by Shelter (Scotland). Eight local schemes have been set up under the initiative. Their locations and starting dates are shown in the table:

Location	Starting date
Skye and Lochalsh	October 1987
Aberdeen	November 1987
Renfrew	November 1987
East Lothian	December 1987
Falkirk	January 1988
Orkney	February 1988
Glasgow	March 1988
Clydesdale	September 1988

On the basis of information supplied to the Scottish Development Department by Shelter (Scotland) the total annual revenue budgets for the projects and for the national co-ordinator's office were as follows:

1987-88	83,400
1988-89	201,000
1989-90	220,400

The Scottish Office's contribution to these budgets was as follows:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
Skye and Lochalsh	4,000	9,500	14,000
East Lothian	5,000	7,000	13,500
Aberdeen	3,500	8,500	11,500
Renfrew	4,500	8,000	9,000
Falkirk	3,500	8,500	10,000
Orkney	2,000	9,500	10,500
Glasgow	Nil	8,000	8,500
Clydesdale	Nil	4,000	8,500
National co-ordinator's office	15,000	27,500	24,000
Total	37,500	90,500	109,500

Details of the amounts contributed by individual local authorities are not held centrally by the Scottish Office.

The current evaluation of the initiative has been sponsored jointly by the Scottish Development Department and Scottish Homes. The work is being carried out by the consultants Price Waterhouse, and is being supervised by an evaluation steering group chaired by Professor Duncan MacLennan of the centre for housing research at Glasgow university. The steering group is made up of representatives from the Scottish Development Department, Scottish Homes, Shelter (Scotland), Age Concern Scotland, COSLA and the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations. The steering group members were appointed by the care and repair initiative national advisory committee. The evaluation is being carried out at a cost of £101,976, funded equally by the Scottish Development Department and Scottish Homes, and the contract was awarded to Price Waterhouse following competitive tendering.

Student Grants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in respect of the academic years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 the number of grants made available for postgraduate vocational courses in respect of each course at each college in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Lang: The information for academic years 1988-89 and 1989-90 is as follows:

	Scotland	England	Wales	Northern Ireland	Total
1988-89	2,382	273	14	4	2,673
1989-90	2,606	293	18	2	2,919

The corresponding information for academic year 1990-91 is not yet available.

School Meals

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation which lays down nutritional standards which the providers of school meals must attain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No. It is for education authorities, which are responsible for the administration of the school meal service, to decide the content and standard of school meals.

School Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many school boards have been set up for primary schools; what percentage this is of the total; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many school boards have been set up for secondary schools; what percentage this is of the total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
Number of boards established	1,869	413
Percentage of schools in each category with boards established	80	96

The establishment of 2,282 school boards in Scotland clearly demonstrates the strength of public support for the Government's initiative, and illustrates the success of the policy of extending parental involvement in school education.

Quarry Dust

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to district councils concerning dust control from quarries; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No advice has been given to district councils in respect of dust control from quarries. The responsibility for ensuring that dust control measures undertaken by the operator are adequate rests with Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent advice he has given to education authorities concerning alcohol abuse among children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Guidance on health education 10-14 is being prepared jointly by the Scottish Health Education Group (SHEG) and the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum (SCCC) and will be issued to schools shortly. SHEG is also preparing videos and teaching packs about alcohol for school health education programmes. Schools from each education authority will take part in a conference on young people and alcohol in November, organised by the Department and sponsored by the Scotch Whisky Association. In addition, the Department has drawn the attention of education authorities to curricular material produced by Strathclyde health and aids project in education (SHAPE) which covers alcohol abuse among other subjects.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage increase or decrease in notifiable offences recorded by the police in the first quarter of 1990 over the same quarter in 1989, identifying (a) violence against the person, (b) sexual offences, (c) burglary, (d) robbery, (e) theft, (f) handling stolen goods, (g) fraud and forgery, (h) criminal damage and (i) other offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table sets out the figures on the percentage changes in crime recorded by the police using the best available approximations in the Scottish classification of crimes and offences to the categories listed. The term "notifiable offences" is not used in Scotland. Quarterly figures are subject to considerable variation and for technical reasons are less accurate than annual figures. The Scottish Home and Health Department statistical bulletin "Recorded Crime in Scotland 1989", a copy of which is in the Library, provides annual figures for 1989 and earlier years.

The number of crimes recorded by the police in the first quarters of 1989 and 1990 and the percentage change. (Provisional estimates) Scotland

	1st quarter 1989	1st quarter 1990	Percentage change
Violence against the person	11,486	12,777	+8
Sexual offences	1,012	1,149	+14
Burglary	23,693	26,941	+14
Robbery	1,118	1,241	+11
Theft	54,995	61,356	+12
Handling stolen goods	423	529	+25
Fraud and forgery	5,782	5,755	0
Criminal damage	18,963	21,561	+14
Othr crimes	7,321	9,416	+29
All crimes and petty assault	124,793	140,395	+13

Notes:

The categories listed have been derived from the categories of the Scottish classification of crimes and offences as follows:

"Violence against the person": all non-sexual crimes of violence (group 1 of the standard classification) apart from robbery together with the crimes of reckless driving at common law, endangering railway passengers and endangering ship by breach of duty and the offence of petty assault. (Following changes to the definition of serious assault in January 1990 to improve comparability between police forces, it is necessary to include petty assault when comparisons are made over time).

"Sexual offences": all crimes of indecency (group 2 of the standard classification) apart from indecent exposure, brothel keeping and prostitution.

"Burglary": housebreaking.

"Theft": opening lockfast places and clandestine removal in addition to theft per se.

"Handling stolen goods": reset.

"Fraud and forgery": fraud, forgery and uttering, bankruptcy and currency offences.

"Criminal damage": fire raising, vandalism and other crimes of malicious and reckless conduct not involving violence against the person.

"Other offences": other crimes in groups 1 to 5 of the standard classification not included above.

Lothian and Borders Police

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now authorise the creation of another 50 police officers for the Lothian and Borders police force; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 4 July 1990, Official Report, column 614.

Religious Education

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consult school boards concerning religious education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A draft circular on religious education and observance was issued for consultation in March this year. Comments have been received by or on behalf of parents and a number of school boards. Responses are now being studied with a view to issuing a circular of guidance later in the year.

Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his policy on the employment by Scottish health boards of (a) permanent nursing staff and (b) agency based, temporary nursing staff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy on the employment of temporary, agency-based nursing staff in acute hospital wards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The employment of nursing staff is a matter for health boards to arrange. There are circumstances where it is more economic for boards to engage temporary agency-based nursing staff rather than to appoint permanent staff, but this must be decided in the light of local circumstances. The number of agency-based nursing staff is monitored regularly and at the last count it constituted half of 1 per cent. of the qualified nursing work force in Scotland.

Nursery Education

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Scotland are currently receiving nursery education in state schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The provisional number of pupils in education authority nursery schools and departments at September 1989 is 42,269.

The extent and nature of pre-school education is a matter for education authorities.

Environmental Programme

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the amount of grant aid being made available uner the special grants (environmental) programme in 1990-91 to voluntary bodies in Scotland working in the environmental field.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that the grant aid totalling £201,000 has been offered to the following voluntary bodies in the financial year 1990-91, to assist them in carrying out environmental conservation, improvement or educational work in Scotland:

	Amount of Grant £
Association for the Protection of Rural Scotland	2,500
Buchan Countryside Group	2,500
Central Scotland Countryside Trust	12,000
Centre for Human Ecology	4,000
Community Service Volunteers	7,500
Council for Scottish Archaeology	8,000
Environment Centre	6,000
Highland Forum	10,000
John Muir Trust	5,000
Locus	2,000
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds	11,000
Royal Zoological Society of Scotland	4,000
Scottish Community Woods Campaign	6,000
Scottish Conservation Projects	30,000
Scottish Ecological Consultants	4,000
Scottish Environmental Education Council	12,000
Scottish Field School of Archaeology	1,500
Scottish Fields Studies Association	8,000
Scottish Historic Buildings Trust	11,000
Scottish Rights of Way Society	2,500
Scottish Scenic Trust	2,000
Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link	10,000
Scottish Wildlife Trust	25,000
Strathclyde Building Preservation Trust	3,500
The Woodland Trust	5,000
Water of Leith Conservation Trust	6,000

A further £4,000 is being held in reserve to support suitable projects arising during the year.

The aims and criteria of the scheme have been reviewed following its first three years of operation and the experience of the scheme has been generally very good. I am satisfied that the grants now offered will greatly assist the voluntary organisations to increase their level of activity and do much useful work.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of loft insulation jobs completed so far in the current year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989 for each region and Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Figures for 1990 are not yet available. Information on the number of dwellings for which home insulation grants were given in the years 1987, 1988 and 1989 is given in the following table:

Home insulation grants paid, Scotland

	1987	1988	1989
Scotland	18,099	9674	3,907

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

North Sea (Dumping)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any information is available to his Department on the practical alternatives to the proposed dumping in the North sea of concentrated phenol contained in the waste products of paracetamol.

Mr. Gummer: The Ministry has required the company concerned to develop and implement a land-based means of disposal of its waste as soon as possible. A number of processes considered have proved impracticable, since the process chosen will need to treat all constituents of the waste, not just the phenol content (which is less than 0·8 per cent.). The company is now completing its evaluation of a possible process.

Tests on the waste show that under the conditions of disposal it causes no harm to the marine environment. Since no alternative means of disposal yet exists the licence for sea disposal has been renewed for a further period.

Tuberculosis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has plans to review his policy towards tuberculosis control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The tuberculosis control policy is kept under constant review to ensure its continued effectiveness.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badgers have been slaughtered due to tuberculosis on a county-by-county basis for each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Avon	103	88	37	110	129

East and West Sussex	4	—	—	—	—
Wiltshire	90	65	85	6	18
Total	1,119	782	711	778	727

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has and what research he has carried out into the possible transmission of bovine tuberculosis from cattle to cattle by nose contact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Largely because of the effectiveness of routine cattle testing, the transmission of bovine tuberculosis both within herds and between contiguous premises in Great Britain is rare. The possible origin of infection in all confirmed herd breakdowns is investigated. Movements on to farms and badger activity have been shown to be far more significant.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle have been slaughtered as a result of tuberculosis by county for each year since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: The following table sets out for counties in England and Wales for the years 1986-89 the numbers of cattle slaughtered under the Tuberculosis (England and Wales) Order 1984. Counties not shown have no record of any slaughter. Information in the form requested is not available for 1985.

Swine Swill Farms

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of unlicensed swine swill farms in operation; what steps he is taking to identify such premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to estimate whether and to what extent any swill farms remain unlicensed, but there is no evidence to indicate that this is a significant problem.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the animal welfare implications of the operating and feeding practices of swine swill farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Swine swill farms are visited quarterly by the state veterinary service under the requirements of the Waste Food Order 1973. Welfare is monitored at these visits as well as at any other visits. Any welfare problems found will be dealt with as necessary either by giving advice or by recommending prosecution action.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his estimates of the number of cattle infected with BSE, which have not shown symptoms of the disease, which have entered the food chain.

Mr. Gummer: No estimate has been made. The offals ban provides the necessary safeguards, should any cattle incubating the disease be slaughtered for human consumption.

Brucellosis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle have been slaughtered in England and Wales as a result of brucellosis since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: A total of 8,474 cattle are recorded as having been slaughtered under the Brucellosis (England and Wales) Order 1981, as amended, since 1 January 1985.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has given to (a) local authorities, and (b) British Rail about the use of pesticides to prevent them leaching into water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of Environment has commissioned a study of non-agricultural uses of herbicides and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides is reviewing as a priority those herbicides found most frequently in water. Advice may be issued to local authorities and British Rail in the light of these initiatives.

Caseous Lymphadentitis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields, Official Report, 28 June, columns 338-39, if he will make inquiries as to why the goats imported from Germany subsequently found to have caseous lymphadentitis, had not been identified as having this disease during their post-import inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the Official Report of 21 June, column 653.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the publications of the Farm Animal Welfare Council, giving the date of publication in each case.

Mr. Gummer: The list of FAWC publications is as follows:

Report on the Animal Welfare Implications of Harvesting of Deer Antlers in Velvet (January 1980)
Advice to the Agriculture Ministers of Great Britain on the Need to Control Certain Mutilations on Farm Animals (July 1981)
Report on the Welfare of Poultry at the Time of Slaughter (January 1982)
Report on the Welfare of Livestock (Red Meat Animals) at the Time of Slaughter (June 1984)
Report on the Welfare of Farmed Deer (February 1985)
Report on the Welfare of Livestock when Slaughtered by Religious Methods (July 1985)
Report on the Welfare of Livestock at Markets (May 1986)
Egg Production Systems—an Assessment (September 1986)
Regulations Working Group Interim Ststement (November 1986)
Assessment of Pig Production Systems (March 1988)
Advice to Agriculture Ministers on Transportation of Unfit Animals (April 1988)
Report on Priorities in Animal Welfare Research and Development (May 1988)
Report of Enforcement Working Group (February 1990)
Advice to Ministers on the Handling and Transport of Poultry (February 1990)

Food Labelling

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussions at the Council of Ministers meeting on 25-26 June on eggs and poultrymeat labelling rules; and whether any agreement was reached on the stamping of eggs.

Mr. Gummer: The Agriculture Council on 25-26 June adopted as A points (a) a regulation on marketing standards for eggs which will replace Council Regulation 2772/75 and (b) a regulation which will introduce marketing standards for poultrymeat. Both regulations include labelling requirements.

The new regulation on marketing standards for eggs permits, but does not require, one or more of a specified range of marks to be stamped on grade A eggs subject, in some cases, to further provisions to be set out in Commission regulations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Industry

10. Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the growth of manufacturing exports since 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over the period 1985 to 1989, the volume of manufactured exports rose by 31 per cent.; the fastest four-year growth rate since the comparable period ending in 1971.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the manufacturing output figures for each EC country for the most recent year for which figures are available, and in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Recent data on manufacturing output for the United Kingdom are published in the CSO's Economic Trends and for other EC countries in the OECD's Main Economic Indicators.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the manufacturing investment figures for the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: At 1985 prices, the estimates of manufacturing investment in 1988 and 1989, including leased assets, are £11,334 million and £12,054 million respectively Investment grew by an average 9 per cent. in the two years. This follows four years of growth averaging almost 8 per cent.

Government Expenditure

15. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the share of gross domestic product to be taken by general Government expenditure.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The forecast for the ratio of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to gross domestic product in 1990-91 published in the 1990 Financial Statement and Budget Report is 39 per cent.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his Department's estimate of total Government expenditure was for 1990-91 (a) at the time of his Autumn Statement of 1989 and (b) at the time of his Budget; and what is the current estimate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The projection of general government expenditure for 1990-91, set out in the 1989 Autumn Statement was £210·4 billion, and in the 1990 Financial Statement and Budget Report, £212·7 billion. A further estimate will be published in the 1990 Autumn Statement.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the retail prices index advisory committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the retail prices index advisory committee to discuss the contents of the price index.

Mr. Lilley: It has never been the practice for the Minister responsible for the retail prices index to hold discussions with the advisory committee. The committee's recommendations are submitted as formal reports, which are subsequently presented to Parliament and published. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) that he had received such a report and will be announcing the Government's decision on the recommendations in due course.

40. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the adequacy of the retail prices index as a guide to the cost of living.

Mr. Lilley: The retail prices index is not a cost of living index in the strict sense of measuring changes in the cost of maintaining a particular level of consumption: nor is it a measure of what people need to spend in order to live. Rather it measures the impact of price changes on the cost of a "basket" of goods and services as purchased by households in the United Kingdom and I am satisfied that, given that "basket", it is adequate for the purpose. However, the index is affected by short-term, factors which make it an unsatisfactory indicator of the underlying trend of inflation, and it may also be unsuitable for international comparisons as other countries' indices are constructed differently. In particular the RPI is unusual in including mortgage interest payments and the community charge. For some purposes it is therefore helpful to refer to derivatives of the RPI or to other indices.

Interest Rates

20. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in relation to the impact of interest rates on Scottish economic performance; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the impact of interest rates on Scottish economic performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

25. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Bank base rates are 15 per cent.

Balance of Payments

21. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the deficit on the current account of the balance of payments for (a) the first quarter of 1990 and (b) the first quarter of 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The answer is £4·7 billion and £4·2 billion, respectively.

Mortgage Repayments

22. Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the number of people six to 12 months in arrears on their mortgage repayments.

Mr. Ryder: The latest available figures show that at end 1989 there were approximately 58,000 mortgage loans six to 12 months in arrears.

Top People's Pay

23. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he collects relating to top people's pay.

Mr. Ryder: The top salaries review body makes recommendations to the Government on the pay of top civil servants, senior military and the judiciary. I am also aware of the salaries of a variety of other senior public servants. No information is collected by Government on the pay of senior executives in private industry and business.

Inflation

24. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to meet his Economic Community counterparts, to discuss a common method to determine the inflation rate of each member state.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at present. The practices followed in compiling consumer price indices vary between Community countries. The United Kingdom regularly joins in discussions with other members with a view to understanding the differences in methodology. When changes in the retail prices index have been proposed they have always been considered by the RPI advisory committee and due account taken then of practice elsewhere.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Ryder: The all-items RPI inflation rate was 9·7 per cent. in May. Underlying inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments and community charge, was 7·0 per cent.

Income Tax

26. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what increase in the rate of income tax would be required in 1990-91 for the top one-fifteenth earners to raise an additional £3 billion.

Mr. Lilley: About 1 in 15 taxpayers will pay income tax at the higher rate in 1990-91. An increase of 10 percentage points in the higher rate of tax would increase the liability to income tax of this group by about £3 billion in a full year. This estimate takes no account of any behavioural effects that might result from such an increase.

44. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress on the implementation of separate taxation for married couples.

Mr. Lilley: Independent taxation of husbands and wives was successfully introduced on 6 April this year.

35. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Treasury in a full year of making the married man's tax allowance transferable to non-working wives; and what is his policy as to the merits of making such a move.

Mr. Lilley: Under independent taxation, the married couple's allowance will go to the husband in the first instance. However, if he has insufficient income to use it in full himself any surplus can be transferred to his wife—whether or not she is at work—against her own income of any kind for her to use.

Bank of England

27. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and whether the level of inflation was discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor of the Bank of England on a regular basis.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss exchange rate policy.

Mr. Major: I meet the Governor of the Bank of England on a regular basis.

European Currency

28. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his new proposals for a European currency.

29. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for an alternative European currency unit to compete with the currencies of European Community member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 21 June at column 655.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received recently about his plan for the exchange of Common Market currency for European Economic Community national currencies; what further steps he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has received a number of representations. He will be discussing the ideas put forward in his speech to the German Industry Forum with his Community colleagues in the coming weeks.

Company Cars

30. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about tax allowances for company cars.

Mr. Lilley: These allowances are regularly reviewed.

Tobacco

31. Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received concerning the increase in tax on tobacco in the current year's Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Nine letters were received from individuals or bodies representing health professionals who gave broad support for the tobacco taxation measures announced in the 1990 Budget. Four individuals wrote opposing the duty increases on cigarettes, cigars and hand-rolling tobacco.

European Monetary Union

33. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for furthering European monetary union; and if he will make a statement.

39. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his new proposals for European monetary union.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 21 June at column 655.

Investment

34. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and whether levels of investment were discussed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor chaired the National Economic Development Council on 4 July, at which the CBI was represented. One of the topics discussed was United Kingdom investment, capacity and growth.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he forecasts the growth in total fixed investment in 1990 will be.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend's latest forecast for total fixed investment, published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, projects a fall of 1¼ per cent. in 1990.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

36. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his latest plans are for taking the United Kingdom into the European exchange rate mechanism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester (Mr. Nelson) on 7 June at column 774.

Credit Advertising

37. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to encourage the banks and building societies to adopt the recommendations contained in the Jack report on credit advertising.

Mr. Ryder: The banks and building societies have already set up a Committee under the independent chairmanship of Sir George Blunden, former Deputy Governor of the Bank of England, to oversee the preparation of the code of banking practice recommended in the Jack report. The intention is to have the main points of the code in place by early 1991, and the terms of reference of the committee make it clear that consumer and other interests will be fully consulted before the code is finalised. I understand the code will cover the issue of credit marketing as both the Jack committee and the Government have recommended. We shall look carefully at what they propose to see whether it is sufficient or whether any further action is necessary.

Tax and National Insurance

38. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the average sums paid in income tax and in national insurance contributions in 1989; and the comparable figures for 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

Amount paid in income tax and national insurance contributions on average earnings

	Amount paid in income tax[1] and NIC on average earnings[2]	Percentage of average earnings[2] paid in income tax and NIC
1978-79
Single person	29·25	31·5
Married man	25·76	27·8
1989-90[3]
Single person	80·31	28·7
Married man	72·67	26·0

[1] Assuming that the only allowances available against income tax are the single persons and married man's/married couple's allowances as appropriate.

[2] Average earnings are for full time adult males in all occupations. In 1978-79 they were £92·8 per week; in 1989-90 they are assumed to be £280·0 per week in line with the assumptions in paragraph 3.02 of the 1989 Autumn Statement.

[3] Figures are derived from the financial year average NIC Class 1 paid in 1989-90.

Disabled People

41. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the tax concessions available for disabled people and their carers; and what is the annual cost to the Revenue.

Mr. Major: Various social security benefits for the disabled are exempt from income tax:

Benefit	Cost of Exemption (1989-90) £ million
Invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowances	390
Industrial disablement benefits	70
Allowances to rehabilitees	[1]7
Attendance allowance	95
Mobility allowance	55
War disablement benefit	95

[1] Negligible.

Two tax allowances are available in respect of disability: the blind person's allowance and the additional personal allowance for a husband with dependent children whose wife is totally incapacitated throughout the tax year. Each of these allowances costs up to £5 million a year.

In addition, the following extra-statutory concessions give favourable treatment to payments to the disabled:

A26 Sick benefits—Estimated cost: up to £100,000.

A59 Home to work travel of severely disabled employees —No central data on which to base a reliable estimate.

A62 Pensions to employees disabled at work—Estimated cost: up to £100,000.

Further details are given in the Inland Revenue's booklet IR 1.

Private Education Allowances

43. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax revenue was forgone during the last financial year in respect of allowances for private education.

Mr. Lilley: If the hon. Member will write to me giving details of the particular allowances he has in mind I shall be happy to provide the relevant information.

EC Trade

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the United Kingdom's deficit or surplus in (a) all trade and (b) trade to manufacturers with the European Community in each year since 1972.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest information is available on the Central Statistical Office database which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

Privatisation

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total income to the Exchequer as a result of privatisation measures since May 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The net proceeds from privatisation since 1979 to date amount to some £28 billion.

Coinage

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he undertakes with local government representatives when considering changes in the coinage; what estimate he has made of the consequential cost of converting coin-operated machines when the 5p coin is replaced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The decision to introduce the new 5p coin was taken after extensive research and consultation on Britain's coinage.

In July 1987 a consultative pamphlet inviting comments on options for changes to the coinage, was issued to a wide range of organisations including local authorities. Sample coins have been made available to a large number of vending interests and local authorities in order to assist in the adjustment to the new coin.

While there will undoubtedly be some transitional costs for owners of coin operated machines, they will benefit from the lower cost of handling lighter coins.

Government Revenue

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total sum of central Government revenue for 1989-90; and what was the amount of central Government revenue used for that funding of local government services.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Total central Government receipts in 1989-90, on a national accounts basis, are estimated to have been £181·2 billion. On the same basis, central Government grants to local authorities, are estimated to have been £27·1 billion. Central Government grants to local authorities, within the planning total, are estimated to have been £23·5 billion.

VAT

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each country within the European Economic Community the rate of value added tax attaching to (a) food, (b) children's clothing, (c) new housing and (d) books and newspapers.

Mr. Ryder: The information available for each EC member state is set out in the tables:

(a) Food in shops[1]

Country	Rate per cent.
Belgium	6
Denmark	22
France	[2]5·5
Germany	7
Greece	6
Ireland	[3]0
Italy	[4]4, 9
Luxembourg	[3]3, 6
Netherlands	6
Portugal	[5]0, 8, 6
Spain	6
United Kingdom	[7]0

[1] Excluding luxury foods.
[2] With certain exceptions, e.g. sweets, ice-cream, margarine which are standard-rated at 18·6 per cent.
[3] Alcohol and soft drinks other than fruit juices are liable at 25 per cent. in all circumstances, as is all food and drink supplied through a vending machine.
[4] The lower rate applies to essential foodstuffs such as bread, pasta and fish.
[5] The lower rate applies to meat, meat products, bread and butter.
[6] The rate shown in brackets applies to the autonomous regions of the Madeira and Azores archipelagoes. The zero-rate applies to unprepared foodstuffs.
[7] With certain exceptions including ice-cream, chocolates and similar confectionery, alcoholic and soft drinks, potato crisps and similar products and pet foods.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report up-to-date figures on the same basis as those provided to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East, in his answer of 8 January, Official Report, columns 559-64, revising his figures to include an estimate of the effects of the 1990 Budget statement and the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 June 1990]: Figures for 1978-79 to 1987-88 were placed in the library of the House last year (as noted in the Official Report, 13 April 1989, column 624). The latest estimates for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 are given in the tables. I regret that it is not yet possible to produce satisfactory estimates of the effects of the introduction of the community charge and associated arrangements for transitional relief.

Notes to Tables

(1) Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

(2) From 1990-91 husbands and wives will be taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple in 1990-91 as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.

(3) In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowances, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.

(4) Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These were £256·30 per week in 1988-89, £280·00 per week in 1989-90, and estimated to be £303·80 per week in 1990-91, using the Government Actuary Department's assumption of 8½ per cent. growth over 1989-90 as published in the 1989 Autumn Statement.

(5) The estimate of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and composition, and estimated payments of VAT, other indirect taxes and domestic rates are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the capital raised on the market by the proposed hospital trusts will be counted in the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 July 1990]: NHS trusts will be classified as public corporations, and their borrowing from the market will be included in the public sector borrowing requirement.

Household Expenditure

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing average household expenditure underlying the 1990 weights for the general retail prices index as in the April 1989 edition of the Employment Gazette.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 July 1990]: Following is the information:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many extra teachers and potential extra teachers have been recruited as a result of his Department's recent advertising campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Nearly 20,000 requests have been received from people seeking information about teaching as a career in response to the first phase of the teacher recruitment advertising campaign. The next step is for those who, as a result of the campaign, have decided upon a career in teaching to approach their local education authority or contact the graduate teacher training registry depending on their qualifications and experience.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many cases are known to his Department arising from their special educational needs, of children of school age suffering from juvenile muscular degeneration; and what educational provisions is made for these children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information identifying the nature of a child's special educational needs is not collected centrally.

Infant School Teachers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the median years of service of teachers in infant schools in each year from 1980 until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is given in the table:

Median years of service of full-time qualified teachers in infant and first schools in England 1980-87

	[1] Years

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement concerning the effects of local management of schools upon schools of under 100 pupils in England.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under local management of schools all primary and secondary schools will be funded according to the resource allocation formula as approved by my right hon. Friend. Although not required to do so, the majority of local education authorities have indicated that they intend, in the longer term, to delegate responsibility for managing budgets to schools with fewer than 100 pupils.

School Building

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from school governing bodies in north Devon about the level of capital grant for school building.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None.

HEALTH

Kidney Disease

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) males and (b) females over the age of 65 years, per million of the population, are accepted for kidney dialysis treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of new patients aged 65 years and over, accepted for renal replacement therapy in 1988 was as follows:

	Number	Per million population
Males	265	75
Females	167	31

The rate per million population is based on the number of males and females respectively in the relevant age group.

Hospitals

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of (a) hospital beds, (b) nurses, (c) consultants and (d) all administrative staff in the national health service hospitals in (i) England and (ii) the Basildon and Thurrock health authority or its predecessor for each of the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is shown in the following tables.

England[4]

Year	Discharges and deaths	Average daily number of available hospital beds	Hospital nursing and midwifery staff (WTE)[2]	Hospital medical and dental consultants (WTE)[3]	Administration and clerical staff (WTE)
1960	n/a	n/a	[5]197,900	[5]10,800	n/a
1965	[7]4,616,700	[7]434,800	[5]222,400	[5]10,200	[5]37,600
1970	5,011,700	423,600	[5]252,800	[6]9,700	[5]45,300
1975	4,975,800	387,600	300,400	11,300	91,900
1980	5,670,000	356,000	330,200	12,600	105,400
1985	6,353,800	325,500	352,500	14,000	111,000
1988	6,586,000	282,900	355,600	15,000	116,000

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest hundred (100).
[2] There was a change in nurses working hours in 1980-81 from 40 to 37·5 hours per week. This has not been taken account of in the calculations.
[3] Figures include permanent paid and honorary staff. Prior to 1987 senior hospital-dental officers with allowance were included with consultants.
[4] These are figures for England and Wales. Figures for England are not available prior to 1971.
[5] Figures for 1960 and 1965 are not comparable with later years.
[6] Figures for 1970 are not comparable with other years.
[7] Figures are for 1966.

1988	33,710	1,720	1,970	n/a	690

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest ten (10).
[2] For years 1966 and 1970 the data is for Tilbury and south east Essex and south Ockenden hospital management committees.
[3] There was a change in nurses working hours in 1980-81 from 40 to 37·5 hours per week. This has not been taken account of in the calculations.
[4] Figures not available as consultants' contracts are not directly held by non-teaching district health authorities.

Contraceptive Clinics

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Her Majesty's Government will make more funds available to health authorities for the purposes of providing contraceptive clinic services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the future, as now, it will be for each health authority to decide on the most appropriate financial arrangements for family planning provision. Under the NHS reforms, district health authorities will be responsible for ensuring that patients have access to a comprehensive range of services and this will include family planning. Guidance issued by the Department on the provision of family planning services was recently reaffirmed in a letter (EL(90)MB115) to regional general managers by the director of operations and planning on the NHS management executive. A copy of the letter is available in the Library.

Newmarket Hospital

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if funds earmarked in 1988 for the redevelopment of Newmarket hospital are still available.

Mr. Dorrell: The East Anglian regional health authority is still holding an allocation within its capital programme towards that scheme.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations has been invoked in respect of (a) excessive prescribing and (b) under-prescribing by each family practitioner committee in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations has not been invoked in England in the past five years. Regulation 16 concerns excessive prescribing only and not under-prescribing.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to ensure that private nursing homes and residential care homes include medical requisites and all necessary services in their fees.

Mr. Dorrell: People in residential care homes retain the right to NHS services as though they were in their own homes. The fees charged need only reflect provision made beyond this. The person responsible for a private nursing home must provide adequate facilities and services for those accommodated and we would expect fees to reflect this. Nursing home patients retain the right to NHS general medical, dental and hospital services.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether elderly people in private residential care are entitled to receive free national health service prescriptions.

Mr. Dorrell: All men aged 65 and all women aged 60 or over are entitled to have NHS prescriptions dispensed free of charge. One of the duties of the person responsible for a residential home is to make adequate arrangements for patients and residents to receive general medical and dental services under part II of the National Health Service Act 1977.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will hold an inquiry into the level of fees charged by private nursing homes and residential care homes.

Mr. Dorrell: The level of fees charged in private nursing or residential care homes is a matter between the proprietor and the residents or whoever pays on the residents' behalf and not one in which we see any need to intervene.

Eye Tests

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of sight tests in the second quarter of 1990, and in previous quarters over the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on sight tests is not available centrally on a quarterly basis. Statistics on the number of sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services are currently collected on a six-monthly basis. The following table gives the number of NHS sight tests paid for in England for the five-year period up to and including 31 September 1989—the most recent figure available. Comparable data on private sight tests conducted since April 1989 are not centrally collected.

AIDS

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for the total number of AIDS cases reported in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the end of May 1990 the cumulative United Kingdom total of AIDS cases reported was 3,346, of whom 1,845 are known to have died.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many infants died from sudden infant death syndrome in the United Kingdom in 1989-90; what precentage change that is from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table. Data relate to Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom, since comparable data for Northern Ireland are not available.

Publications

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to make savings by discontinuing the circulation to NHS doctors of (i) Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin, (ii) Prescribers Journal, (iii) Health Trends and (iv) the British National Formulary.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: There are currently no such plans. All such departmental publications are reviewed from time to time to ensure that their circulation continues to be justified to meet the needs of the target audience.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the administrative costs as a percentage of total costs for the national health service for each financial year since 1980-81 and the projected figure for 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 June 1990]: Following is information, covering both hospital and community health services and family practitioner services, derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department for the years 1980-81 to 1988-89 (the latest available).

We do not collect such information in-year and consequently cannot provide an estimate for 1990-91, but equivalent information for the financial year 1989-90 will be available in the autumn.

Notes to the Table

1. HCHS covers the total expenditure of the health authorities concerned including hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.

2. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels; such costs are regarded as operational.

3. The table includes the total expenses of the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority which are regarded as wholly administrative. Expenditure by other bodies and special health authorities providing central services to the National Health Service (eg the Central Blood Laboratories Authority) and expenditure met centrally by the Department is excluded.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Bills

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 19 June, Official Report, columns 477-80, if he will publish the overall estimated increase in rate bills in 1990-91 as against 1989-90 of (a) shops (b) factories, (c) hotels and boarding houses, (d) officies and (e) mines, in total and by economic regions (i) including the effects of transitional relief and (ii) excluding the effects of transitional relief.

Mr. Chope: Aggregate changes in rate bills between 1989-90 and 1990-91 for the types of property about which my hon. Friend asks, with and without the transitional arrangements, are given in the table. The figures have been calculated at 1990-91 prices and are based on the rateable values shown in the lists deposited with local authorities on 20 December 1989. The figures take no account of empty property or other reliefs.

Energy-efficient Buildings

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution will be made by his Department to the International Building Bureau conference on energy-efficient buildings, to be held in London on 21 June.

Mr. Chope: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to the luncheon held by the Industrial Building Bureau at the House of Lords on 21 June to mark the launch of its national industrial building audit. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), attended the lunch and spoke on the subject of energy-efficient buildings and related matters.

Protection of Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas of special protection for birds as well as those Ramsar sites and areas with dual designation for the protection of birds.

Mr. Trippier: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to special protection areas under the EC birds directive rather than areas of special protection under section 3 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Details of those sites which have been designated as special protection areas and as wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention are set out in the table. Those sites with dual designation have been marked with an asterisk. Responsibility for the designation of sites in Scotland rests with the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Water Quality

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to forbid the payment of dividends to the shareholders in water companies until all European Community directives on water quality are met.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the cassette and transcript of the Radio 4 analysis programme on the greenhouse effect and global warming broadcast on 28 June.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took part in this programme, the contents of which have been noted.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a transcript of the interview given by the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), to the BBC radio "Today" programme on 30 June, on the London amendment conference of the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A copy is already in my Department's library.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the report commissioned by his Department jointly from the centre for configurational studies at the Open university and the earth resource research centre on the potential role of town and country planning in reducing carbon dioxide.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A draft report commissioned from the Open university was received by my Department in March this year.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure research contracts placed by his Department contain a stipulation the contractors institute a policy of chlorofluorocarbons recovery from equipment using chlorofluorocarbons, in research carried out for his Department.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is Government policy to encourage all users of equipment using CFCs to institute a policy of CFC recovery and to reduce dependence on such equipment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the essential medical uses of chlorofluorocarbons that will be exempted from phasing out by 2000 or 2005 in the United Kingdom, following the recent amendment to the 1987 Montreal protocol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no essential medical uses of chlorofluorocarbons exempted from the 2000 phase-out under the recently revised Montreal protocol.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist for the recovery of chlorofluorocarbons in refrigeration and refrigeration units used by his Department and research laboratories sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department does not have to dispose of a significant amount of refrigeration equipment. We have, however, identified facilities which provide for the safe disposal of such items and the recycling of any CFC gases.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the United Kingdom decided not to sign the proposals sponsored by Finland at the amendment conference on the Montreal protocol in London in June to bring forward the date for the phase-out of chlorofluorocarbon use to 1997.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside was asked to sign the proposal. However, we are firmly committed to the phase-out of chlorofluorocarbons, with exemption for essential medical uses, by 1997. We will be pressing the European Commission to bring forward proposals to this end.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following the agreement made at the recent London amendment conference of the Montreal protocol on the protection of the ozone layer, he has any plans to make arrangements with (a) foreign embassies and consulates and (b) United States military forces based in the United Kingdom for the safe recovery of all chlorofluorocarbons in refrigeration and air conditioning in their premises.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Foreign embassies and consulates are responsible for their own maintenance and facilities in the United Kingdom. Maintenance of United States military installations is managed on their behalf by PSA and appropriate procedures are already used in handling and disposal of equipment containing chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the agreement made by Her Majesty's Government for the phase-out of chlorofluorocarbons use by 2000 applies to (a) Her Majesty's Crown Territories of Hong Kong, (b) the Falkland Islands, (c) Gibraltar and (d) the Channel Islands.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's Government's ratification of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, and the recently agreed adjustments, apply to Hong Kong, the Falkland Islands, Gibraltar and Jersey. Arrangements are in hand to apply them to Guernsey.

Competitive Tendering

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made in relation to the enforcement of the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has today issued directions under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 requiring both East Lindsey district council and Knowsley metropolitan borough council to expose refuse collection work to competitive tendering again by July 1991. He has taken this action because he is not satisfied with the responses which these authorities made to the notices issued under section 13 of the Act.

The notices issued to both authorities set out his belief that they had acted contrary to the requirement of section 7(7) of the Act, which is that, in awarding a contract, they must not "act in a manner having the effect or intended or likely to have the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition", in that they had assigned refuse collection work to their own direct service organisations when they had received a lower-priced bid from a private contractor.

North Sea Conference

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the guidance note on implementation of the declaration of the third North sea conference in the Hague on 2 to 8 March.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom has taken an early lead in setting out the details of the measures it will be taking to implement the agreements reached at the Hague North sea conference in March. I am publishing the implementation note today. This gives guidance on the ministerial declaration of the Hague conference and lists the targets and timetables we have set for the action necessary to implement these commitments. It demonstrates our determination to protect the marine environment, both in the North sea and all the seas and coastal waters surrounding the United Kingdom. Copies of the note will be placed in the Library of the House.

Right to Buy, Norwich

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures showing the proportion of occasions on which Norwich city council's housing committee has quoted prices to tenants seeking the right to buy above the figure estimated by its own estates surveyor.

Mr. Chope: A landlord is required to state its opinion of the value of a property to be sold under the right to buy on the assumptions specified in section 127 of the Housing Act 1985. This opinion, and the basis on which it is formed, are the responsibility of the landlord, and the Department does not collect information of the kind requested. A tenant who disagrees with the landlord's opinion has the right to an independent determination of value by the district valuer. Twenty-two such determinations were made on the application of tenants of Norwich city council in the three months ending 30 June, the value determined being lower than the council's opinion in all 22 cases by an average of £2,966 or 6·32 per cent.

Nuclear Waste (Reprocessing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements are in hand for the return to West Germany of waste arising from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel from Wachersdorf;

(2) if he will give details of the nuclear waste reprocessing contract between Sellafield and the Federal Republic of West Germany in respect of the Wachersdorf plant; and what discussions he has had with the German Government on safety standards at Sellafield.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

I understand from British Nuclear Fuels plc that the new reprocessing contracts with the Federal German electricity utilities will bring in some £750 million of business to the company. These contracts are for reprocessing spent fuel, not nuclear waste.

In line with all BNFL's overseas reprocessing contracts signed since 1976, these contracts contain options for the return of wastes arising. The Government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes should be returned.

Exchange of information agreements exist between the nuclear regulatory authorities in the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. Nuclear safety standards in the Federal Republic are in line with those in the United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Blind People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the numbers of blind people who neither pay tax nor benefit from social security payments.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Finsbury Park Local Office

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the real level of expenditure on social fund loans and grants in 1988-89 and 1989-90 relative to expenditure on single payments in 1987-88 in Finsbury Park Department of Social Security office, taking into account the repayment of loans by claimants to the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the comparative expenditure for the Finsbury Park Department of Social Security office as reckoned by the gross domestic product deflator.

	Expenditure (in £000s)
1987-88 Single Payments	769
1988-89 Social Fund
Gross	474
Net	375
1989-90 Social Fund
Gross	624
Net	389

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his practice in future to seek parliamentary approval of any general directions issued by him to social fund officers.

Mr. Scott: No. It was clearly Parliament's intention, recognised in a recent case before the Court of Appeal, that the social fund would operate in accordance with the directions of the Secretary of State, which would not be subject to parliamentary approval.

Disability

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the adequacy of social security provision for people with severe disabilities needing full-time care.

Mr. Scott: On 10 January we laid before Parliament "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" which details our major proposals arising from our review of the balance and structure of social security benefits for disabled people and their carers. The existing benefit structure already recognises that disabled people have extra needs. The OPCS survey findings showed that attendance allowance and mobility allowance are well targeted on the most common of the more costly disabilities. From October 1990 a carer's premium, initially at a rate of £10 a week, will be introduced into income support and housing benefit for those receiving invalid care allowance. We estimate that this will help 30,000 carers.

Single Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the total number of single payments made in 1986-87 and 1987-88 broken down into pensioners, couples with children, lone parents, sick and disabled people and others.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The information requested is available only for the 12 months prior to each annual statistical inquiry. As marital status applies to all client groups, the data are split into two separate tables.

Number of single payments (thousands)

Notes: Columns may not sum due to rounding.

The figures include payments made to cases during the 12 months prior to the inquiry, but exclude those cases which received a payment during the year but were not in receipt of benefit at the date of the inquiry; there is therefore an undercount of the total payments made.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the proportion of pensioners, couples with children, lone parents, sick and disabled people and others on income support who received single payments in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The information requested is available only for the 12 months prior to each annual statistical inquiry. As marital status applies to all client groups, the data are split into two separate tables.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing expenditure on the single payments scheme in each year between 1980-1981 and 1987-1988 in both current prices and 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The information requested is given in the table.

WALES

Protection of Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those areas of special protection for birds as well as those Ramsar sites and areas with dual designation for the protection of birds.

Mr. David Hunt: The designation of special protection areas and Ramsar sites is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, although Welsh sites are designated in consultation with me. I therefore refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside today.

Radioactive Caesium

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county, and by year for the last five years, the number of reported cases of radioactive caesium in people.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available in the form requested. However, last month the Welsh Office published a report of a study of radioactivity in over 150 volunteers in north, south and mid-Wales.

The study showed that there were no significant differences between the body burdens of radiocaesium of the volunteers from the different parts of Wales, and that if the body burdens continue to decline at the current rate, levels in the Welsh population will on average reach pre-Chernobyl levels some time this year. A copy of the report "Whole Body Monitoring Research Project" is in the Library.

Welsh subjects are also participating in a national survey of radiocaesium levels in people, sponsored by the Department of the Environment.

Nurseries and Playgroups

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of (a) children, (b) qualified staff and (c) full-time equivalent qualified staff in registered (i) pre-school nurseries and (ii) playgroups for each academic year from 1970-71 to 1988-89 in (1) Wales as a whole and (2) each county of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of staff in registered pre-school nurseries and playgroups is not held centrally. The available information on the numbers of places for children in registered pre-school nurseries and registered playgroups is shown in the following table. Data before 1975 are not readily available.

NHS and Community Care Act

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that information circulated to people in Wales regarding the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act should include information and advice on problems that may arise in the course of its implementation.

Mr. Grist: The booklet that we propose to distribute to all households in Wales will, of course, contain accurate information and advice. It will not address hypothetical problems arising from the implementation of the Act. Following the initial adjustment to the new arrangements we have every reason to believe that the advantages stemming from the reforms will be recognised and welcomed widely.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations has been invoked in respect of (a) excessive prescribing and (b) under-prescribing by each family practitioner committee in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: Regulation 16 has been invoked once during the last five years in respect of a case of excessive prescribing in the West Glamorgan FPC area.

General Medical Practices, West Glamorgan

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the delay in financial allocation for service development of general medical practices in West Glamorgan.

Mr. Grist: Final cash allocations cannot be made until an analysis has been completed for information supplied by all family practitioner committees in Wales. This information could not be provided until several weeks after the end of the financial year 1989-90. I hope to announce these allocations within a few weeks.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many infants died from sudden infant death syndrome in Wales in 1989; what was the comparable figure in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Available data on deaths of babies under a year old, resident in Wales, caused by sudden infant death syndrome (ICD code 798.0) for the years 1986-1989 are given in the following table.

The introduction in 1986, in England and Wales, of a separate certificate for neonatal deaths—in the period 28 days after birth—means that it is not appropriate to assign a single underlying cause to such deaths. Consequently, for all infant deaths—in the first year after birth—only a count of the certificates where the syndrome is mentioned can be made, whether the syndrome was the underlying cause of death or not.

[1] Post neonatal period as from 28 days but within 1 year of birth.

[2] Includes deaths listed in column (a).

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to combat sudden infant death syndrome in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Government announced a major new initiative to reduce infant mortality, including sudden infant deaths, in their response to the Social Services Select Committee report on perinatal, neonatal and infant mortality which was published in July 1989 (Cmnd 741). The review of research relating to sudden infant death syndrome commissioned as part of this initiative will be of benefit to Wales. Also, in line with the initiative's goal to increase capacity to undertake expert post mortem examination of infants who die, action has been put in hand to secure, by central funding, the appointment of a full-time consultant paediatric pathologist at the University hospital of Wales. Pending that appointment, part-time consultant sessions are being funded centrally.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the effects of local management of schools upon schools of fewer than 100 pupils in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to my reply of 15 June 1990, column 369.

School Budgets

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average budget for schools in Wales of (a) fewer than 100 pupils, (b) between 101 and 200 pupils and (c) over 201 pupils; what were the comparable figures in real terms in (i) 1975, (ii) 1980 and (iii) 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls (River Usk)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made to deal with contamination of the River Usk by polychlorinated biphenyls carried in vessels in the river.

Mr. Grist: We are not aware of any such incidents. However, were such an event to occur it would be a matter for the National Rivers Authority, the local authority and if it were within a port, the harbour authority.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was allocated in the 1989-90 financial year by his Department (1) specifically to support the implementation of the all-Wales strategy on mental illness and (2) for other work in connection with mental illnesss (a) to each local authority in Wales, (b) to voluntary organisations in each local authority area and (c) to voluntary organisations in Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 26 June 1990]: No funding was allocated by the Department in 1989-90 under the mental illness strategy; 1990-91 is the first year of central Government funding under the strategy.

The following allocations were made by the Department to local authorities in 1989-90 under the urban programme for projects concerned primarily with mental illness:

Dyfed	14,092
Gwent	29,852
Newport	1,097
Cynon Valley	14,910
Merthyr Tydfil	11,797
Ogwr	22,189
Vale of Glamorgan	5,623
West Glamorgan	31,346

With the exception of the allocation made to West Glamorgan, all this funding was provided for voluntary sector schemes.

In addition, Wales MIND received a grant of £57,166 under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

The Department also made available earmarked funds totalling £1,072,547 to district health authorities which use them to make payments to local authorities and voluntary organisations under the powers in section 28A of the National Health Service Act 1977.

NATIONAL FINANCE

World Student Games

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to cast a commemorative coin to help fund the world student games in Sheffield.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to cast a commemorative coin to help fund the world student games in Sheffield.

Mr. Ryder: There are no plans to issue a commemorative coin to mark the world student games.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reviews he is carrying out into the likely effects of linking motor vehicle excise duty to engine capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: We have no plans at present to link vehicle excise duty to engine capacity.

VAT

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of tax forgone due to the zero rating of value added tax on (a) food, (b) children's clothing, (c) new housing and (d) books and newspapers.

Mr. Ryder: The extra revenue yield, in a full year, from applying the standard rate of VAT to the items listed is estimated approximately at:

	£ million
a. Food	5,100
b. Children's clothing	600
c. New Housing	1,600
d. Books and newspapers	700
Total	8,000

Such estimates depend, among other things, on the reaction of consumers to increased prices and so are subject to a considerable margin of error.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to harmonise the arrangements for payment of value added tax on duty-free fuel by British fishing vessels to bring them into line with existing arrangements for Belgian, Dutch and French fishing.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The Government are aware of the difficulties for British fishing vessels and other maritime interests, caused by the European Court of Justice's ruling on some of the United Kingdom's VAT zero rates. They are considering whether and how any changes to the present arrangements should be made.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the likely increase in the retail prices index if value added tax at standard rate was applied to (a) food, (b) children's clothing, (c) new housing and (d) books and newspapers.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the information:

	Percentage increase in the Retail Prices Index Per cent.
a. Food	2·0
b. Children's clothing	0·2
c. New housing	[1]n.a.
d. Books and newspapers	0·2

[1]The effects on the RPI of applying VAT to new housing cannot be quantified precisely. The immediate impact would be very small. Over many years however it would become significant.

Beaulieu Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his reply of 20 March, Official Report, column 525, on the directors of the Beaulieu group of companies charged with cheating the public Revenue and offences under section 39(3) of the Value Added Tax Act 1983 heard before the Harrogate justices, he will make a further statement on the progress of the case.

Mr. Ryder: Jan De Clerck, Dominiek De Clerck, Luc De Clerck and Francis De Clerck are next due to appear upon a remand before the Harrogate justices on 16 August 1990.

The prosecution will seek to pursue committal proceedings on a date to be fixed by the court following representations by the parties at the remand hearing.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the number of people more than one month and up to six months in arrears on their mortgage repayments.

Mr. Ryder: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 27 June at column 216.

Natural Beauty Products, Bridgend

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the hon. Member for Bridgend with a full note of the meeting on 1 February between Customs and Excise and Natural Beauty Products Ltd., Bridgend, including the timing and source of, and participants in, all phone calls made and received during that meeting.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 29 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the letter that my right hon. and noble Friend the Paymaster General sent to him on 6 July, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

German State Lottery

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the last date on which lottery tickets from the West German state lottery organisations were seized by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 5 July 1990]: I understand from Customs and Excise that the latest date on which it seized lottery material from the Suddeutsche Klassenlotterien is 2 July 1990 and the latest date on which it seized material from the Nordwestdeutsche Klassenlotterien is 18 May 1990.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards seizures of West German state lottery tickets, in the light of the legal proceedings initiated by a West German lottery ticket salesman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 5 July 1990]: Policy remains that the import prohibition on lottery material should be enforced. Pending the outcome of any legal proceedings taken to challenge the validity of its action, Customs will continue to seize offending material which comes to its notice.

EMPLOYMENT

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to reduce levels of exposure to radiation at nuclear plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The current dose limits are set out in schedule 1 to the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 (IRR 85). The regulations comply with an EC directive (80/836 Euratom, as amended by 84/467) which in turn reflects advice from the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP). The ICRP is now reviewing its advice. The Health and Safety Commission's working group on ionising radiations will consider the revised ICRP recommendations, when finalised, and make any necessary proposals for further action.

Proposals for interim action pending the receipt of the revised ICRP recommendations were set out in an HSC consultative document earlier this year. The response is being considered with a view to issuing an additional part to the existing approved code of practice to IRR 85.

Industrial Tribunals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases were registered with industrial tribunals in the United Kingdom and in the calendar year 1989 under section 1 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 where the applicant claimed that their employer had not provided a written statement of terms and conditions of employment.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what expenditure was incurred on the action for jobs campaign in 1988-89 in addition to printed material, television advertising, press advertising, radio advertising and outdoor advertising.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure of £10,000 on exhibition materials and £5,000 on research was incurred on the action for jobs campaign in 1988-99, in addition to expenditure on printed material, television advertising, press advertising, radio advertising and outdoor advertising.

SCOTLAND

Cleanliness

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will release additional funding to enable local authorities to upgrade standards of cleanliness in public places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The matter of any cost implications that may arise for local authorities in upgrading standards of cleanliness in public places and other provisions contained in the Environmental Protection Bill has been raised in the round of discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on local government finance in 1991-92. They will be taken into account in establishing the level of aggregate external finance for that year.

Public Toilets

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation compelling Scottish local authorities to upgrade standards of hygiene in public toilets; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Islands and district councils have discretionary powers under section 26 of the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982 to provide, equip and maintain fixed or moveable public conveniences in such places as appear to them to be suitable.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce legislation on standards of hygiene in such places.

Sexual Offences

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive how many gay and/or bisexual men in Scotland were convicted of importuning in public places, contrary to section 32 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 32 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 does not extend to Scotland. It is not possible to separately identify broadly similar offences within the Scottish Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many men in Scotland were convicted of the offences of procuring or attempting to procure the commission of acts of buggery and gross indecency in each of the years 1980 to 1989, inclusive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not separately identifiable within the Scottish Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has on the proportion of A702 traffic that will be diverted to the M74-M8 within Fastlink.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following our consultations on the routes south of Edinburgh study, management consultants have been appointed to assess the viability of the Fastlink as a privately financed project. Clearly the new road would attract traffic from the A702. It is for potential promoters of the scheme to quantify the volume of traffic which might be diverted to the route, but it could be in excess of one third of the flow on the rural section of the road north of Biggar.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to enforce restrictions on heavy vehicles using the A702 and A701 routes after the M74-M8 Fastlink is completed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Subject to the satisfactory conclusion of discussions with Strathclyde, Borders and Lothian regional councils, it is proposed that the A702 would be de-trunked on completion of an M74-M8 Fastlink. The A701 is not a trunk road. It would therefore be for the regional councils as local roads authorities to consider whether any access restrictions were desirable.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans his Department has to reconsider dualling the A1 to Dunbar.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have announced a package of improvement schemes for the A1 which is likely to require the provision of nearly £50 million. We propose to dual the A1 from Bankton to Haddington, and in the longer term to Dunbar, and it is intended to formulate an appropriate package of further measures to improve the level of service over the remaining length. Dual carriageways are considered for roads expected to carry between 11,000 and 46,000 vehicles per day, and dualling on the A1 is being provided at the threshold level. Although dualling of the whole route is not ruled out in the very long term, current average daily traffic levels on the rural sections through Borders region are only about 5,000 vehicles per day.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has on the cost of dualling the A6091 between the A68 and the A7.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The A6091 is not a trunk road, and is the responsibility of Borders regional council as local roads authority.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to visit the Borders region to discuss the Government's current road plans for the future development of the A7 south of Hawick with the local roads authority; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 July 1990]: I received an invitation from Roxburgh district council to attend a meeting to discuss the Government's plans for improving road access to the Borders. I propose to visit Borders regional council, as the authority responsible for trunk roads. I also propose to visit Roxburgh district council, on housing matters in the course of which I shall listen to its representations. Neither the date nor format of the meetings has yet been arranged.

Health Boards

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to review the levels of remuneration for health board chairmen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend accepts that the remuneration of health board chairmen should be revised to reflect the additional workload which chairmen are experiencing in preparing for implementation of NHS reforms and in recognition of the new responsibilities which they will take on when the new health boards are established in 1991. He has therefore decided on the following levels of remuneration for chairmen with effect from 1 April 1990:

Health board	Remuneration £ per annum
Greater Glasgow	22,730
Lothian	20,490
Grampian; Tayside	18,250
Lanarkshire; Argyll and Clyde	16,005
Ayr and Arran; Fife; Forth Valley; Highland	13,415
Borders; Dumfries and Galloway	10,810
Orkney; Shetland; Western Isles	6,510

In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided that remuneration should be introduced for non-executive members of the new health boards. This will apply from 1 April 1991 and the levels will be £5,000 per annum for mainland health boards and £2,000 per annum for island health boards.

Illiteracy

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children have left school in each of the past five years unable to read or write in each education authority area.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 July 1990]: This information is not available.

New Towns

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairmen of the new town development corporations.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 July 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to meet the chairmen of the new town development corporations. I shall be meeting them on Friday 6 July.

Primary Schools, Glasgow

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current teacher to pupil ratio in Glasgow primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The pupil:teacher ratio in primary schools in the Glasgow division of Strathclyde in 1989-90 was 19·4:1, compared with 20·9:1 in 1988-89. This information may be found in SED statistical bulletin No. 9/B1/1990, a copy of which is in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dental Health

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the average cost per estimate for completed dental treatment for patients under 16 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At present the average cost per course of dental treatment for children under 16 years is £25·78.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistical information is available on child dental health under 18 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: A survey of the dental health of children aged five, eight, 12 and 15 years was carried out in 1989. Preliminary results show that on average caries levels in these age groups have fallen by some 38 per cent. since 1983.

Extradition

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has received any indications from the Government of the Republic of Eire about removal of articles 2 and 3 of their 1937 constitution or appropriate amendment of the Extradition Act 1965 in order to deal with terrorists more effectively.

Mr. Cope: The situation in relation to our arrangements for dealing with fugitive offenders is currently being reviewed by British and Irish officials, as agreed between the respective Ministers on 19 April. I would prefer not to comment on the details of the review.

Community Care Grants

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims there have been for community care grants in each DHSS office in Londonderry city, Limavady, Coleraine and Magherafelt during the last 12 months for which figures are available; and how many in each office were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) how many of the applicants refused were advised on the refusal form to (i) apply for a budgeting loan, (ii) were offered a budgeting loan and (iii) how many offered a loan sought and received such a loan, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Information about the number of community care grants processed each month, the number awarded and the amount paid by each social security office is available in the Library. The number of refusals can be derived from these figures.

Applicants who are refused community care grants do not need to apply for budgeting loans as social fund officers automatically consider the possibility of a loan in all such cases. No information is available about the number of loans subsequently offered or made to people whose applications for grants have been turned down.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of prisoners on custodial remand for (i) scheduled and (ii) non-scheduled offences were (a) given a non-custodial sentence, (b) given a custodial sentence and (c) found not guilty or not proceeded against in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Per cent.

1989	(i) Scheduled	(ii) Non-scheduled
(a) Non-custodial	14·3	17·5
(b) Custodial	75·4	72·2
(c) not guilty etc.	10·3	10·3

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were remanded in custody prior to trial for (a) scheduled and (b) non-scheduled offences in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: In 1989, 928 individuals were remanded in custody for scheduled offences and 697 individuals were remanded in custody for non-scheduled offences.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many attacks on RUC personnel took place in 1989, showing whether the attack was on (i) a foot patrol and (ii) a mobile patrol, the total attacked while on duty each month together with details of the type of attack, namely (a) physical assault, (b) stone throwing, (c) petrol bomb, (d) explosion or (e) shooting and the number of persons made amenable.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, in 1989 there were over 500 incidents in which the police were attacked either on duty or at home. Of these, 67 incidents involved the use of firearms and 83 the use of explosives.

TRANSPORT

Roads

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been spent on road schemes, not including maintenance, since 1960; and whether he will express this in terms of the current value of the pound.

Mr. Atkins: Total capital expenditure by central Government on national roads in the United Kingdom 1960-61 to 1989-90 amounts to about £15 billion, or £35 billion when expressed in 1989-90 prices. These figures should be treated as approximations, since there have been definitional changes.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on the number of (a) properties and (b) homes that have been demolished as a result of road schemes since 1960;

(2) what information he has on the acreage of (a) agricultural land and (b) other land taken out of use (i) permanently and (ii) temporarily as a result of road schemes since 1960.

Mr. Atkins: Information is not held in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Collision (River Usk)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the cargoes carried on the vessels Marius AS and Belle Roger which were involved in a collision on the River Usk at Newport on 24 April.

Mr. McLoughlin: The collision on 24 April was between the Greek bulk carrier Morias and the Irish container vessel Bell Ranger.

The Morias was carrying a cargo of steel products, and the Bell Ranger a cargo of containers. The containers, none of which appears to have been damaged, were loaded with general cargo, except one, which contained drums of chemical waste.

Air Fares

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met his colleagues in the Council of Ministers for Transport to discuss deregulation of air fares.

Mr. Parkinson: I attended a meeting of the EC Transport Council on 18 June 1990. A formal commitment was made to complete a single market in aviation by the end of 1992, and agreement was reached on a second package of EC air transport liberalisation measures for the interim. Regulations on fares, market access and capacity sharing, and on the application of the competition rules to air transport were adopted. The agreement reached will allow airlines greater freedom to exercise their own commercial judgment.

Railway Investment Criteria

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek an early meeting with his West German counterpart to discuss railway investment criteria.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authorities (a) issue free bus passes, (b) issue some form of assisted bus passes and (c) do not provide free or assisted travel for their pensioners.

Mr. Freeman: According to a survey of local authorities done by the Department of Transport in 1986, there were concessionary fares schemes for pensioners in 92 per cent. of districts in England and Wales, some operated by district councils and some by county councils or passenger transport executives. Of the 285 schemes for the elderly, 19 provided for free fares. There were no concessionary fares schemes in 29 districts. In London, a free fare scheme is funded by the boroughs.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to make it mandatory for every local authority to provide a free bus pass to their pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Local authorities always have discretionary powers to provide for reduced fares or free travel for people of state pensionable ago on local public transport services, and we have no plans to change these arrangements.

Passenger Transport Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has made for monitoring and acting upon the effects of the change in funding of passenger transport authorities in those areas affected by (a) poll tax capping and (b) loss of safety net grant in 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The passenger transport authorities discuss transport and financing issues with my Department on an on-going basis. Spending priorities within the level of community charge caps are a matter for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on proposals for amending the use of weighted ward densities in the allocation of funding for public transport authorities in the coming financial years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 July 1990]: Representations made by the local authority associations will be considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, who will make his proposals known in the autumn.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Trials

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the director of the Serious Fraud Office to discuss the conduct of serious fraud trials.

The Attorney-General: I last met the Director of the Serious Fraud Office for this purpose on 3 June 1990.

Wreck Commissioners

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what steps were taken to avoid any possible conflict of interests when assessors were appointed to sit on the Wreck Commissioners inquiry into the loss of the MV Derbyshire;

(2) what criteria govern the appointment of members of Lloyd's Register to sit on a Wreck Commissioners inquiry when the ship under scrutiny had been granted a certificate by Lloyd's Register.

The Attorney-General: Those under consideration for appointment as assessors are asked to confirm that they have no connection with any known parties to the formal investigation which might give rise to a conflict of interest.

Any assessor for a formal investigation, including members of Lloyd's Register, must fulfil the criteria set out in the schedule to the Merchant Shipping (Formal Investigations) Regulations 1985 (SI 1985/No. 1001), and any other appropriate criteria relating to special skills or knowledge which the Lord Chancellor might set having regard to the nature of the casualty which is to be the subject of that inquiry.

PRIME MINISTER

Gifts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines exist in respect of the receipt, recording and disposal or otherwise of gifts received by Ministers acting in their official capacity.

The Prime Minister: It is a well-established rule that no Minister should accept gifts, hospitality or services from anyone which would, or might appear to, place him or her under an obligation. The recording and, where appropriate, disposal of gifts received is a matter for Departments.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister (1) where the synthetic sapphire presented to her in her official capacity by the British Scientific and Technical Trust is held;

(2) if she will make it her policy to refuse any gift offered to her in her official capacity which contains (a) ivory, (b) fur, (c) tropical hardwoods or (d) chlorofluorocarbons;

(3) what gift she presented to President de Klerk on the occasion of his recent visit to the United Kingdom;

(4) what gift she presented to President Gorbachev on the occasion of her recent visit to the USSR in June;

(5) what gift she presented to President Bush on the occasion of her visit to the United States of America in November 1989.

The Prime Minister: It is not my normal practice to provide information of this kind concerning gifts given or received.

1991 Census

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Prime Minister whether the level of resources and funding for the Northern Ireland 1991 census will be on the same basis as for the census in the rest of the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Calcutt Inquiry

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether she expects to revise any more of her previous parliamentary answers in the light of the findings of the Calcutt inquiry into the handling of papers relating to Mr. Colin Wallace; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Calcutt's inquiry into the handling of Mr. Colin Wallace's disciplinary case is still in progress.

A copy of the conclusions of the Ministry of Defence's internal inquiry into the handling of documents relating to Mr. Wallace's case has been placed in the Library of the House. Nothing in these conclusions makes it necessary to revise my previous parliamentary answers.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what mechanisms exist for revaluation within the exchange rate mechanism; how often they have been used; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to section 3.2 of the resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978 on the establishment of the European monetary system (EMS) and related matters, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Since the inception of the EMS on 13 March 1979, there have been 12 realignments of currencies in the exchange rate mechanism.

New Taxes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to introduce no new taxes before the next general election.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to introduce any new taxes. Since 1979, we have abolished five major taxes, and the 1990 Finance Bill contains provisions for the abolition of two more.

NATO Meeting, London

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she proposes to put to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Heads of Government meeting on 5-6 July in London.

The Prime Minister: The NATO summit, which ends today, has been an important opportunity to chart the future course of the alliance at a time of momentous change in Europe. We need to preserve a sure defence and adapt NATO to the new circumstances. A copy of the declaration to be issued by the summit will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as it is available.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister in relation to the science base of the United Kingdom, what proposals have recently been discussed with the chairman of the trustees of the natural history museum.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The Lord President indicated on my behalf, in response to the hon. Member's question of 26 June, that the chairman of the museum is in discussion with the Government's chief scientific adviser and the Office of Arts and Libraries about the museum's position in relation to the United Kingdom science base.

As the Minister for the Arts said in the Adjournment debate of 20 June, he will be holding further discussions with the chairman of the trustees and the museum's director on this and related issues.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the policy of Her Majesty's Government on sanctions in relation to South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: We receive numerous representations on all aspects of our policy towards South Africa.

Cyprus

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of the Republic of Cyprus to observe paragraph 5 of Security Council resolution 649.

Mr. Maude: We continue to support United Nations efforts to bring about a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement to the Cyprus dispute, in line with Security Council resolution 649. We maintain continuous diplomatic contact with all parties to this end.

Morocco

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the official visit of the Prince of Morocco to Britain.

Mr. Waldegrave: Prince Sidi Mohammed paid a highly successful first official visit to Britain from 18 to 22 June as a guest of Government. He met His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, had dinner with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, met other Ministers, visited Parliament and the City of London and had the opportunity to see some modern technology projects.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has raised the issue of violation of human rights with the Moroccan Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Moroccan Government are aware of our concern about human rights abuses wherever they occur.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department is intending to do to influence the Moroccan Government to renew a direct dialogue with the Polisario.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is a matter for the parties involved. We continue to believe that the good offices of the UN Secretary-General and the chairman of the Organisation of African Unity offer the best prospects for an early and equitable solution. The latest developments at the UN are encouraging.

Western Sahara

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by his Department to assist Perez de Cuellar in his efforts to implement the last general assembly resolution regarding the organisation of a fair and genuine democratic referendum for the self-determination of the Saharawi people without any military or administrative constraints.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been welcome developments since the last UN general assembly resolution. The Secretary-General is expected soon to make detailed proposals for the establishment of a UN mission for the referendum in the western Sahara (MINURSO). Together with the other members of the Security Council we support these efforts and stand ready to consider requests for assistance.

Bulgaria

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his response to the recent elections in Bulgaria.

Mr. Waldegrave: The vote was generally free and fair, although there was a certain amount of intimidation and violence during the campaign. Both observers and Bulgaria's own electoral commission have cast doubts on some individual results. We shall now need to assess the policies and practices of the new Government and hope that their commitment to reform will be shown to be real.

Guyana

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of Guyana concerning the freedom of the forthcoming elections.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development reminded President Hoyte of the importance which the Government attach to the principle of free and fair elections when they met him in October and December 1989.

I also emphasised the need for elections to be free and fair when the Foreign Minister of Guyana called on me on 21 May 1990.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), Official Report, 21 June, column 685, he will list in the Official Report the states parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, the non-governmental organisations and members of the public to whom he makes reference as having made communication on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review conference and the general nature of the communications.

Mr. Waldegrave: Only at disproportionate cost could the non-governmental organisations and members of the public who have communicated on the subject of the NPT be listed. The communications received have been concerned with Government policy towards, and the fulfilment of obligations arising from, the NPT.

The following are states parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty:

Notes:

1. Taiwan (not recognised as a State by Her Majesty's Government) signed the Treaty in Washington on 1 July 1968 and deposited an Instrument of Ratification in Washington on 27 January 1970.

2. North Korea (not recognised as a State by Her Majesty's Government) acceded to the Treaty on 12 December 1985 in Moscow.

GATT

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for developing countries of the United States, European Community, Japanese and Nordic proposals for the current Uruguay round of GATT to include liberalisation of the services sector.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

With services accounting for a growing proportion of world trade, the proposals being considered in the GATT Uruguay round for a multilateral agreement on trade in services, stand to benefit all participants, developed and developing countries alike. The United Kingdom and its European Community partners are working for an agreement with the widest possible participation, and which achieves the greatest liberalisation. It is recognised that the commitments expected of developing countries will need to take account of development of their service sectors, and this is reflected in the draft agreement recently tabled by the EC.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sexual Offences

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive how many gay and/or bisexual men in England and Wales were convicted of importuning in public places, contrary to section 32 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956;

(2) in each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive how many men were convicted for the offences of gross indecency and indecency between males in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1989 will not be available until the autumn.

Males convicted of specified sexual offences 1980 to 1988 England and Wales

Offence	Soliciting or importuning by a man (Section 32 of Sexual Offences Act 1956)	Indecency between males
1980	1,184	1,603
1981	878	1,420
1982	783	1,145
1983	719	1,232
1984	399	821
1985	452	730
1986	452	714
1987	500	951
1988	545	1,333

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men in England and Wales were convicted of the offences of procuring or attempting to procure the commission of acts of buggery and gross indecency in each of the years 1980 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1989 will not be available until the autumn.

Male defendants convicted of procuration of males 1980 to 1988 England and Wales

	Procuration of males
1980	143
1981	121
1982	140
1983	125
1984	194
1985	350
1986	193
1987	246
1988	332

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance his Department issues to police forces on what constitutes an immoral purpose for the purposes of prosecution for importuning in a public place for immoral purposes;

(2) what guidance his Department issues to police forces as to those acts which might be construed as representing gross indecency.

Mr. John Patten: None. The law has been interpreted by the courts. If necessary the police can turn to the Crown prosecution service for advice.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues to police forces on criteria to be employed when deciding between prosecution for the offences of indecency between men and gross indecency; and what is his Department's definition of indecency between males as used in its sexual offences statistics.

Mr. John Patten: None. Charges brought under section 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 are for acts of gross indecency between men. There is no lesser offence of indecency as opposed to gross indecency.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the steps which Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1979 to promote crime prevention.

Mr. Waddington: The Government's strong belief in the potential for the whole community to contribute to crime prevention is reflected in the range of measures we have taken which include the following:

(i) Publication in 1984 and in 1990 of circulars to local authorities and a variety of relevant agencies, recommending the development of locally based crime prevention schemes through partnership between local authority departments, the police and commercial and voluntary interests.

(ii) A series of national publicity campaigns using TV and press advertising. The most recent, which is not yet complete, features the latest edition of the handbook of crime prevention advice entitled "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". Over 3 million copies of this handbook have been distributed.

(iii) The establishment of Crime Concern, an independent body (funded initially by the Home Office) which seeks to encourage and facilitate local crime prevention activity, and to draw the business sector into crime prevention.

(iv) The safer cities programme. Projects have been set up in 16 inner-city areas with the objectives of reducing crime, lessening the fear of crime and creating conditions in which economic enterprise and community life can flourish.

(v) The establishment of the standing conference on crime prevention, giving the opportunity for a wide range of groups and agencies to discuss ideas on crime prevention.

(vi) Enhancement of the training offered to the police service by the Home Office crime prevention centre, including specialist areas such as architectural liaison and designing out crime.

(vii) A seminar in 1986, chaired by the Prime Minister, brought together representatives from the private sector, the unions, the police and central and local government to discuss action on crime prevention. This event led to the setting up of the ministerial group on crime prevention, through which Ministers from 13 Government Departments co-ordinate an interdepartmental approach to crime prevention.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Trinidad and Tobago, (b) Guyana, (c) Barbados and (d) Jamaica have (i) been admitted and (ii) been refused admittance and removed during each of the first five months of the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table:

Citizens of Trinidad and Tobago, Guyana, Barbados and Jamaica admitted to, and refused leave to enter and removed from, the United Kingdom

	1990 January	February	March	April	May
Trinidad and Tobago
Total admitted[1]	1,200	700	1,400	1,400	1,400

[1] Provisional figures.

Birmingham Prison

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a month-by-month breakdown of the number of attempted suicides by inmates in Birmingham prison during the first six months of 1990.

Mr. Mellor: The number of inmates who were recorded as having attempted suicide at Birmingham prison in each of the first six months of 1990 is as follows:

	Number
January	1
February	1
March	2
April	2
May	9
June	4
Total	19

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are still remanded in custody awaiting trial following the incidents in Trafalgar square on 31 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Students (Deportation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's current policy and practice on enforcing deportation decisions against students who have been found to be working in breach of their conditions of entry; what definition is used of student; and whether he will list the colleges which he would not recognise as providing courses of study for overseas students acceptable under the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any overseas student who wishes to work during his free time or vacations may do so by obtaining the requisite permission from the Department of Employment. Each case in which a student is found working without such permission is considered on its individual merits: as required by the immigration rules, the case for deportation is considered in the light of all known relevant factors. For this purpose a student is a person who at the time meets the requirements of the immigration rules for the grant of leave to enter or remain as a student. The Immigration and Nationality Department keeps records of information which has come to light about individual colleges. In dealing with individual applications from students, account is taken of any material which is available to the Department about the circumstances of, and courses offered by, the colleges concerned. Caseworkers are made aware of what information is available by means of internal notices which are part of staff instructions and are not published.

Criminal Records Office

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to (a) receive the original notes and (b) identify the authors of criminal records office file no. 10368/74.

Mr. John Patten: These are among the matters which are being considered by the Devon and Cornwall constabulary, whose report my right hon. and learned Friend will consider very carefully in due course.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to meet representatives from the Football League to discuss the work of the Football Licensing Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans at present. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has had such a meeting and has recently written to the chief executive of the Football League on this subject.

Firearms

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the chairman of the firearms consultative committee to discuss firearms certification procedures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to meet the chairman of the firearms consultative committee. It is for the committee to keep under review the working of the administration of the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988 and to make to my right hon. and learned Friend such recommendations as the committee may from time to time think necessary for the improvement of that working.

Bombing Cases

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has discussed the Guildford and Woolwich or the Maguire cases with (a) the Lord Chief Justice or (b) the Master of the Rolls.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the nine Surrey police officers who were in Birmingham at the time of the pub bombings have been identified.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to questions from the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 30 October 1989 at columns 39-40. It is not known whether any Surrey officers were in Birmingham at the time of the pub bombings, although I understand that a team of nine Surrey officers was in the west midlands area at the time. This is among the matters relating to the case of the Birmingham pub bombings which are currently under investigation by the Devon and Cornwall constabulary on behalf of the chief constable of the West Midlands police.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the new inquiry undertaken by the Devon and Cornwall police into the Birmingham Six to be completed.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible at this stage to say when the Devon and Cornwall constabulary will be able to report on the results of its inquiries, but I know that the police are fully aware of the need to complete those inquiries as quickly and as thoroughly as possible.

Television Licences

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will meet pensioners' representatives to discuss free television licences for all pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Such a meeting would serve no strong purpose. Our policy is clear and well known to the hon. Member. The licence fee is not a proper instrument of social policy, and we have no plans to change the present concessionary arrangements. Giving free licences to all pensioners would cost £435 million a year, and would necessitate increasing the cost of the licence to everyone else to well over £100.

Missing Persons Register

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to establish a national computerised missing persons register; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to establish a national computerised missing persons register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have been considering the establishment of such a register for some time now. We have been examining two possible options and are now seeking the views of the Association of Chief Police Officers before reaching a conclusion as to the better method.

Criminal Damage

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the cost of vandalism or criminal damage in England in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available.

Prison Officers, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each of the London prisons the number of applications for transfer from officers at those prisons to other prisons in England and Wales for each of the last three years; and what is the number of applications that have been granted;

(2) if he will list the present number of transfer applications that have been submitted by officers serving at each of the London prisons for transfers to another prison in England and Wales; and what is the longest period of time such an application has been waiting for a decision to be made.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the following table.

Establishment	Number of transfer requests			Numbers transferred[1]			Earliest outstanding request
	1988	1989	1990	1988	1989	1990

[1] Includes officers requesting transfer during previous years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to help prison officers transferred from other establishments into London prisons with accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers who are transferred to London prisons on permanent compulsory transfer terms are entitled to reimbursement of the expenses incurred in moving home. They are eligible to receive, for example, travel and subsistence allowances, removal expenses, estate agents' and solicitors' fees, a transfer grant or a miscellaneous expenses grant and in certain circumstances the interest charges on bridging loans.

Drugs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug finds there have been in each British prison establishment in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Waddington: The following relates to England and Wales. Responsibility for prison establishments in Scotland rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. New instructions for the reporting by prison establishments of finds of illicit drugs and related implements took effect on 1 July 1984. Available information about numbers of finds reported since that time is shown in the table. The information for 1984 and 1985 relates to both substances and implements. The figures for subsequent years relate to substances only.

[2] To 31 May.

New Prison Fazakerley

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will defer any steps towards building a new prison at Fazakerley near Liverpool until the results of a public inquiry are known;

(2) what plans he has to hold a public inquiry into the proposed new prison at Fazakerley, near Liverpool.

Mr. Mellor: The construction of a new prison at Fazakerley will not proceed until the objections raised by Liverpool city council have been dealt with. Assuming that it is not possible to resolve the differences between the Home Office and the city council, the matter will be referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, who will decide whether it is desirable to hold a non-statutory public local inquiry.

Prison Staff

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whow many assaults on prison officers occurred in each prison establishment in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information for 1988 is given in the table "Charges of assault on which prisoners were found guilty on adjudication in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales in 1988: by establishment and type of assault", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. For these years published annual statistics of offences punished at each establishment give the information on gross personal violence to an officer but that on assaults does not distinguish between assaults on officers and assaults on others (table 9.9 to 9.12 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1987" (Cm. 547), copies of which are in the Library). However, the information requested is summarised by type of establishment (tables 9.13 to 9.15 of the 1987 volume).

Ticket Touts

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to seek to make the touting of tickets illegal.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to make ticket touting generally illegal. The activities of ticket touts are regarded by most of us as offensive and disreputable, but they are not of such a nature as would justify legal prohibition. The tout will have paid the standard price for his tickets, so the promoter will not have lost, and his customers will generally be aware that they are paying above the ticket's face value and are willing to do so to watch the event in question. Most of the more objectionable aspects of ticket touting are already covered by the criminal law and promoters of events can take their own steps to deter touting; for example the organisers of the Ryder cup, by attaching conditions to tickets were able to use the force of the criminal and civil law to make ticket touting very difficult.

We are considering separately Lord Justice Taylor's recommendations to meet the specific problem of ticket touting at football matches.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COCOM

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the changes in export trade opportunities arising from the agreement at the Co-ordinating Committee on Multilateral Export Controls (COCOM) meeting in Paris on 6 and 7 June.

Mr. Redwood: An outline of the changes agreed is given in a press briefing paper, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The most significant export trade opportunities for industry are likely to arise from changes in the three priority sectors of computers, telecommunications and machine tools, although further opportunities are presented in other areas.

The changes to the controls on computer equipment will be reflected in relaxations on many other types of computer-controlled equipment. It should be noted that some of the relaxations on telecommunications equipment apply only to Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, plus the German Democratic Republic which benefits from a special new licensing regime.

The 30 whole-item deletions and reduced levels of control in about 25 more items, will provide further opportunities across a wide range of goods and technologies. Details on many of these are currently being worked out by COCOM.

There will be an open general export licence for 28 of the 30 deleted items which came into effect on 1 July. The other changes will be brought into effect by means of further amendments to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989.

Further publicity will be given to these changes when amendments to the order are issued. The Department's "Security Export Control" guidance booklet will also be reissued as soon as possible and will reflect the deletions of or changes to some 70 items, out of 126, including others currently subject to COCOM's regular review process.

My technical staff in the Export Control Organisation are available to answer questions from industry about these changes.

Import Restrictions

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, how many complaints were made to the Commission (a) by and (b) against the United Kingdom Government during 1989 alleging illegal or unjustified restriction of imports; and if he will indicate the percentage of complaints upheld in each case.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 May 1990]: The Government made 11 complaints against practices in other member states in 1989. The Commission is either still considering those complaints or is pursuing them with the member states concerned.

My Department does not hold information on complaints made to the Commission against the Government; such complaints come to our notice only if and when the Commission decides to pursue them formally. The Commission records annually in its report to the European Parliament on the control of the application of Community law, figures for infringement proceedings against member states. I understand that the figures for 1989 are not yet available but will appear shortly in the Commission's seventh report. This will be published in the Official Journal, copies of which are available in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foodstuffs (Chemical Residues)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy as regards the control of pesticide residues in foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government operate a rigorous statutory registration procedure, backed up by continuous monitoring to ensure that any pesticide residues in foodstuffs are at entirely safe levels.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken by his Department to reduce the amount of (a) organophosphates, (b) methyl bromide and (c) ethylene bisdithiocarbamate present in foodstuffs (i) domestically produced and (ii) imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Maximum residue limits have been set for all these substances under the Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Food) Regulations 1988, which apply equally to imported and to home-grown produce.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of the incidence of the fungicides dithane, manzate, mancozeb and dinoseb in foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Dithane and manzate contain ingredients such as mancozeb which belong to the group of fungicides known as ethylene bisdithiocarbamates (EBDCs) which are under review by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. The committee published an interim report in January; it concluded that intakes of EBDC and their breakdown products were at safe levels for all age groups and extreme consumers.

Dinoseb was reviewed by the committee in 1987, as a result of which all approvals for its marketing and use have been revoked.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of the safety in foodstuffs of the fungicides captan, benomyl and chlorothalonil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: All these substances are currently under review by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on achieving common European residue levels for chemical residues in foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The European Community has partially harmonised standards for maximum pesticide residue levels and for contaminants which may arise from materials and articles in contact with food, and is considering further harmonisation in these areas.

The Community will be setting maximum limits for veterinary medicines in foodstuffs of animal origin following the adoption of a framework directive by the Agricultural Council in June.

The European Commission has announced its intention of bringing forward proposals for legislation to establish Community rules on chemical contaminants in food not already covered by other Community legislation.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to reduce the levels of chemical residues in foodstuffs entering the United Kingdom from (a) European Community countries and (b) third-world countries.

Mr. Maclean: Chemical residues in foodstuffs, both imported and home grown, are continuously monitored to ensure high standards of safety for consumers.

Food Labelling

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of foods which contain mechanically recovered meat being labelled as such.

Mr. Maclean: I do not keep the information that my hon. Friend requests.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to implement the European Community directive on nutrition labelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This directive received its second reading in the European Parliament on 12 June and following consideration of the Parliament's amendments by the European Commission should shortly be presented to the Council of Ministers for adoption. Full implementation will not take place until three years after notification of the directive to member states and regulations will be introduced to that effect. I am however encouraging manufacturers and retailers to adopt the main provision of the directive.

Aflatoxin

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in adopting an EC policy of aflatoxin limits in crops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no proposals for Community limits on aflatoxins in crops; there are however limits which already apply in the case of feedingstuffs under Council directive 74/63/EEC controlling undesirable substances and products in animal nutrition. In addition, the Commission has announced its intention to bring forward proposals shortly for framework legislation on contaminants in foodstuffs which would enable limits to be set for aflatoxins in food for human consumption in due course. We shall expect the public health aspects of any proposals in this area to be based on consultation of the EC's scientific committee for food.

ENERGY

Oil Rigs

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to make it compulsory for all safety officers working offshore on oil rigs to be given suitable training in offshore safety methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Existing statutory requirements under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971 place duties on employers and owners of offshore installations to provide such training as is necessary to ensure the health and safety at work of their employees, and to ensure that only competent persons are made responsible for the control and safety of operations.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the proportion of the cost of a unit of electricity which is accounted for by the cost of the fuel used in generation.

Mr. Baldry: The Electricity Council's annual report and accounts for 1988-89 showed that fuel costs represented about 41 per cent. of the average unit price of electricity.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has in regard to the proposals put to the European Parliament by Mr. Enrico Ferri for European legislation to require energy industries to take out full insurance against damage caused to the environment by their operations.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has received no information about Mr. Enrico Ferri's proposals.

European Energy Year

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the Government's policy on the proposal put forward by the European Community Energy Commissioners to declare 1992 European energy year.

Mr. Wakeham: Only the European Commission has the right to initiate formal proposals to the Council. We are unaware of any such formal proposal in relation to a declaration for 1992.

DEFENCE

Hawk Trainer Aircraft

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet replied to the letters dated 16 June 1989 and 8 August 1989 from J. B. Moffatt, assistant secretary of the Celtic League, concerning Royal Air Force Hawk trainer aircraft operating over Wales and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Copies of both letters have now been traced and will be answered as soon as possible.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the Hawk trainer aircraft currently based in Wales have been subjected to the turbine fan modification ordered some years ago.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no problems outstanding on the Hawk engine.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the Hawk trainer aircraft currently based in Wales have now been re-sparred.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no programme to re-spar the Hawk trainer. Under the programme to re-wing the Hawk, new wings will be fitted as the existing wings reach the end of their fatigue life. Nine of the 85 aircraft based in Wales have been so modified.

St. David's Airfield, Pembrokeshire

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations have been received by his Department on the proposed over-the-horizon radar station near St. David's.

Mr. Alan Clark: In addition to questions tabled in this House and in another place. I have received representations from many right hon. and hon. Members and from members of the public.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those companies which were invited to tender for the contract to carry out any environmental impact assessment of his Department's proposals to install an over-the-horizon radar system at St. David's and Cricklade.

Mr. Alan Clark: In view of the particular circumstances of our proposal to install an over-the-horizon radar transmitter at St. David's airfield and the need to complete the environmental impact assessment by late summer, only one company—W. S. Atkins of Epsom Surrey—was invited to tender for the contract to carry out the environmental impact assessment. At Blakehill, the proposed over-the-horizon radar receiver site, we are not yet in a position to proceed with the environmental impact assessment. This will, however, be by competitive tender.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the effect of the proposed over-the-horizon radar on birds and animal life in the St. David's area of Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have received no representations concerning the effect of the proposed over-the-horizon radar on birds and animal life in the St. David's area of Pembrokeshire. But my Department has had initial discussions with the Pembrokeshire Coast national park authority about this and the matter will be fully addressed in the environmental impact assessment.

Excalibur Exercises

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to hold exercises in the Excalibur series in the United Kingdom in the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exercise Excalibur VII is planned to take place in the United Kingdom on 20 July 1990.

Belize

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on how many incursions by (a) Guatemalan military personnel and (b) other Guatemalans into Belize there have been this year; and what was the response in each case.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any incursions by Guatemalan military personnel. A group of Guatemalan civilians established an illegal settlement in March in Belizean territory at Santiago Jalacte close to the border with Guatemala.

The Belize authorities gave the Guatemalans three months' notice to leave so that they could harvest their crops before departure. But we understand that the settlement was abandoned in May following incidents involving local Belizeans.

NATO Meeting, London

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he intends to introduce to the NATO meeting in London on 5 and 6 July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has discussed a wide range of issues concerning European security with colleagues at the NATO summit meeting.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which states currently possess a nuclear weapon capability that could pose a threat to the United Kingdom; which states currently possess a nuclear weapon capability that could not pose a threat to the United Kingdom; and which states are currently seeking to acquire a nuclear weapon capability that could pose a threat to the United Kingdom;

(2) under what circumstances it is judged that the possession of nuclear weapons by another state poses a threat to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The possession of nuclear weapons combined with effective means of delivery by any state poses a potential threat to the United Kingdom, but of course account has to be taken of intention as well as capability. The assessment the hon. Member requests of particular nuclear capabilities is classified. In general terms the United Kingdom attaches great importance to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty as a means of preventing nuclear proliferation.

Defence Industry

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clackmannan of 2 July, on what criteria he decides whether the timing of discussions with the defence industry is commercially confidential.

Mr. Alan Clark: The commercial-in-confidence caveat is applied to any information relating to a commercial undertaking's, processes or affairs which may be of commercial value to its competitors or to speculators. Disclosure of such information would damage the relationship of trust that must exist between commercial undertakings and the Government.
